CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION.

---

Mr. SPRINGER. The State laws regulate this. It ought to be left to the States.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment proposed by Mr. BRYAN, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 134.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I wish to offer an amendment to the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on page 3 the word "one-eighth" and insert "one-half."

Mr. SPRINGER. That would be the law as it is now.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso: "And provided further, That the national banks shall have no power to contract the circulation."

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, we are told by gentlemen here on the floor that the national banks at the present day have a capital stock on which they can take out money to the amount of over $600,000,000, and that they have now only $208,000,000 out. Now, we put a provision in this bill by which they may take the money out of the Treasury to the full amount of the face value of the bonds deposited with the Treasury. If they get this additional amount it is to the interest of the people of the country that they shall not be allowed to contract the currency at will. What the people are suffering from to-day is a scarcity of currency.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under that amendment a bank could not even retire from business.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. STONE of Kentucky, there were—ayes 14, noes 133.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TATE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 2 of the amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN, strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read: "any bank with a capital of not less than $10,000," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment is not in order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HAUGEN, it was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. The next committee amendment is to strike out section 4.

The section proposed to be struck out was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter no national bank notes of a less denomination than $10 shall be issued, and as rapidly as such notes of denominations less than $10 shall be received into the Treasury, otherwise than for redemption and retirement, they shall be canceled, and an equal amount of notes of like character, but in denominations of $10 and multiples thereof, shall be issued in their places. All silver certificates now outstanding, in denominations larger than $10, shall, when received into the Treasury of the United States, be retired and canceled, and silver certificates in denominations less than $10 shall be issued in their stead.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I object. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, while this amendment is reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, I am opposed to it, and hope that it will be voted down.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment as adopted by the Committee on Banking and Currency, whereby the provision of the original bill is changed in the matter of the limit of national bank notes is fixed at $10 as the lowest and silver certificates of $5 as the highest, will not prevail. It was recommended in the recent message of the President, and has met the approval of the country generally.

With the retirement of the greenbacks and Treasury notes, which we hope to accomplish by the provisions of this bill when it shall have been amended, will pass away one of the chief perils to our gold reserve, leaving only the silver notes to be provided for by Government. The limitations provided for give those notes a useful place in our currency and make them less available to be used in the payment of duties upon imports. Certainly those of you who are favorable to silver should favor this provision. It is true that we put it in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to do this in our amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, but that has not yet become a law. I therefore ask you to vote against the amendment and to restore the clause to the bill.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, if we strike out this section to compel national banks to retire all notes under $10, we shall take away from the national banks more than one-third of their circulation. Cheap money to the people depends upon its being issued without the use of United States bonds and upon its being issued by the banks and issued without cost. The more banks you have competing to issue paper money and the cheaper you make the issuing of it, the cheaper the people will get their money in rates of interest. If you can reduce the rate of interest on loans and discounts 1 per cent you will reduce the rate of interest on mortgages 1 per cent, for the rates of interest on mortgages always follow the rates of loans and discounts. By striking out this section you will cut off more than a third of the circulation of the banks and make interest higher. Therefore, if you want to make money more expensive to the people, vote to strike this section out; but if you want to make it cheaper, let it stand; and let any five men in the country that can combine together and who have $25,000 (as provided by the amendment you have just put in) issue all the money they can under the law, but make it good money, and compel them to keep a gold and silver cash reserve to make it good. If you vote to strike out this section, you vote not for cheap money, but for dear money.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of my colleague from New York [Mr. COOMBS] to the fact that we have already adopted an amendment by which the retirement of the United States legal-tender notes is limited by the increase in circulation of the national banks. If by refusing to adopt the amendment which is now pending we curtail the circulation of the national banks by not permitting them to issue small bills, the result may be that their circulation, instead of increasing, will be decreased during the next few years—

Mr. WALKER. One-third.

Mr. WARNER. Therefore if this amendment is not adopted after we have adopted the other one, the result might be to prevent for years to come the retiring of the United States legal-tender notes.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the committee will prevail. The national bank notes of the denomination of $1 now out are $355,653. The national bank notes of the denomination of $2 are $173,182. The national bank notes of the denomination of $5 are $63,900,656. Making a total of $63,829,491.

Now, it appears that about $63,000,000 of the national bank notes are under the denomination of $10, and if this amendment does not prevail, and this section is not stricken out, it will result in taking from the national banks $63,000,000 of the money that serves the convenience of the people and the profit of the banks, and I am not aware of any demand coming from the national banks or from anybody else for such a measure. I hope, therefore, that the action of the committee in this matter will be sustained by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in this bill for the perpetuation of old errors instead of their confession there was but one clause that looked to the widening of the basis of the money of this country, there was but one clause that looks to the wider recognition of silver as money, and it is now proposed that that clause shall be stricken out.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, some time ago, in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I think, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, we omitted a proviso in regard to engraving and printing which compelled him to reissue notes that were reprinted in the same denominations as before, and gave him the liberty to change them into larger denominations.

It was claimed that under this provision of law the silver certificates of larger denominations would be converted into certificates of small denominations, and instead of being used in the great cities would go out into the country districts. But it seems by that provision of law we were simply making room for these national bank notes of small denominations instead of the silver certificates.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What motion is now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out section 4.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. That was stricken out in our committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee could not strike it out, but could only recommend that it be stricken out by the House.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Then the question is now whether that section shall be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having recommended this amendment, to strike out the fourth section, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. Is this amendment subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out and insert would be in order.

Mr. HARTMAN. I make that motion. I move to strike out the fourth section and insert in lieu thereof the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That from and after the passage of this act all holders of silver bullion to the amount of $100 or more, of standard weight and fineness, shall be entitled to have the same coined at the mint of the United States into silver dollars of the weight and fineness provided for in the second section of this act.

That the silver dollar provided for in this act shall consist of 412½ grains of standard silver; said dollars to be a legal tender for all debts, dues, and demands, both public and private.

That the holder of the silver dollars herein provided for shall be entitled to deposit the same and to receive silver certificates in the manner now provided by law for the standard silver dollars.

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1896, one-half of all import duties shall be paid in gold and one-half thereof in silver: Provided, That all duties on all imports hereafter brought into the United States from countries whose governments refuse to open their mints to the free coinage of gold and silver without discrimination against either shall be double the duty on like articles coming from countries that coin gold and silver freely.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make a point of order on that amendment. In the first place it is not germane to the bill, and, in the second place, it is not germane to the pending section.

Mr. HARTMAN. I hope the gentleman will reserve his point of order for a few moments that I may be heard on this proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] desires to be heard briefly, and I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are some new features contained in the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk. I ask especial attention to the feature contained in the last provision of the amendment. The proposition is that hereafter all import duties shall be paid in the proportions of 50 per cent of gold and 50 per cent of silver. By a provision of this kind gentlemen here who believe in the free coinage of silver with the aid of other nations have an opportunity to force other nations to adopt this principle. The amendment proposes that all articles imported into this country from any nation whose government refuses to open its mints to the free coinage of silver shall pay 100 per cent more duty than that imposed on similar importations from countries that coin silver freely.

I repeat that this amendment affords an opportunity to gentlemen who have been declaring themselves in favor of the free coinage of silver, provided they could secure the concurrence and assistance of other nations, to force those nations to cooperate in this policy. If we should put into our legislation such a provision as this how long do gentlemen believe it would be before Great Britain would be at our feet on this question? She can not afford to give up the great market which the United States furnishes her for the British goods which we import. Rather than pay this additional duty of 100 per cent as compared with nations which authorize the free coinage of silver she will be willing to throw open her mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

One word further before I take my seat. I do not pretend on this question to be a sage; yet I do think that I certainly can not be a much greater failure as a prophet than gentlemen who have come here and assumed to know all about this question. We have been told here, for instance, by gentlemen from New York, who claim to be national bankers and to know all about these questions, that just so soon as we should repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law we were going to have prosperity. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HENDRIX] was one of those prophets. I ask him why that prosperity did not come.

Furthermore, the same men who told us that prosperity would come from that step told us we would have prosperity from the enactment of the Wilson tariff bill. And prosperity has not come from that source yet. Certainly by undertaking, as this amendment proposes, to compel England, Germany, and the other gold standard nations to come upon a free-coinage basis we can not make any greater mistake than gentlemen who have dragged us into the condition in which we now find ourselves.

I append to my remarks a very brief address from industrial organizations representing 3,000,000 people.

To the members of organized labor and all other producers and toilers throughout the United States:

In view of the general distress now prevailing throughout our country, which has existed for so many years, and which will continue until remedial legislation is enacted, and all this occurring, too, at a time when our granaries are full to repletion, and when, in the natural order of things, our producers and toilers should be enjoying to the full the fruit of their hard and conscientious labors, it seems to us that the time has come for united action on the part of those who create the wealth of the country.

The respective demands and platforms of principles of our several organizations set forth our opinions as to the causes that have brought about this condition of things. Inasmuch as the leading representatives and friends of all our organizations have placed one of the causes of the tribulations of our beloved Republic to the departure of our Government from the wise bimetallic financial policy of Washington, Jefferson, and Hamilton, and the substitution therefor of the present monometallic policy recommended by European money owners and advocated by their American allies, we, the undersigned officers of industrial, agricultural, and commercial organizations, have thought it best, at this particular time, to submit for your careful consideration a synopsis of the legislation respecting the precious metals enacted in this country since the foundation of this Government, that you may judge for yourselves as to what portion of such legislation was enacted in the interest of the producing and what in the interest of the non-producing classes, and as to whether or not the shrewd manipulators of our finances foresaw that the result of their work would be to largely help in the subjugation of the people.

Whatever the object, certain it is that before the demonetization of silver and the enactment of other financial legislation, which our organizations condemn, 3,800 bushels of wheat or 35,000 pounds of cotton was the annual pay for our Congressmen and Senators, while to-day 10,000 bushels of wheat or 100,000 pounds of cotton barely suffice; before demonetization 35,000 bushels of wheat or 360,000 pounds of cotton per year would have paid the salary of the President; to-day he receives the equivalent of 100,000 bushels of wheat or 1,000,000 pounds of cotton; and in like proportion is it with all other fixed salaries and incomes.

Was such legislation just? Was it honest? Does it not necessarily follow that the demonetization of the food-producing sections of the country, through failure to procure reasonable prices for their products, causes the manufacturing sections to accumulate excessive stocks, and in consequence of a poor market hundreds of thousands of operatives are necessarily thrown out of employment, thus robbing them of the power, even at the low prices, to purchase the necessities of life?

Again, is it not obvious to everyone that the striking down of one-half of the world's volume of money makes the remaining half a comparatively easy matter for capitalists to control and manipulate, and the toilers, to obtain money for the purchase of their food supplies, are placed entirely at the mercy of the foreign and American money sharks, who, by contracting the currency, can force a panic or famine in money at their supreme will?

Would they be guilty of such a crime? We only say in reply, look at our present helpless condition. Does it not seem to you, in the light of the facts here given, that where in the midst of plenty there is widespread suffering and unhappiness there is considerable merit in the refrain from Wall street: "Dig on, ye toilers, dig; the legislative button that we press will do the rest."

PRECIOUS-METAL LEGISLATION.

The first coinage law enacted under the Constitution as recommended by Hamilton, concurred in by Jefferson, and approved by Washington, provided for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver; the silver dollar containing 371 grains of pure metal.

In 1837 the mint laws were revised and a standard for both gold and silver was made nine-tenths fine—that is, nine-tenths pure metal and one part alloy; the number of pure silver grains to the dollar remaining unaltered, viz, 371 grains.

This law established our present ratio of 16 to 1.

In August, 1865, the public debt which grew out of the war reached its highest point, the debt, less cash in the Treasury, being $2,758,431,000. This debt was not payable in gold. No bonds or other governmental obligations were ever made specifically payable in gold. The interest on the bonds was made payable in coin, the greater portion of the principal of the original bonds in lawful money and of the refunding bonds in coin—not gold coin, but coin of either gold or silver.

In 1869 the principal of the bonded debt was also made payable in coin. In 1870 the standard of coin was by the refunding act nominated in the bond; that is to say, all of the obligations of the United States were then declared payable in either gold or silver, of the present ratio, at the option, not of the bondholders, but of the people of the United States.

All of the acts passed since the close of the civil war, it will be observed, were in the interest of the bondholders and against that of the producers and toilers.

But it remained for the year 1873 to witness the crowning blow of all. In that year an innocent-appearing bill entitled "An act revising the laws relative to the Mint, assay offices, and coinage of the United States" was successfully smuggled through Congress.

That bill purposely omitted from the list of coins to be minted the silver dollar.

By that clandestine act, of which the people and the people's representatives were ignorant, and the subsequent act of 1874, adopting the Revised Statutes, silver was demonetized and the world's volume of ultimate redemption money was reduced from about seven billions to three and one-half billions.

In 1873, after the discovery of the crime of 1873, Congress passed what is known as the "Bland bill." This bill was vetoed by President Hayes (John Sherman being Secretary of Treasury), and Congress passed the bill over the veto. The act added to our volume of money over $70,000,000 standard silver dollars.

In 1890 what is known as the "Sherman Act" was passed as a substitute for the "Bland Act" of 1878. This law further increased our volume of money over $150,000,000.

Under the Bland and Sherman laws over $500,000,000, or about $9 per capita, were added to our volume of money. As all reflecting men are agreed that the present distress is due to a scarcity of money, we must leave it to the imagination as to what would now be our condition if the gold-standard men had had their way, and our present insufficient volume of money was $500,000,000 less.

The Sherman bill was adding over $50,000,000 a year to the money of the country, when in 1893 its repeal was imperiously demanded by European financiers through their American allies, and although the people's representatives made one of the grandest efforts ever witnessed in behalf of the producers and toilers of our country, yet the power of the financial institutions of Europe was so great that our people were compelled to submit to temporary defeat.

Now the question is, what do the tens of millions of victims in this country to the diabolical gold standard policy of Lombard and Wall streets propose doing about it? Submit to subjugation or demand in no uncertain tones the immediate restoration of silver as standard money? No, they will no longer submit to such injustice! And, therefore, we earnestly recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"We demand of the present Congress the immediate return to the money of the Constitution as established by our fathers by restoring the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1, the coins of both metals to be equally full legal tender for all debts, public and private, as before the fraudulent demonetization of silver in 1873.

"We also condemn the increase of the national debt in time of peace, and the use of interest-bearing bonds at any time."

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order on this amendment. He will state his point.

Mr. SPRINGER. The amendment is not germane to the bill or to the amendment. This section is a proposition simply in regard to changing the denominations of the national bank notes and the silver certificates.

Mr. HARTMAN. May I be heard on the point of order for a moment? In view of the great disorder that seems to prevail at present in the business affairs of the Government, I submit that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had better waive his point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division of the question on the motion to strike out. The section is divisible; and I ask that the question be taken first on striking out the first seven lines—

Mr. WALKER. I hope the gentleman will not oppose his own bill, and get on still another side of this question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the gentleman hear what I said? I asked for a division of the question, so that we might first vote on striking out the first seven lines of the section down to the word "places."

Mr. WALKER. I understand the gentleman wants this stricken out, but is advising people not to vote with him. I hope he will not embarrass the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to demand a division of the question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury before the Committee on Appropriations on January 21, 1895, we were told that there are about $750,000,000 in the hands of the people in the shape of notes of $20 and less in denomination and silver dollars and fractional coin. By coining the $180,000,000 in coinage value of silver in the Treasury we would have about $600,000,000 in round numbers in silver and silver certificates, or $150,000,000 less than the amount of change the people need in their ordinary business. Therefore, it seems to me, that we ought not to strike the provision out of the bill, because we can make the silver bullion of this value and a present asset to the Government now, when we need revenue, by the coining of four or five millions of dollars a month, and thereby substitute small silver certificates for national bank notes, Treasury notes, and legal-tender notes, and have all our silver in circulation, at the same time putting us in a better condition about other matters.

It seems to me that all that is necessary in the present condition of affairs is to give to the State banks the right to issue currency by which there will be a local supply to meet the local demand, and give to the Secretary of the Treasury power to tide over the deficiency in the revenues by issuing certificates of indebtedness, and giving to silver the entire field of the small notes required by the people in the daily transaction of their business. If that is done, this will answer all present demands and will render no further legislation necessary.

Without criticising anyone and anxious to aid in enacting necessary legislation, I repeat that the present condition can be met, in my judgment, by the amendment I hope to have opportunity to offer, by which the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion and according to the necessities of the Treasury, can use (1) the silver bullion now lying idle in the Treasury and (2) such bonds as he has now the power to issue, or short bonds redeemable at the option of the Government as soon as the surplus is abundantly sufficient. And the currency question will not be of danger if our revenues are ample, the power granted the Government sufficient, the quantity of small notes equal to the ordinary demands of the daily business of the people, and regulated in part by the law of demand and supply in each community.

All other questions can await future legislation, when there is more time to consider what further ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section. The Clerk will read the first part of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter no national bank notes of a less denomination than $10 shall be issued, and as rapidly as such notes of denominations less than $10 shall be received into the Treasury, otherwise than for redemption and retirement, they shall be canceled, and an equal amount of notes of like character, but in denominations of $10 and multiples thereof, shall be issued in their places.

The motion to strike out was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the remaining clause of the section which it is proposed to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

All silver certificates now outstanding, in denominations larger than $10, shall, when received into the Treasury of the United States, be retired and canceled, and silver certificates in denominations less than $10 shall be issued in their stead.

The motion to strike out was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is to strike out section 5, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1895, all duties on imports shall be paid in gold coin only, and all taxes, debts, and demands, other than duties on imports accruing or becoming due to the United States shall be paid in gold and silver coin, Treasury notes, United States notes, silver certificates, or notes of national banks.

[Mr. STOCKDALE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. STOCKDALE. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, in approaching the discussion of this question, fraught as it is with so many possibilities of danger, with so much injustice, with so much continued depression and misery of the people, I do so with a renewed sense of my responsibilities as a Representative. The passage of this measure would be but the culmination of the fight that began thirty years ago on the part of the few (the consolidated money classes) against the great debt-paying classes. The question now is, shall the dominant party on this floor, to which I belong, which has heretofore always been the friend of the many against the few, which has always been the implacable enemy of monopolies and concentration of power, turn its back upon all the principles of the Democratic party and embrace Federalism, and aid in the passage of this most obnoxious and dangerous measure? But it is said this is the plan the Administration offers for relief, and therefore all Democrats should give it their support. I regret that the Administration, which was supposed to be Democratic, did not submit something on Democratic lines to which I could have given my support and cooperation.

But, Mr. Chairman, if this Administration had presented us with a measure of relief which had in any sense complied with the platform declarations of our party upon which the President was elected, there is no true Democrat who would not have given it his hearty support. Upon the financial question the Democratic convention said:

I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOLD AND SILVER.

SEC. 7. We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman Act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift fraught with possibilities of danger in the future which shall make all of its supporters, as well as its author, anxious for its speedy repeal. We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage, but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, or be adjusted through international agreement or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market and in the payment of debts; and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of the farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

SEC. 8. We recommend that the prohibitory 10 per cent tax on State bank issues be repealed.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, this declared for the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and the coinage of both without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage. It also declared in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law, and not for the simple repeal of the "purchasing clause," leaving all the other part of the law in full force and effect. It also recommended that the prohibitory 10 per cent tax on State bank issues be repealed.

The President has never recommended the passage of any law along these lines for the relief of our embarrassed condition; if he had, no man would have done more, according to his ability, than I to have aided in this act of observing our promises and obligations to the people.

In lieu of this, the President sends a message to Congress to destroy bimetalism and to force the country to gold monometallism. Upon the recommendation of this message, which is in violent opposition to both the spirit and letter of the Democratic platform, and which I characterize as an act of bad faith with the people, the Committee on Banking and Currency (or a majority of it) has reported the bill that is now before this House for consideration. What is this proposition? It is one in the interest of the consolidated money power and against the people. It is one to put this country permanently on a gold basis, and to make the gold dollar the unit of value, and to prevent silver from ever becoming one of the moneys of ultimate redemption in the United States, and to issue bonds to the amount of $500,000,000, payable, principal and interest, in gold, and in this way perpetuate our national debt and the national banking system, and to make two-thirds of all of our money, money and notes of credit.

It is another shameful makeshift for real relief. The substitute offered by the minority of the committee is less objectionable, but it, too, is obnoxious because it will reach the same end, but will take a little longer to do it; so I am unalterably opposed to both bills. They are both undemocratic and wrong. Take the substitute. It establishes and perpetuates national banks, authorizes the issue of bonds in time of peace to pay the current expenses of the Government. Under it the Government guarantees the payment of national-bank notes by their being receivable to the Government for revenues. So, if a bank fails and is unable to redeem, all the holders of the notes have to do is to unload the worthless paper on the Government. Besides, the State-bank notes are not given this guaranty, and could not be circulated alongside of national-bank notes. The result would be State banks could not operate under it, and this provision is simply a delusion to catch State-bank Democrats.

It is said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that good faith requires the United States to pay off its obligations in gold. This is absolute rot and made alone in the interest of the holders of our debts and not in the interest of justice to our people, who must do the paying, or for good faith on the part of the Government.

When the bulk of our indebtedness was created the people had the right to pay in any money that was then a legal tender. Later, in the interest of the creditor, they were changed to coin obligations, and now it is proposed to make them payable in gold and thus carry out the original scheme and conspiracy against the people. This would make it take twice as much of their labor, products, and property than to have paid under the original status and double the value of the creditors' debts.

Mr. SPRINGER also tells us if we will make the $500,000,000 of bonds payable in gold we will save 1 per cent interest, but he does not tell us the other and more important truth that the gold to pay the debt would cost us a premium of at least 20 per cent and how much we would lose by this. [Applause.]

As to the Treasury notes, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to pay them off in silver, and ought to be forced to do so. This would stop the run on the Treasury for gold for this vast amount.

If this law had been complied with, if this policy had been adopted, no such condition would confront the Treasury to-day; it would never have become necessary to issue bonds and sell them for gold to be taken out by bankers and to be again redeemed in gold as soon as the Secretary of the Treasury could reissue them.

The Republican party set this precedent, and this Administration has followed its illegal and ruinous example. Yet they say something must be done. Let it be the right thing. Do not go on and inflict further degradation and wrong upon the people because their oppressors and their agents cry out, do something. And for whom? For the country? No; but for Mammon. For the people? No; but for the "money changers in the temple."

But on this question what did the Republican party promise the people?

I will send it to the Clerk's desk and have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREE AND SAFE COINAGE OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal. The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international conference to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, in compliance with this (the declarations of their platform) what have they done to redeem these pledges? They joined some Democrats in Congress and passed the law to repeal "the purchasing clause of the Sherman law," and now propose the issuance of certificates to be paid in coin at 3 per cent interest. This, gentlemen, will not be taken as a compliance or an answer to your pledges.

Mr. Chairman, what should we do to give relief? Restore silver to its place as one of the moneys of redemption. Give free and unlimited coinage on the same terms as gold at a ratio of 16 to 1; make it a legal tender for all debts, both public and private; abolish the national banking system as soon as possible; repeal the law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell bonds, and if the Government needs money to defray expenses let it exercise the function that belongs to it, issue its notes redeemable in coin, and repeal the 10 per cent discriminating tax against State-bank issue. This will relieve the Government, increase the metallic money of the world, and add to the people's prosperity and happiness.

Mr. Chairman, the history of the world proves that the greater the volume of the metallic money, the greater the activity of all business, the greater the prosperity of the people, and the higher the price of products, as contained in the following statements:

At the Christian era the metallic money of the Roman Empire amounted to $1,800,000,000. By the end of the fifteenth century it had shrunk to $200,000,000. (Dr. Adam Smith informs us that in 1455 the price of wheat in England was 2 pence per bushel.) Population dwindled, and commerce, arts, wealth, and freedom all disappeared. The people were reduced by poverty and misery to the most degraded conditions of serfdom and slavery. The disintegration of society was almost complete.

History records no such disastrous transition as that from the Roman Empire to the Dark Ages. The discovery of the New World by Columbus restored the volume of precious metals, brought with it rising prices, enabled society to reunite its shattered links, shake off the shackles of feudalism, and to relight and uplift the almost extinguished torch of civilization.—Report United States Monetary Commission of 1878.

This statement can not truthfully be denied.

The supporters of this bill tell us with frantic appeal that the life of the nation is diseased and its honor imperiled. We who are opposed to the measure reply: The present Administration has diagnosed the patient, and urges that relief can be obtained by following the same line of practice that Republican quacks have pursued for thirty years, and which we who believe in the principles of Democracy as taught by Jefferson and Jackson are confident has produced this critical condition.

Mr. Chairman, no one can give his support to either the bill or the substitute unless he favors Federalism, the concentration of power, supremacy of corporations, and the establishment of monopolies. In 1893 these doctors called us together and prescribed. We were brought here then at a time of unrest and depression, brought about, as we believe, by the passage of laws which destroyed one-half the money. What did they tell us? To repeal the "purchasing clause of the Sherman law," and that depression would be dispelled, confidence restored, business revived, and that prosperity would follow.

The law passed. What has been the effect? Depression increases, confidence weakens, business has not revived, and the promised prosperity has not come. On the other hand, we see wretchedness, poverty, and distress. Prices continue to fall as gold goes up; labor can not find employment; strikes and revolutions—these are the children, the offspring, of these vicious laws, the fulfillment of these false prophecies. They now offer us as a remedy for our fearful malady more hideous deformities and regale us with the siren's song and with more fulsome prophecies for its effect.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say here and now that both the message, bill, and substitute are a travesty on Democratic principles and the pledges of the Democratic platform. Up to the time the crime of demonetizing silver was committed both silver and gold constituted the money redemption of the world. The two metals existed in about the same quantities and gave us about twice as much money for redemption purposes as gold will now give us.

There is now in the world $3,820,571,346 in silver and $3,727,018,869 in gold. Hence the dislocation of the parity of the two metals by the demonetization of silver and the attempt to maintain our credit in gold has reduced the redemption money of the world from $7,547,590,215 to $3,727,018,869, less than one-half.

To carry out the policy of a single gold standard for the world we have, as shown by the Director of the Mint, only $3,750,000,000 in gold in the world.

The population of the world in 1890 was about 1,400,000,000 which would make a per capita of about $2.50.

Mr. Chairman, it is plain to be seen that this is infinitely too small to pay debts and conduct the business of the world. It is folly gone mad to longer delay the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Should we declare for it nearly all the other nations would join in the move. We can not afford to stand idly by and wait for England to say what we shall do on this subject. Her interest is not ours. She is a creditor, we a debtor. Besides, we produce about one-half of the silver of the world and should not destroy this resource put here to bless mankind.

When we contemplate the misery the demonetization of silver has produced, the widespread ruin and bankruptcy of the many and enrichment of the few, we may be excused for adopting and quoting with approval what the able Secretary of the Treasury said of the demonetization of silver while a member of this House and before he joined the President in his effort to force a single gold standard upon this country in the interest of capitalists of this and other countries. Hear what he said:

I know that the world's stock of the precious metals is none too large, and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever become so. Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce, and industry. According to my views of the subject the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy, by legislation and otherwise, from three-sevenths to one-half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.

The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of the metallic money in the world.

It may seem strange that so soon after this serious declaration he becomes one of the chief advocates of the permanent annihilation of the metallic money of the world. The public may be curious to know what new light has broken in on his vision that has wrought this marvelous change on so important a subject.

There are many agencies at work to effect this deplorable end. The Administration, the lobby, the subsidized press, the boards of trade, the bankers, and the creditors of the Government all have thrown themselves into the fight for this unholy purpose. Who and how many will withstand the pressure of this most powerful combination, and stand by the toiling millions who are at home, with no lobby or powerful influence to aid their cause? May I not hope that in the near future I shall see a Joshua come forth to lead the oppressed and degraded people to victory against this power of usurpation and oppression. [Applause.]

So far as I am concerned, I am not here to worship men, but I am here intending to stand and make the best fight that I can for principle and the inalienable rights of man. Others may yield convictions and principles for expediency's sake, or may be driven by what they conceive to be public clamor to commit this crime against the people, this wrong against free institutions. [Applause.]

So far as I am concerned, "none of these things shall move me." I shall still continue to act upon Democratic principles and vote against these monstrous measures. [Applause.]

The passage of this bill will be the continuation of Republican methods and Republican policies. It is Senator SHERMAN's plan, which has been condemned by the Democratic press and on the rostrum by Democratic orators for the last thirty years. Shall we take to our bosom the Republican crimes of which we have so bitterly complained?

For one, I will not do it, even to please a Mugwump Administration, or satisfy what some think public opinion.

I said in my speech when the bill to repeal the "purchasing clause" of the Sherman law was pending what I now ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I favor the taking up of every question that affects the people and disposing of it, and we can no more give relief to them by piecemeal than the good doctor can give relief to his patient who has divers afflictions by the cure of one of them, and I am in favor of staying here until the needed relief is brought about if it takes until my term of office expires. We have promised the people relief, and our promises were not made to be broken. The people of this country have suffered for thirty years from broken promises and deception, and now that the Democratic party, which has always been regarded as the party of the people, has come into power, each and every promise that we made should be scrupulously complied with, and this we will not do if we vote for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act.

In the same paragraph of the Chicago platform which provides for the repeal of the Sherman law the Democratic party made another pledge that is coupled with it, and which can not be separated from it, which was that we recognize gold and silver as the standard money of this country, and that we should have the coinage of both without discriminating against either, and this clause was inserted "for the protection of the farming and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency." Can it be said that this was inserted as a vote catcher? Certainly no Democrat will admit this. I insist that under the platform these two things must be taken together, because the coinage of silver on the same terms as gold carries with it necessarily the repeal of the Sherman law.

Suppose the platform had stopped with the single declaration in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law and had made no provision for the free coinage of silver; who in this House will say that Grover Cleveland and the Democratic ticket would have swept the country as they did? It was the West and South that elected Grover Cleveland, and without this declaration he could never have procured their support. Mr. Speaker, the men who desire to demonetize silver and put this country on a single gold standard seek to avoid the force of this by asking us to wait until the people are ruined and until it suits the money barons of England and other foreign countries to have an international agreement as to the ratio between the two metals and the coinage of silver.

This dodge was never heard of until after the crime of demonetization of 1873 had been effected, and its insistence in an American Congress is enough to bring the blush of shame to the face of every American patriot. And whenever the people seem to be in the position to get this relief the emissaries of Wall street and London and Liverpool come here and cry "international agreement." They say we must not move until the British lion has lowered his growl on British soil. Timid, cowards, sneaks! No; but avaricious, determined to appreciate the debts of the people and to depreciate their ability to pay.

This is but a subterfuge of fraud as black and corrupt as the midnight shades of the damned, and a snare to prevent the people from securing their rights. We are told by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Brown] that they want to keep every promise made in the platform. Oh, what a sweet morsel that is to roll under their tongues—but that we must take it up by sentences! How long would that take?

How long would it take you to get through with the tariff bill in that way? I say, how long would it take? What committee could ever make reports upon the different sentences of that platform? Logic profound! Satisfactory to the gentlemen, I suppose, who used it. Empty! We are not to be deceived by this. If they are in earnest about carrying out the platform, why not do both at the same time and in the same bill? Why make two bites of a cherry?

We understand these tactics. We have had a long, painful, terrible lesson in these side-track issues, commencing with the Bland bill and the Sherman Act. Mark it down, this is a fight from now until the time when the common people are restored to their rights. Once they succeed in the repeal of the Sherman law and demonetize silver, then they would resort to any and all measures to defeat its being made one of the money metals of this country.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, England demonetized silver in 1816, and yet from that date to 1873 the parity of gold and silver was not affected. We did not need her then to keep up the parity, and we do not need her now, but if in this the friends of remonetizing silver should be mistaken, we can legislate the premium out of gold by reducing the number of grains in a gold dollar till we bring the dollar of both metals to the same value. Let us do something to stop this crime that is improperly taking from the property of the debtor and placing it in the pockets of the creditors. If this Congress does not give the people a bimetallic standard, and the next fails, then let the masters drive their public servants from power and put men here who will serve their interest in this fight, this struggle for right and humanity. Men who will restore the integrity of our country instead of prostituting it as has been done in the interest of the rich combinations and corporations at the expense of the very life of our free institutions.

Until the people wake up to their interest and the danger that is impending and drive these unworthy agents out there will come no relief to them, but they will "ask for bread and be given a stone." In the interest of Democracy, in the interest of good government and common humanity, I hope these bills will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention for a few minutes to one phase of this question which I think is important, but which has received but little attention in the discussions in this House. The President has urged upon Congress that some legislation is necessary to strengthen the Treasury and stop the outflow of gold. His remedy is to call in and cancel the United States legal-tender notes commonly denominated greenbacks. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out this administrative policy he must have more gold, for by his construction of the law coin means gold, and more coin means more gold. So it becomes important at this time that there should be another step taken on the way blazed out for the Administration in the summer of 1893, which was to lead the country unerringly to gold monometallism.

Bonds must be issued with which to buy gold, and while the President does not question the Secretary's ruling the new bonds must be payable in gold, so that we may have a legislative declaration in support of the Secretary's official acts and indorsing and strengthening the gold-standard policy. It is true that this is a new departure for the Republic, and might tend to discredit the coin bonds already issued and sold, but this consideration is not of sufficient moment for the President to take into account in his message. Upon this question he is as silent as the tomb. The substance of the message is that as gold bonds are now demanded by the bankers such bonds should be authorized and the noninterest-bearing debt of the United States should be supplanted by interest-bearing obligations which should be payable in gold. This is the plain policy of the Administration as announced by the President through his special message of January 28, 1895. No one can mistake the meaning of this document.

Should this policy be adopted it would not only result in the speedy cancellation of the greenbacks, and another panic, but would for many years settle the question in favor of the single gold standard and against the judgment of the great majority of the people.

Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to support either of these propositions; first, because I believe they are iniquitous, and second, because, in my judgment, these remedies would not cure the present financial difficulties.

Why should we contract the currency, or why should we call in the legal-tender notes? I have not understood that this form of money is distrusted in any quarter by the masses of the people, nor by the average depositors in the banks or the business classes. Only a few people pretend to believe that this currency stands in the way of national prosperity, and these few never saw the menace to the Treasury until they began to want the Government to abdicate its constitutional right to issue money, and to make gold, supplemented by national-bank notes, the only money of the realm.

That there is difficulty with our finances no one will dispute, but there is a wide difference of opinion regarding the causes and remedies. For two or three years there has been a mighty scramble going on between the leading nations for the gold of the world. The nation willing to pay the highest price for it gets the coin. This condition ought to be conclusive evidence to everyone that there is an insufficient supply of this money metal. There is not enough of it in the world to transact the world's business, and no great gold mines are anywhere being discovered. To stop this wild scramble for gold we must have more metallic money, and this should be accomplished by the restoration of silver coinage and by a return to the true bimetallic principle. Should we make provisions for the coinage and use as money of the silver product of the United States, supplant the small notes now in circulation with silver coins, remove the temptation for cornering gold, the other questions involved would readily adjust themselves.

Upon the question of the insufficiency of the supply of gold I desire to read a clipping from the Manufacturer, published in Philadelphia. I call attention to the location of this journal to show that all this contention for the restoration of silver does not come from the West and from the South, but it is beginning to come from all sections of the Union. The article reads:

What is the reason why gold is exported in increasing quantities? Here is a question persistently avoided by the public journals, and yet manifestly it is the most important of all the questions involved in the present disturbance of the finances of the country. But one answer is possible: There is not enough gold for the purposes of commerce. Because there is not enough we have manifestations of really desperate eagerness to get it. The European nations hold fast to what they have, and as our Government will not do so, but pays out gold even when the demand note in plain terms calls for silver, those who want gold come here to get it.

No other explanation of the extraordinary pertinacity of the assaults upon the Treasury gold reserve is possible. It will not, for example, be seriously contended that this almost ferocious anxiety to obtain gold could accompany the existence of an abundant supply. No man who wishes to have a reputation for the possession of good sense will venture to assert that exporters would willingly pay a premium for gold, as they have done recently, if they could get it without a premium; and why should there be a premium if there is enough of the metal for the uses of business? The wild scramble for gold offers conclusive evidence of the deficiency of the supply and it is the sufficient answer to the theorists who proclaim that the world's output is now almost in excess of the demand.

The American people may now perceive in the clearest light the workings of gold monometallism. This is the system which was to bring peace to mankind and security to business. This is the system which was to supply us with the "best" money, with "honest" money, with the money of civilization. Under this system the Treasury of the United States trembles upon its foundations, and the credit of the richest nation upon the earth is menaced with overflow. Here we pay in half panic, in consternation, and disaster, part of the penalty, already largely paid in the impoverishment of our producers and the paralysis of business, for permitting England to impose upon us a false money system, devised for purposes of robbery.

Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of the special session in 1893, Congress was advised by the Chief Executive that the then financial difficulties were owing to the purchase of silver bullion and the issuing of Treasury notes in payment thereof; and that if this provision for the purchase of silver should be unconditionally repealed contentment and prosperity would immediately return. The silver-purchasing clause was repealed. A year and a half has elapsed, but the promised revival of business and restoration to confidence have not returned. We are now told by the same high authority that before we can have permanent prosperity the greenbacks, so long in circulation, must be retired and destroyed and that gold must be declared the only money of final payment.

In view of the mistaken situation in 1893 and the inglorious failure of the President's predictions at that time, are the members of this House willing to follow him further in his ruinous monetary policy? Are you willing to further appreciate the value of gold by increasing the demands for this metal? Are you willing to increase the debt of every man in this country by so legislating as to increase the value of money and by giving to the banks the exclusive power to contract or expand the currency? For myself I am not willing to do this.

The power to coin money and regulate its value was granted by the States to the General Government, and observation and experience vindicate the wisdom of this arrangement. This power has been somewhat divided, but it should not and can not be taken away. It seems to me it would be better to so legislate that this great national bank, the United States Treasury, should have the undisputed authority to protect itself against fraud and imposition. If the Treasury is strengthened and made so strong that a few men can not, for the purpose of speculation, make a run upon it and produce a panic, then the banks of the country will take care of themselves, and we will see the dawning of better times.

Mr. HARTMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana desires to submit an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. I move to strike out the section and insert in lieu thereof the matter which I sent to the Clerk's desk to have read, as a substitute for section 4.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. HARTMAN. I desire to be heard upon the point of order. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of order raised against the amendment before was that it did not relate to the matter contained in the section.

Mr. COX. Upon what proposition is it now offered?

Mr. HARTMAN. It is offered on section 5. Now, the point of order sustained, as I understand, by the Chairman before was that section 4 did not in any way relate to the subject of import duties. Section 5 deals directly with the question of import duties, and provides that all import duties shall be paid in gold. Now, I simply amend that by making the provision that 50 per cent of the import duties shall be paid in silver and 50 per cent in gold.

Mr. SPRINGER. In order that we may understand this question, I think the amendment ought to be read again, as it was offered before at a time when it was not supposed to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana; and in order that gentlemen may hear the amendment, the Chair requests order on the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act all holders of silver bullion to the amount of $100 or more, of standard weight and fineness, shall be entitled to have the same coined at the mint of the United States into silver dollars of the weight and fineness provided for in the second section of this act.

That the silver dollar provided for in this act shall consist of 412½ grains of standard silver; said dollars to be a legal tender for all debts, dues, and demands, both public and private.

That the holder of the silver dollars herein provided for shall be entitled to deposit the same and to receive silver certificates in the manner now provided by law for the standard silver dollars.

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1895, one-half of all import duties shall be paid in gold and one-half thereof in silver: Provided, That all duties on all imports hereafter brought into the United States from countries whose governments refuse to open their mints to the free coinage of gold and silver without discrimination against either shall be double the duty on like articles coming from countries that coin gold and silver freely.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment as a proviso to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order now. The question is on the point of order. This is an amendment in the second degree. The gentleman will please wait until the point of order is first disposed of. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I want to have read the amendment I propose to offer and to have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair rules it out an amendment to it would not be pending. The gentleman must withhold his amendment until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for the free coinage of silver; for the change of the tariff laws by doubling all the duties now provided by law imposed upon articles coming from countries that make any discrimination against silver; so that it is a very comprehensive measure, covering nearly all the subjects that Congress has been called upon to consider for the past two years.

Mr. PICKLER. It is better than anything in the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think, therefore, it is not germane to this proposition and is out of order. I think the mere statement of that is sufficient to cause it to be ruled out of order. I do not propose to argue the merits of the proposition. There is nothing in this bill connected with the free coinage of silver nor with the imposition of duties.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear. Gentlemen on the floor will cease conversation. There is so much confusion on the floor the Chair can not hear the gentleman speaking on the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I may add one further point. There is one sentence in this amendment that would be germane. That is that part of it which provides that one-half of the customs duties shall be paid in gold and the other half in silver. That is germane and in order; but the proposition having been offered as a whole, it must be treated as one amendment, and if anything is not in order it must all go out.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, in so far as this amendment provides for the coinage of gold and silver, it is a means to be provided for the payment of duties. That is certainly as much in order as the other section of the bill which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury of this country may receive a portion of it in gold. Now, the amendment provides that one-half of the duties may be received in gold and the other half in silver. That is simply following in the strict line of the language proposed in section 5 by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. So far as the other section is concerned, it relates strictly to the question of import duties.

The question of import duties is directly treated by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in this bill he asks us to pass. That section pertains to retaliation, according to the language used by the chairman of the committee, who provides that all import duties shall be paid in gold. It is a regulation for the payment of import duties, and that is all the gentleman from Illinois attempts to do in the provision of his section; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when we come here with an opportunity to force the nations of the world to do that which we have been vainly calling on them to do, in doing our duty to this country we should take advantage of every opportunity and procedure whereby we can compel them to come to our feet upon this question. I submit that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not that in substance the amendment which was ruled out by the Chair a moment ago on a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the identical amendment. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment of the gentleman from Montana is not in order. It is an amendment which provides for the free coinage of silver. The proposition pending is a section of the bill which provides that all duties on imports shall be paid in gold coin only. It does not relate to the coinage of gold or silver at all. There is a portion of the amendment which would be in order, but if any part of the proposition is obnoxious to the point of order the Chair is compelled to rule the whole amendment out of order.

Mr. HARTMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

On a division, the decision of the Chair was sustained—aye 75, noes 9.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw that portion of the amendment which relates to the free coinage of silver and to let the rest of the amendment stand, providing for the payment of 50 per cent of import duties in gold and 50 per cent in silver.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 4, strike out the words "in gold coin only," and insert "one-half in gold coin and one-half in silver coin."

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, judging from the levity in the committee this afternoon, either the propositions before this body are regarded as useless and the subject involved as unworthy of our consideration or else the belief dominates the committee that all legislation on this subject is impossible in this Congress. I appeal to the committee, without respect to party, for an earnest consideration of the questions before us, in the hope that we may patriotically reach some wise action. It seems to be admitted on all hands and throughout the entire country that a great emergency is upon us. If this be so, the representatives of the people should earnestly address themselves to the questions submitted by the President, and, in the light of their own knowledge and their sworn duty, try to meet the emergency.

As to the bill known as the "committee bill," or the "Springer bill," and still more properly the "Administration bill," I am opposed to it for several reasons, all of which I have not the time now to give, but I will content myself with saying that I am not prepared to grant new authority for the issuing of gold bonds, nor am I willing to adopt legislation that provides for the retirement and cancellation of the greenback. The time may come when I shall change my mind, but I do not believe that the conditions are ripe yet for such retirement. As we have now no provision for using new silver bullion I am not willing to add to that condition a contraction of the currency which must result from the retirement of the greenback.

Another proposition before us, known as the "Cox substitute," differs but little from the first bill reported some weeks ago from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and which among other bad features contains the offensive "State-bank" provisions inviting them back into the financial world, and which in itself is enough to condemn that substitute. The provisions of the Cox substitute have been once adjudicated and condemned by the present House and at the present session. No new light has come to us since that action to warrant a change of front on the part of this body.

I am, however, willing to support the "Reed substitute," and I will state briefly my reasons. At the special session of this Congress, in some remarks that I made on the currency question, I gave it as my opinion that our financial system would have to be revised in the near future. But we have nothing pending here that anywhere approaches a revision of that system. All the propositions pending are mere emergency propositions, an emergency which is to be swept away by the end of this calendar year, if we are correctly advised by the Administration, because of the increased revenues which we are promised. If then we are to make some temporary provision for the present financial stringency let it be aimed simply at the present difficulty until such time as Congress may be able to develop a comprehensive plan for the revision of our financial system.

On the 19th day of January, 1894, in some remarks that I made on the tariff, I expressed myself against the issuing of gold bonds, and said in substance that I would antagonize such an issue by the Administration in view of the fact that it was tearing down our industries and by its unwise tariff legislation stopping the flow of revenue into the public Treasury. I see no reason to-day for changing my views as then expressed.

The Reed proposition does not propose such a measure. It does not authorize the issuing of gold bonds. It does not cancel the greenbacks. It does not contract the currency. It simply provides for the issue of debts certificates, or short-time bonds if you please, to meet the present emergency and pay the current expenses of the Government; and at the same time without changing the law now on the statute books under which the President has sold one hundred million of bonds it does authorize cutting down the rate of interest to 3 per cent. The proposed certificates of indebtedness are to be for a short time, a low rate of interest, to meet all the current demands for the expenses of the Government, and thus stop the drain, through the greenbacks, upon the gold reserve in the Treasury. It does not cut off the power of the President to sell more bonds if gold be needed, but it authorizes the sale at a lower rate of interest than that now provided by law.

No one who fairly contemplates the propositions in the Reed substitute can fail to see that it will preserve the gold reserve, and at the same time equip the Executive with the fullest power to meet all the current demands upon the Treasury, and at the same time avoid the issuing of any more bonds to become a mortgage upon a rich people that needs no such mortgaging of its wealth.

The President of the United States has told the country that he will maintain the national credit at all hazards. I am with him on that proposition. Badly as you have acted in this Congress, injuring the credit of your Government, forcing us to consider measures that never should have come before Congress, and that would not have been needed if you had not destroyed the inflow of our revenues, and that, too, at the expense of the industries of our country, I will stand with Democrats or Republicans to uphold the financial faith of my country, and to keep all of its money at a parity.

The Reed substitute only provides for this condition, and it provides for it fully.

If the President will issue bonds shall we compel him to issue 5 per cent bonds, or give him authority to issue at 3 per cent, in the event of his issuing bonds at all? Is there a Republican, a Democrat, or a Populist who will object to the 3 per cent bonds instead of the 5 per cent if bonds are to be issued? The President says he will exercise that issuing power. I have no doubt but that he has the power. The men who laid one hundred and seventeen millions in gold upon the cash counter of the Treasury knew what they were doing as to the legal aspect of it before they invested that amount of money. Draw no comfort from the hope that these bonds are illegal. They are unquestionably legal, and will have to be paid, every dollar, principal and interest. Since, therefore, bonds are to be issued, why not save the people from the expense of paying unnecessarily 2 per cent more than is needed to be paid?

The Reed substitute does not contract the currency. It provides amply for the deficiencies in the revenues. It will save millions by providing for a lower rate of interest. It will stop the outflow of gold from the Treasury. It will restore confidence among the people, and tide the nation over to such period as we hope the future to bring, either under present law or law to be enacted, which will, from our abundant wealth, enable the Treasury to meet every proper demand upon it. It contains wise propositions for our present needs, and this proposition I will cordially support. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to an amendment which I wish to offer in order to bring this question to a point. I desire to offer an amendment, in line 10 of the first section, inserting in place of the word "gold" the word "coin," and again, in line 16, in place of "gold coin" the word "coin."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at this time. There is one amendment pending.

Mr. COX. The questions involved here can be stated in a word. It does not admit of any kind of misapprehension. I want to know whether this House is going to vote to issue bonds payable in gold, instead of bonds payable in coin.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know what is the status of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. Cox]?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at this stage, because two amendments are already pending.

Mr. WALKER. I desire the House to know exactly what it is doing in voting to compel all duties to be paid in gold. Customs duties are now paid mostly in silver. Do we want to stop that? Do the free coinage of silver men on this floor want to stop the payment of duties in silver and require their payment in gold? Is that friendliness to silver?

A MEMBER. There is no law authorizing their payment in silver.

Mr. WALKER. There is a law authorizing it; and they are paid in silver to-day. We are satisfied with that arrangement as it stands. It is the best we can do. Now, if we provide by law that these duties shall be paid in gold we try to put gold at a premium. We defeat the very purpose that we are endeavoring to accomplish in this bill, namely, to prevent the drawing of gold from the United States Treasury. If duties be required to be paid in gold, gold will be drawn out of the Treasury to-day to pay duties to-morrow. If gentlemen want to cut down the use of silver used in payment of duties one-half and increase the use of gold; let them adopt the proposition that duties shall be paid in gold.

Mr. HARTMAN. What per cent of the duties are now paid in silver?

Mr. WALKER. Nearly all of them, I understand.

Mr. HARTMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WALKER. A very large per cent of them.

Mr. DINGLEY. About 50 per cent.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, if we require the payment of customs duties in gold, we either put gold at a premium by creating an extra demand for it, or else persons required to pay duties in gold will take greenbacks and Treasury notes to the Treasury and draw out the gold which they require for the purpose of paying the duties.

One word in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. He says he is in favor of the greenback, yet he supports the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. The gentleman from Maine will not come out and say that he wants to destroy the greenbacks, but he wants to keep them idle in the Treasury so that some future Congress can destroy them if it wants to do so. If those greenbacks are good, why not pay them out for the expenses of the Government? They are there in the Treasury. We have enough of them. We do not need to issue bonds for the payment of our expenses. We have greenbacks enough in the Treasury now to pay any deficit that can possibly occur until the receipts of the Government equal its expenditures, according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury.

We do not need any short-time bonds. To vote short-time bonds is to declare that we will draw in the greenbacks and let them remain in the Treasury until they can be destroyed. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] if he is really in favor of the greenbacks, why he is not willing to let them be paid out in meeting the expenses of the Government? Why take in these greenbacks and hold them in the Treasury? If they are good money, they are good enough to pay our current expenses with, and if they are a good enough currency with which to pay our running expenses, we do not need to issue long-time bonds or short-time bonds for that purpose.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine embraces two propositions. In the first place, it really indorses the action taken by the President. It says that he is right in redeeming greenbacks and Treasury notes in gold; because unless they are to be paid in gold there is no reason why bonds should be issued. The gentleman from Iowa says that the President is going to do this in order to maintain the credit of the country and he commends the President's determination.

Mr. Chairman, I for one do not believe that this Government is under any greater obligation to maintain its credit than is any private individual. I believe that the dollar which the Government makes good enough for one citizen to receive from another is a good enough dollar for the Government to use when it pays its own debts. I do not believe the Government should make one rule for itself and another rule for the people of the country. If the silver dollar is good enough to be a legal tender between citizen and citizen, it is good enough for the Government to use when it pays a debt which it owes. I am not in favor of increasing the Government indebtedness and discrediting the greenbacks, as proposed by the gentleman from Maine. Why is not the same coin which is receivable between individuals in payment of debts good enough to redeem the greenbacks or any coin notes or the bonds of the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is, first, on the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 4, strike out the words "in gold coin only" and insert "one half in gold coin and one-half in silver coin."

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 83, noes 72.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion to strike out section 5.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Before the question is taken on striking out that section I desire to move an amendment. I move to amend by striking out, in line 5, the word "and" and inserting the word "coin;" so as to read:

And all taxes, debts, and demands, other than duties on imports, accruing or becoming due to the United States shall be paid in gold coin, silver coin, Treasury notes, United States notes, silver certificates, or notes of national banks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion to strike out section 5, it was rejected, there being—ayes 85, noes 97.

Mr. SPRINGER. This section was numbered 4 in the bill by the Clerk under the impression that it would take the place of section 4 to be stricken out. Section 4 and section 5 were both recommended to be stricken out, and these sections numbered 4 and 5, on page 4, were to take their places.

The CHAIRMAN. The recommendation, then, was to strike out and insert?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; but in lieu of section 4, on page 3 of the bill, if that section was stricken out. The gentleman from Massachusetts, however [Mr. WALKER], now moves this section

4 as a separate proposition, and it ought to be numbered differently. It would be section 6 if properly numbered.

Mr. WALKER. That is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee recommend the insertion of this matter, but I am opposed to it and hope it will not be adopted by the House. I ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment recommended by the committee on page 4, and numbered section 4, will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That from and after July 1, 1895, 10 per cent of the cash reserve required by law shall be kept in coin or coin certificates, and not less than half of such coin or coin certificates shall be in gold coin or gold certificates, and that such cash reserve required by law shall be kept in coin or coin certificates in amounts increased by 10 per cent of the whole cash reserve required to be kept by law on and after the first day of each quarter of the calendar year, until the whole cash reserve shall be in coin or coin certificates; and not less than one-half of such cash reserve shall be at all times in gold coin or gold certificates.

Mr. SPRINGER. While this amendment, I repeat, has been recommended by the committee, a minority of the committee are opposed to it, and I am one of that minority. It was proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] that he should have a fair opportunity first to be heard upon it for the purpose of explaining it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, in order that this amendment that one-tenth of the "cash reserve" of national banks shall be kept in coin after July 1, 1895, and so on may be understood, I will occupy the time of the committee for a few moments.

The theory on which the bill before us is framed is that the United States is to retire from the banking business, and abandon the redemption of paper money of any kind by the Treasurer. If the bill shall become a law and if it has the effect designed by those who have drawn it, that will be the result.

Now, if we are going to release the Government from this duty of providing a cash reserve to meet the outstanding currency obligations of the Government and the banks, that duty must be transferred to some other persons or institutions. The requirement must be placed somewhere else. As the banks demand that we shall have the gold measure of value, and coin circulation, and that the Government shall not be compelled to redeem in gold, and I think correctly, this duty is put on the banks by this bill, where it belongs, and at the risk and expense of banks just as it is done in every other country in the world. As we release the Government from the duty it must be placed somewhere, as I have said. The result will be that the "cash reserve" required by law to be kept by the banks must be kept in coin by the banks themselves—not have the United States Treasury keep coin for their benefit. Now, what does that amount to?

The law now requires a 15 per cent reserve in country banks and 25 per cent in some of the city banks. Nine per cent of the 15 per cent must be kept in cash and 6 per cent of the 15 may be in balances due a bank from other banks. The coin part of the "cash reserve" required would be increasing steadily until it reached the maximum required by law or until the whole of it was kept in gold or silver.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not say 50 per cent of it shall be silver?

Mr. WALKER. Well, the banks will regulate that for themselves by keeping all the silver they are allowed to keep. We do not want to destroy the prevailing custom. It would take thirty months before all the cash reserves would be in coin. The banks to-day have more coin in their cash reserve than the bill calls for. Almost all of that reserve is in gold. But the law should compel it, and the law should compel all of the banks to keep it so, not a part. That they can do, and do each their fair share toward making all of the dollars in circulation at a parity the one with the other. When we release one party, namely, the United States Government, from doing this thing, it must be put on the banks or there will be no one to redeem in coin.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman please explain the last clause of this provision:

Not less than one-half of such cash reserve shall be at all times in gold coin or gold certificates.

Mr. WALKER. The purpose is to cover the whole preceding part of the section—the keeping in coin is progressive, continual, kept in that proportion. This provides that one-half of this reserve shall be at all times in gold coin or certificates, but it may be all in gold, that gold redemption be maintained.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It does not require silver at all?

Mr. WALKER. No; because the silver will naturally form part of the cash coin reserve.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Would the gentleman accept an amendment to the amendment to provide that one-half of it shall be in silver?

Mr. WALKER. Oh, there is no trouble about that. Many banks would keep all silver if they could.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, if it can have no hurtful effect, why not put it in?

Mr. WALKER. And this amendment, Mr. Chairman, if it goes in, will operate to require finally about $200,000,000 of silver and $200,000,000 of gold to be kept. The banks can not keep all of this large amount in gold. It would be out of all proportion to the commercial needs or usages of the country, and no country in the world will keep that amount unless compelled by law. None of them will keep more than the demands of commerce require.

Mr. HARTMAN. If the banks are so anxious to maintain the parity of the metals, why should they not be required to keep an equal amount of gold and silver for that purpose?

Mr. WALKER. That is the practical effect of the provision as it now stands.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment and I ask the attention of the committee while I give some reasons why it should not be agreed to. I hold in my hand a statement which I have received from the Comptroller of the Currency showing the condition of the lawful money reserve of the national banks on December 19, 1894; and there is in the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1894 a statement of the condition of the reserve on October last. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], which is now pending, if it should be adopted, it would call for a greater amount of gold to be held by the banks as a reserve at the end of the year than there is gold now in all the national banks of the country.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman why he does not strike that section out there as to coin certificates and requiring the banks to hold coin certificates and gold certificates?

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the whole proposition will not be agreed to. I need not state the embarrassment that the Treasury is now under, in the unusual and extraordinary demands for gold; and if you pass this proposition you will increase that demand by the amount which the banks will need for the purpose of making up this gold reserve.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They can get what they want.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was in the banks on the 2d day of October last $175,000,000 in gold coin, and if this proposition should pass—

Mr. COX. What do you mean by gold coin?

Mr. SPRINGER. I mean gold coin, gold certificates, and clearing-house certificates. There were $80,000,000 in gold coin, $39,000,000 in coin certificates, and $56,000,000 in clearing-house certificates, making a total of $175,000,000 in gold and gold certificates in all the national banks in December last.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that you will get rid of all that if you strike it out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, if you require their reserves to be held in gold and gold certificates, it would call for an amount of gold of $174,000,000. So that all the gold within one million now in the national banks would be required to be held as reserve, and they could not advance any of that to the Government if they were called upon for a loan in order to replenish the Treasury against withdrawals for shipment abroad.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman that he should remember that we passed an act recently that provides that no further gold certificates shall be issued.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest that if this is to be adopted those words "gold certificates" be stricken out. But I am not now speaking of that. I am speaking of the amount the national banks would need if one-half of their cash reserves were required to be in gold coin, for the reason that they would simply have to organize another raid on the gold reserve of the Treasury for these banks. These banks now hold $185,000,000 of legal-tender notes, and if they were required to present them to the Treasury in order to get the gold it would make another raid on the Treasury.

Mr. COX. How much do you say is now held by the banks?

Mr. SPRINGER. One hundred and seventy-five millions. There was $119,513,000 in legal tenders held on the 19th day of December in all the national banks.

Mr. COX. I am not making a point upon that.

Mr. HENDRIX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment, because it is impracticable and unintelligent. It seeks to defeat the very purpose for which this legislation is presented to the House. You propose to attempt to stop the raid upon the Treasury for gold, and you turn around and compel 4,000 national banks of this country to immediately start a fresh raid upon the Treasury for the purpose of getting gold to comply with this law. Now, the banks are already charged with hoarding too much gold. We are doing our best to try to undo the tendency which is abroad to hoard the precious metal. You pass this clause of the bill and it becomes mandatory where it is now simply a matter of commercial option. You would compel the banks to send to the nine subtreasuries with their Treasury notes and to the one subtreasury at San Francisco and the one at New York with their United States legal-tender notes to get gold coin.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to something that will impress him at once. You have already provided in section 4 of this bill that all silver certificates now outstanding shall, when received in the Treasury of the United States, be retired and canceled, and silver certificates in denominations less than $10 shall be issued in their stead. I will ask the gentleman how he expects a bank in the city of Boston, or in the city of Worcester, to say nothing of the banks in the city of New York, to settle their balances at the clearing houses on the days of heavy exchanges when they are drawn upon, as they frequently are, for $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, in silver certificates, if they are of denominations less than $10? Why, sir, we would all have to go to the clearing house in a coach and four in order to settle under the operation of this clause.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. With all the other paper of larger denominations than $10, why should there be any difficulty?

Mr. HENDRIX. But you propose by this bill to retire the other paper money.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not at all.

Mr. HENDRIX. That is the essence of the proposition. Instead of letting the banks hold on to the greenback certificates which they have now and keep them in their reserve, you are going to destroy the value of those certificates as reserve money, and compel the banks to substitute for them one of two things, silver or gold. Now, if you were a banker, which would you choose? Every banker in the country, when he is obliged to make the choice, will choose the one that is more precious in his opinion.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman forgets that the same section provides for the national banks issuing nothing less than ten-dollar notes.

Mr. HENDRIX. That is all right, but national banks can not keep national-bank notes as a reserve. A national bank is not authorized to count national-bank notes as reserve.

The point is that you destroy the practicability of making settlements at the clearing houses. A man comes in and wants legal tender and under this clause you will have to cart him out a lot of silver or gold. Then he has to get a vehicle to take it to the place where he is to pay his legal tender. If you are going to destroy the value of the gold certificates as a reserve and compel the banks to keep gold, you are simply imposing a great burden upon them and upon the public in the transaction of their business. It is impossible to settle the clearing-house balances in that way. The clearing house in New York has provided for the difficulty by issuing gold clearing house certificates, based upon coin placed in the vaults by the clearing-house committee; but this bill would destroy the use of those certificates as a part of the reserve, and would compel the banks to keep their reserve in the two coins or in the Government certificates therefor. It is simply impracticable to carry out this plan in the ordinary transaction of the banking business. The banks now are showing too great a tendency to hoard up gold, and I do not want to see anything put in this bill that is going to sequester gold. I want it made so free that the great deposit in the United States of America of the yellow metal will not be in the banks, but, by reason of the operation of this law, will be transferred to the Treasury of the United States so that the public statements of the Treasury will give notice to the whole world that we have lots of gold, that we are firmly on a gold basis, and that we are going to remain there. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, as to the clearing-house certificates, they are exactly what the clearing house chooses to make them as to form and substance.

Mr. HENDRIX. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that a gentleman who has stood on this floor as the great commercial apostle should make such a statement.

Mr. WALKER. I want to state to the gentleman that the clearing houses in New York and in other cities can make the clearing house certificates just what they choose; therefore we need not bother about them. They are not within the law; they are outside of it, and their certificates are entirely within the control of the clearing houses.

Now, the banks have got $175,000,000 in gold to-day, and if gold goes to a premium the banks will get the premium on it, and the gentleman from New York knows, and everybody else knows, that that is why they are hoarding the gold. But if we compel them by law to hold the gold as a part of their reserve we destroy the interest the bad bankers have in putting gold to a premium. Is not that so? [Cries of "Yes, yes!" and laughter.]

You have had one silver man here, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], offering an amendment to cut out half of the use of silver at the custom-house, and you have had another man, an enemy of silver, though he thinks himself its friend, trying to prevent it from being used in denominations above $10. Now, I stand here as a true friend of silver. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. HENDRIX] stands here as a banker.

Mr. Chairman, the bankers, not one of them in the whole country from Maine to Georgia, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, has offered a single suggestion in a practical bill to relieve the Treasury.

They have all been for banks. They meet at Baltimore; they meet at Boston; they pass resolutions adopting proposed amendments to the law to increase their own profits, and they tell us on the floor of this House that it is none of their business what becomes of the Treasury of the United States. They have got $175,000,000 of gold. They will hold on to it as long as they can, and when it goes to a premium they will get the premium upon it. Now, I want a law to compel them to use that gold to redeem their own notes over their own counter, and thus relieve the United States Treasury, and also in that way take away any inducement they may have to put gold to a premium.

Mr. HENDRIX. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WALKER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HENDRIX. If you provide that the note redemption fund at the Treasury Department shall be kept in gold will not that meet your desire to have the banks redeem their notes in gold?

Mr. WALKER. Not at all, or only partially. [Laughter.]

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from New York to repeat his question.

Mr. HENDRIX. My question is this: Would you not be satisfied with having the note redemption fund which the national banks are obliged to provide kept in gold at the Treasury, where the banks are required by law to redeem?

Mr. WALKER. Do you mean the 5 per cent redemption fund?

Mr. HENDRIX. The 5 per cent redemption fund.

Mr. WALKER. No, sir. I want to say to the gentleman and to the House and to the country that the people of the United States propose to keep all their dollars of equal value. The people of the United States have made a long step in advance in discovering that it is costing them millions upon millions for the United States Government to do this—redeeming of paper money at the United States Treasury, not maintaining the 5 per cent redemption, but redemption in large blocks. Therefore they are upon the eve of making the banks do it at their own risk and at their own cost and over their own counters, thus relieving the people of the tax of twenty or thirty million dollars a year which they now pay for this service to banks and that the banks themselves ought to do.

Here in this section of this bill is the first step in that direction—nine-tenths of 1 per cent to be kept in both kinds of coin—four and a half tenths of 1 per cent to be kept in gold coin. The banks now hold $175,000,000 in their vaults. When these bankers go to bed at night and say their prayers, they say, "O Lord, we beseech Thee to keep gold from going to a premium to-morrow." But they know if it does go to a premium they will make 2 or 3 or 4 per cent profit on the gold in their vaults. When they get up in the morning they say—following the fashion of some prayers which we hear at the Speaker's desk and elsewhere, informing the Lord what has been done—"O Lord, we thank Thee that gold has not gone to a premium," but it is no more than human for them to remember, as the night before, the profit if it should go to a premium. The question is, shall the bankers of this country protect every dollar of their own paper circulation at their own expense and their own risk and not compel the people to be taxed to do it for them at the United States Treasury?

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman allow me an inquiry?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, if it is short.

Mr. COOMBS. Does not the gentleman by this provision put it in the power of the banks and make it their duty to hoard gold, thereby holding a larger whip over the community than they otherwise would? I submit that this amendment would force the banks to become hoarders of gold instead of leaving it in the channels of trade and in the hands of the people.

Mr. WALKER. Now, the gentleman is making an argument. If he wishes to do that let him get his own five minutes. It is "in the channels of trade" when it is in bank reserves, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say another thing, which I regret to say. I have the very highest respect for banks and bankers. I remember the record of George Peabody, and of Corcoran of this city, and hundreds of other bankers. Noble men! Many men of this class have been the most generous, noble-hearted, public-spirited men outside of their business there ever have been in this world. But I remember also that never in any country, under any circumstances whatever, did the bankers ever improve the banking and currency laws or the financial conditions of their country except at the point of the financial bayonet, held by the Government of the country in which the banks were located, namely, by the force of law devised in parliament. We have got to adopt that policy in this country.

Now, I challenge Henry W. Cannon of New York, I challenge Lyman B. Gage of Chicago, I challenge George E. Leighton of St. Louis—three as honorable men as live and as skilled in finance, men who in financial matters stand the peers, if not above, any other three men in this country—to draw a bill that will do what they are saying ought to be done and lecturing us for not doing. Bankers are condemning members of Congress as clowns and fools because we do not accomplish what they want us to do; yet they themselves could not draw a bill which would do it that would get two votes in five in this House in this generation or the next. I say we ought not to heed here and now the protests of the bankers against their being brought into line with the banks of every first-class nation of the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment only five minutes remain for discussion, to be used by some gentleman opposed to the amendment.

Mr. PENCE. After the expiration of the five minutes will it be in order to offer an amendment to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks such an amendment could be offered, but not debated.

Mr. SPRINGER. If any gentleman on the other side of the Chamber desires to use five minutes in opposing this amendment I will yield to him.

Mr. COOMBS rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS].

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment now before the committee requiring every national bank to hold a large percentage of its reserve in gold coin and which is so ardently championed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] is, in my opinion, a very unwise one. It will force the banks to become hoarders of the precious metal, thus keeping it out of the channels of commerce, from the pockets of the people, and from the National Treasury. The case would be vastly different if the demand notes issued by Government were already withdrawn and if our system of redemption of bank notes was different.

The Government is now the agent of the banks for the redemption of their notes, the banks depositing a certain percentage on their circulation in gold in the Treasury for that purpose. They can therefore have no real necessity for carrying any large amount of gold in their vaults.

As long as the reserve is kept up in good securities their depositors are safe. If we force them to keep gold we force them to release and throw upon the markets the Treasury notes that they now hold for that purpose, and thus add another peril to the Treasury.

Gentlemen profess to deprecate the power already exercised by the banks. I do not concur in that opinion, but those of you who hold it should not add to their power by making them the holders and controllers of the people's gold. Our true policy is not to force artificial hoarding of it, but to make it accessible to the people and to the Government.

I sincerely hope that the time will come when, with our greenbacks and Treasury notes out of the way, some other plan for the redemption of national bank notes will be adopted—some agencies of their own be established at convenient centers and the Government be relieved of the necessity for intervening. Then we shall be in a position similar to England and France in the matter of protecting our holdings of gold against foreign demands. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], in a recent debate in this House, asked this very pertinent question: "If the Bank of France can, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to pay above a certain percentage of its bills in gold without injury to its credit, why can not the Government of the United States do the same?" That question was not fully answered.

Mr. HENDRIX. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I stated as my answer that the Bank of France is a bank and that the Government of the United States is a Government. That answer, I thought, was sufficient; but I should like to have the gentleman elaborate it.

Mr. COOMBS. It is true that your answer was in a sense a full one, but it will bear a great deal of elaboration. Government can not do what a private individual or a bank can do, particularly if upon that Government is imposed the enormous task of maintaining the parity between metals where no real parity exists.

If national banks, whose notes are redeemable in coin, redeemed them over their own counters they would pay that metal that would sustain their credit in their own communities. The Eastern banks would, in order to sustain their local credit, pay in gold; while the Western banks, in communities that profess to prefer silver, and where there is not so much use for gold, possibly might venture to rely upon that metal, or a proportion of it. At all events, the exercise of that option on their part would not entail such far-reaching consequences as it would if Government should undertake to do it.

cal matter that may well be considered. Government is, under the present system, not only obliged to maintain the integrity of its own notes, all of which it must redeem in gold, but is also, acting as agent of the banks, forced to assume the same attitude toward their notes—an attitude, judging from the results in France and England, that might, I think, possibly be changed without general disturbance were the banks free to act for themselves within the limits of the law in sustaining the credit of their notes.

The Bank of France practically sells its gold for a price, and England protects its holdings by its rate of interest and various devices of exchange. We interpose no obstacles of any kind, but in various ways furnish facilities for them to get it easily. One of those is the Government issue of notes, which are truly called endless chains to draw our gold from our vaults. They stand in the way of any remedy and should first of all be removed.

What I have said in relation to a change in the plan for the redemption of national-bank notes is simply in the way of suggestion; there may be something in it, and I hope that financiers will give it consideration.

It does not touch the ultimate redemption of the notes in gold in case the banks fail. In that case the government that holds the collateral security in the form of its own bonds should, acting as the agent of the note holders, realize upon the asset and pay off the notes.

I can not help believing that the friends of silver who stand so obstinately against the funding of these Government notes by doing so impede the more free acceptance of their favorite metal. The demand for gold for their redemption keeps the public mind in a constant state of apprehension, in that way creating a larger demand for gold and a prejudice against silver. You can not force the people to take silver if they do not want it, but you may by wise action make it more acceptable to them and secure for it a more general circulation.

It will never, however, be the standard of value. You may succeed in impeding remedial legislation and in that way bring disaster upon the country, but you can never force the people of this land to adopt a lower standard of values than exists in other nations of like intelligence and position. Let us vote down the amendment now under consideration; let us not force the banks to become the hoarders of gold. It would be a step in the wrong direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The debate under the rule is exhausted on this provision.

Mr. PENCE. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "certificates," insert: "And not less than half of such coin or coin certificates shall be in silver coin or silver certificates;" and add at the end of the section, "and not less than one-half of such cash reserve shall be at all times in silver coin or silver certificates."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable, debate having been exhausted by order of the House.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. PENCE; and on a division there were—ayes 27, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to strike out in the fifth line the words "gold certificates," and in line 12 strike out the words "gold certificates," so as to make it conform to the legislation which passed the House a few days ago by which gold certificates will be no longer issued—

The CHAIRMAN. The matter is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out the words "gold certificates."

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to this amendment as a new section to the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALKER) there were—ayes 27, noes 101.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the remaining paragraph of the bill and the amendment which is proposed to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of the preceding sections be, and they are hereby, repealed; and a sum sufficient to carry the provisions of this act into effect be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "That," in section 6, insert:

"So much of all laws and parts of laws as limit the amount of lawful money which may be deposited during any calendar month for the purpose of withdrawing national-bank circulation, or prohibit any national banking association from receiving any increase of its circulation during the period of six months from the time it shall have made any deposit of lawful money for the purpose of withdrawing its circulation, and also so much of."

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will be agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I would like to amend that section.

Mr. BRYAN. I want the House to understand what they are voting on.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York will explain this provision.

Mr. BRYAN. I will use my time first.

Now, the purpose of that provision of the law is to prevent the national banks from expanding or contracting the currency suddenly. The object of the pending amendment, however, is to take away all limitation in that regard and give the national banks power to contract or expand the currency at will. If we adopt this amendment we remove all the restrictions now existing and put ourselves absolutely at the mercy of the banks. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, our currency is now absolutely rigid with the exception of the national-bank currency. In 1882 or thereabouts the law was so amended as to leave that almost absolutely rigid. In other words, all the national banks of the country are allowed to withdraw their currency at a rate not greater than $3,000,000 a month; and in the case of any one bank which has withdrawn any part of its circulation such bank is not allowed to take out additional circulation for six months thereafter. The result of that has been to compel the national banks to keep in circulation during a time of the year when the currency is not needed to anything like the extent it is at other times practically the amount of circulation they propose to keep out during the whole year. It burdens, therefore, the increased circulation for a short period—a large part of which is used in the autumn, for instance—with the expense of carrying the circulation for the whole year, with the result of making it necessarily more expensive.

Now, it is a fact that a part of the amendment proposed will permit the national banks to retire currency when not wanted—in the spring, for example—at a rate at which they can not retire it now. But it permits them also promptly, when the currency is wanted, to come up to the full measure of the needs of the community, by permitting them to meet the demands for currency as the country and the business of the country needs it. It makes currency cheaper and gives them greater inducements to expand it.

The present situation is just as if a law should be enacted that a shoemaker should not sell shoes except at a certain rate per month in the year, but should always keep the same stock on hand. The result would be that we would have harder work to get shoes when we wanted them, and have a surplus when we did not, and the whole business would be made more expensive, for the shoemaker would be compelled to keep a larger stock on hand when not wanted, resulting necessarily in making shoes dearer to the consumers when they did want them.

It is simply a question of economy to put the banks in such a condition as best to provide for the needs of each community at the least expense to that community. The amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee might to a slight extent permit contraction when currency was not needed, but it would take away the bar which now prevents expansion when more currency is needed.

Mr. BRYAN. It is giving an elasticity to the currency with the banks holding both ends of the elastic.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I happen to remember the circumstances under which this provision that is now sought to be repealed was put upon the statute books. We had in the Forty-seventh Congress some very interesting and important legislation concerning the rechartering of national banks, respecting the rate of interest on our public debt, and kindred questions. Pending that, there were turned into the Treasury by the different national banks of the United States many millions in a marvelously short period. So marked was the rush to surrender circulation that it was thought that they put it in for the purpose of influencing legislation. And whether it was the purpose or not, the effect would be a panic; and the question was whether some check should not be put upon them. I have not read up the transactions since the date of its passage, but my memory is that the provision that this seeks to repeal was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, then a member of this House, now the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle. I know that, even in a House opposed to his party, the exigency was considered to be so great that he overrode opposition to it and put it upon the statute book.

Now, the amount that was withdrawn, as called to my attention by my friend from Missouri [Mr. HALL], was $18,000,000 in thirteen days; more than a million dollars a day. Therefore Congress then concluded that it was not wise to put power in the hands of the banks of the country to produce such a sudden contraction of the currency as to make it possible for them to force legislation which would not otherwise be had.

Mr. WARNER. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it would be agreeable for him to so divide the proposed amendment as to permit of a vote being taken on that part which permits a quicker contraction than is now given, and another vote upon the other part which provides for a more prompt expansion.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would be entirely willing to do that, Mr. Chairman, but the gentleman from New York, I think, will find if he reads up the legislation of that period—and I state it with some timidity now, because after the lapse of thirteen years, with the rapidity with which things occur here, it is hard to tell exactly what did occur—I think, let me repeat, he will find that this clause was coupled with the other, as a penalty on those banks that were rash enough to attempt to contract the currency for the purpose of influencing legislation. To put it beyond their power to contract or inflate at will, and put a penalty on them if they attempted the contraction. It might not be amiss for me also to say that there was such a pressure of the banks here to influence the veto that came from President Hayes on that legislation I have mentioned that all the older members of that Congress, so far as I know, felt that it was wise to pass it; and so important did the President of the United States, Mr. Garfield, feel that to be that he and his Secretary of the Treasury succeeded in getting the bankers together and getting them to make concessions by way of reduced rates of interest on bonds that Mr. Hayes had made impossible by his veto.

Mr. COOMBS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I know that these facts that he has spoken of were done under a condition of great excitement, but I would like to ask him this—if he does not remember during our last currency famine that the country suffered from this very law that was enacted under the peculiar conditions at that time?

Mr. McMILLIN. To what extent it suffered from that cause I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but I will state this, in answer to my friend from New York, that the Secretary of the Treasury told me—and I would not repeat it but for the fact that he has made that statement public in some communication to Congress—that a large amount of the circulation that was printed and issued to the national banks during that panic was returned to him as Secretary without the packages having been opened very soon after they were sent because the banks had no further use for it.

Mr. COOMBS. Because the panic had passed.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think, Mr. Chairman, that if more of it had been put in circulation instead of being returned immediately it would have blessed the country. I am opposed to repealing this restriction outright. I do not think the currency should be vastly contracted spasmodically and by combined action of the banks. This restraining enactment will do good rather than harm. The public has interests that should be guarded.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that again we must meet the insidious and persistent efforts of the money power in the form of another bond and currency bill in this present measure reported from our Committee on Banking and Currency. Although in this case the bill professes mainly to be for the issuance of bonds, the double purpose, as I construe the bill, is—

First. To secure the issuance of more bonds that bankers may invest the idle money deposited with them in forms certain of payment, exempt from taxation and good as a basis of issuing their own notes for circulation.

Second. That these bonds shall be made payable in gold instead of coin, thus placing it beyond the power of Congress and the people to use the option at all times so far maintained in the law, although not properly applied by our various Secretaries of the Treasury, of paying in silver as well as in gold.

Third. Of leaving the amount to be issued, the time of issuing, and the place of marketing these gold bonds entirely with the Executive, who has more than once, and in more than one Administration, shown a desire to inflate the bonded debt of the country, even in times of peace, while contracting the volume of legal-tender money, and with no reasonable excuse.

Fourth. To make these bonds, having such qualities as already mentioned, to be 50-year bonds, so to put out of the reach of this generation the power to rectify the wrong. There is in this an effort to fasten a perpetual debt upon our people in the form of interest-bearing gold bonds, where there should be a noninterest-bearing note of the Government issued instead, which the people would gladly absorb and use as currency at home, and thus not only save interest to the extent of many millions, but prevent foreign investors from getting our people under bondage (for that is what bonds mean) to them.

Fifth. The cry of the bankers for the destruction of the Government legal tenders now in circulation is also met with a complete surrender to the money power in destroying the only legal-tender paper money that the people can under this system possibly obtain.

Sixth. To still further grant every favor to the money power and take every favor away from the people it is designed to reduce the tax on national-bank issues from 1 per cent per annum to one-quarter of 1 per cent. This to aid the banks in their elasticity scheme.

Thus, first, with silver demonetized; second, legal-tender Treasury notes destroyed; third, gold bonds instead of coin bonds issued; fourth, bank notes to take the place of legal tenders; fifth, taxes or interest on these reduced to one-fourth of 1 per cent; sixth, and all of this arranged so that the banks can inflate and contract the volume of currency in circulation at their own sweet will. What more could Wall street demand?

Is there anything more that the people can surrender to the Anglo-American gold conspiracy? If so, either the conspirators have not yet thought it out or they have not yet thought the time opportune for demanding it.

THE PEOPLE HAVE BEEN OFTEN BETRAYED.

We are in this peculiar situation, which is humiliating indeed to every true Democrat and every lover of his country, that in presenting our objections and opposition and warding off the attack of these organized and syndicated vampires we find ourselves using the same arguments and weapons that the great demonetizer of 1873 used in his earlier and better days, to wit, the Senator-Secretary JOHN SHERMAN, before he had become completely servile to the gold power, and again, this second edition of the original demonetizer, the present Senator-Secretary of the Treasury, who also was but a few years ago found battling like an Ajax against the money power.

And last and smaller in their generation, a lot of cuckoo birdlets, not able yet to soar and sing, but with an ambition to serve in a most humble manner their masters of the gold and bond conspiracy.

If a patriotic Jefferson, or a brave and fearless Jackson, or any other great Democrat with like principles and love of justice, were President there would be said to the minions of the Anglo-American conspiracy in all places, as once was said in England by a great reformer to a mercenary crowd that assumed to legislate for tyranny and all corrupting powers in the name of the people:

Ye are a factious crew and enemies to all good government. Ye are a pack of mercenary wretches, and would, like Esau, sell your country for a mess of pottage. Gold is your god. Is there among you that hath the least care for the good of the commonwealth? Have ye not defiled this place and turned this temple into a den of thieves? * * * You who were deputed here by the people to get their grievances redressed are yourselves become their greatest grievance.

In my humble judgment there were no greater encroachments upon the rights of the people when those words were uttered than is now imminent, while the gold worshipers seek to destroy both the silver and the greenback money of the country and deliver our country over wholly to the gold conspiracy.

But we have neither a Jackson nor a Jefferson nor a follower of these great patriotic heroes in the seat of executive power at this time. Nor, to do proper honor to a great patriot of the early and uncorrupted days of the Republican party, let me say, we have no brave, patient, humanity-loving Lincoln at the head of affairs to stand as best he could, and did, against the money powers of his day that hovered like vultures over the nation in its great crisis and struggle with slavery.

It is said of Lincoln that almost the only time when he exhibited anger at the opposition so often scheming to embarrass him was when he referred to the treachery and false pretenses and mercenary schemers from Wall street and the gold and bond markets.

At another time he wrote to a friend in Illinois that letter full of warning as to the future when he said of the civil war:

Yes; it has been indeed a trying hour for the Republic; but I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed.

What a contrast to the Presidents who have succeeded of late years!

LINCOLN'S PROPHECIES WERE TOO TRUE.

Let me quote from our present Secretary of the Treasury some few of his words when he was battling so bravely against the conspirators that now, as it seems to me, he willingly serves. I have quoted him more at length in a former address to this House when I was speaking against the former Carlisle-Springer currency bill:

Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce, and industry.

Mr. Carlisle was then the friend of silver, and saw that it was all necessary to keep up the proper supply of currency. But I wish to use him as a witness to the conspiracy of the money power that he knew existed then, and we all know that it still is working just as certainly now, even though the honorable Secretary may have gone into its service.

According to my view on the subject the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one-half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age. The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilence, and famine that ever occurred in the history of the world.

What a strong and severe enemy to the gold conspirators was Mr. Carlisle in those days, and how humiliating it is to us who still fight the gold power to find that he has deserted us!

Let not the defenders of the honorable Secretary and his financial measures in this House blame anyone to-day for using harsh terms against the conspirators that are still trying to get the American people in absolute serfdom to the money power. We have now far more evidence accumulated against the conspiracy than when Mr. Carlisle, in 1878, was talking of the "conspiracy" "here and in Europe," and declaring the "misery" that would follow this "scheme" to be greater than "all the wars, pestilence, and famine in the history of the world."

FEATURES OF THE PENDING BILL.

But the present bill involves, as I have said, the destruction of our greenback currency to follow the continued demonetization of silver, and at the same time enlarges the power of the national banks on gold bonds, at one-fourth their former expense of taxation, to expand and contract the currency at their own option and without regard to the losses entailed upon the rest of mankind for their gain. Let us have Carlisle in his patriotic days speak to answer Carlisle in these days of his servility. We quote now from his great and masterly speech of March 1, 1881, against the right of national banks to contract the currency or even to exist, except as aids in marketing bonds, for which purpose they were allowed to base a currency issue on deposit of bonds.

Speaking of the power of banks to contract the currency he says:

It is not going too far to say that until this feature is wholly eliminated or materially modified there can be no assurance of safety to any legitimate investment or business enterprise in this country.

He then condemns the fraud now called "elasticity," the contracting of the money volume in circulation, as we condemn it now. He was right then, as we are right now, and he made arguments against the dangers of contraction when left to the banks that neither he nor anyone else now can answer. Further along he arraigns the banks for contracting the circulation—"within thirteen days they have contracted the currency to the extent of $18,722,340." He exclaims in the same speech that—

When Secretary McCulloch, several years since, in pursuance of his contraction policy, began to retire and cancel legal-tender notes at the rate of $1,000,000 per month, it produced such consternation in business circles that Congress was forced to intervene at once and arrest the process by the passage of a joint resolution; but now we have seen nearly $19,000,000 of circulation withdrawn in less than half a month, not by the Government but by institutions in the management of which the Government has no voice, and still gentlemen here insist that the power under which this has been done, and under which it may at any time be repeated, shall not be taken away. Why, sir, the whole contraction of legal-tender Treasury notes under the provisions of the resumption act, from January 14, 1875, to May 31, 1878, when it was prohibited by law, was only $34,318,984, not twice as much in more than three years as the bank contraction has been in less than two weeks.

This experience warns us that we can not safely permit this great power to remain in the hands of these institutions unchecked by legal restrictions. It is an engine of destruction standing in the very narrowest part of the way to permanent industrial and commercial prosperity in this country.

We protest, therefore, now and continuously, against any further following after the "schemes" of the "conspiracy here and in Europe." Let the present Administration, if it can, find proper and sufficient answer to the arguments made by its own present Secretary.

But this pending bill is against the Carlisle of former days and even recently in another respect. No other nation makes any such promises to pay in specific coin of one metal (gold) as Mr. Carlisle himself and the gold power he now serves aim to force this Congress to do. Although he is speaking in regard to gold certificates instead of gold bonds, yet the principle is the same and the statement concerning other nations is equally true in regard to payment on all kinds of obligations.

Before the Committee on Appropriations in this present session of Congress, in answering the following questions, notice Mr. Carlisle's own testimony:

Mr. COOMBS. I would like to ask in this connection, do European countries have gold certificates?

Secretary CARLISLE. Not that I am aware of. I do not at this moment think of any Government except the United States which issues a certificate based specifically upon any particular coin.

What, then, must we think of this remarkable effort of the honorable Secretary to get fifty-year bonds issued payable specifically in gold? The conspiracy of the European gold power that he once so clearly pointed out is still working, and he seems now to favor it.

THE GREAT ORIGINAL AMERICAN DEMONETIZER.

Let me quote a few sentences from that former and great original demonetizer, the honorable Senator SHERMAN, who, also, prior to the specie resumption act, had many words of warning against the policies he has since so successfully and fatally pressed into legislation, and it may be properly noted that he still leads his Republican party on financial questions, and it would seem leads, also, a few so-called Democrats who espouse the cause of the money power.

Speaking of the progressive contraction of the currency then going on, Senator JOHN SHERMAN, in 1869, said:

The contraction of the currency is a far more distressing thing than Senators suppose. Our own and other nations have gone through that process before. It is not possible to take that voyage without the sorest distress. To every person except a capitalist out of debt, or a salaried officer, or an annuitant, it is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy, and disaster. * * * To attempt this is to impose upon our people by arresting them in the midst of their lawful business, and applying a new standard of value to their property, without any deduction of their debts, or giving them any opportunity to compound with their creditors, or to distribute their losses, and would be an act of folly without example of evil in modern times.

This was said as against contracting even the paper money of the country. Since this time he has been advocating both the destruction of our legal tenders through the specie-resumption law and the demonetization of silver in the law of 1873, and is now the leading "financial weathercock" for the present Administration.

The Democratic platform called for the repeal of the Sherman Act of 1890 "as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with possibilities of danger in the future."

But after the election Mr. SHERMAN, to save that part of the cunning makeshift which is the so-called "parity clause," announced through an interview a few weeks preceding the call of the extra session, from his home in Ohio, to the effect that the parity clause must not be repealed, but only the "purchase clause;" and thus he gave the cue by which to save the gold standard and again demonetize silver, and forthwith the President, carrying out the suggestions of the "weathercock of finance," as he has been called, convened Congress in extra session to combine Republicans and a sufficiency of Democrats to repeal the purchase clause and retain all the rest of the "makeshift."

But they of the gold worshippers tell us, Mr. Chairman, that we must pass this bill to sell bonds and raise gold to keep up the "parity," which they use as an excuse for suppressing silver payment. They thus keep the gold of the Treasury subject to raids of the bankers and exporters, who are thus pumping gold out of the Treasury on the gold-redemption plan in place of the coin redemption which would stop the raid if duly enforced almost instantly.

Let us hear JOHN SHERMAN again as to the right and propriety of paying silver on coin obligations as a sure protection of the Treasury gold. He was before a Senatorial committee about three weeks after the passage of the Bland law of 1878, while he was Secretary of the Treasury. I quote brief fragments of his testimony, having quoted him more fully in my remarks on currency last month:

JOHN SHERMAN'S TESTIMONY AS SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Resumption can be maintained more easily upon a double standard than upon a single standard. The bulky character of silver would prevent payments in it, while gold, being more portable, would be more freely demanded, and I think resumption can be maintained with a less amount of silver than of gold alone.

Senator BAYARD. You are speaking of resumption upon the basis of silver, or of silver and gold?

Secretary SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I think it can be maintained better upon a bimetallic, or alternative standard, than upon a single one, and with less accumulation of gold. In this way remonetization of silver would rather aid resumption.

He then shows how readily our bonds are absorbed by our own people on a bimetallic basis—payable in silver as well as gold—at the rate of a million and a quarter per day upon their returning from Europe. This shows that there is really no need of selling specific gold bonds unless it is simply to please Europe, and even in this respect as Sherman pointed out it is better for our country that the bonds stay at home. He further says for bimetalism:

Our mere right to pay in silver would deter a great many people from presenting notes for redemption who would readily do so if they could get the lighter and more portable coin in exchange. Besides, gold coin can be exported, while silver coin could not be exported, because its market value is less than its coin value. * * *

Senator Bayard, of the committee, asked him:

How long do you suppose this short supply of silver and your control of it by your coinage will keep it equivalent to gold, when one is worth 10 cents less than the other?

Mr. SHERMAN answers:

Just so long as it can be used for anything that gold is used for. It will be worth in this country the par of gold until it becomes so abundant and bulky that people will become tired of carrying it about; but in our country that can be avoided by depositing it for coin certificates.

BANKS SHOULD HAVE NO POWER TO CONTRACT VOLUME.

I am opposed now and all the time to giving to the banks or to any private institution any power whatever over the volume of currency. Whoever controls the currency in its volume, whoever has the power to increase or decrease it, controls thereby the ups and downs of prices, controls the prices of wheat, and cotton, and corn, and beef, and all the products of the country. We are constantly hearing gentlemen talk on this floor as if we were bound in all financial or monetary matters to legislate in the interest of the banks. Sir, there are some 69,000,000 of people outside of the banks who have some rights that ought to be considered here. [Applause.]

This "elasticity" that we hear so much about is an utter fraud against 69,000,000 of the people of this country. They can not protect their prices or their opportunities or their business if you give into the hands of the banks the control of the volume of the currency, for, I repeat, whoever controls the volume of the currency controls prices, as I demonstrated in my speech delivered here on January 8.

In my remarks on that occasion, adding my humble contribution to the defeat of the Carlisle currency bill, I quoted such an array of authorities who stand as the great writers and financiers of the modern world that I presume no one who considers that galaxy of brilliant witnesses will ever again question that the chief element in the control of the general range of prices is the volume of currency in circulation in relation to the volume of exchanges and payments dependent upon currency.

And further, we have shown that the material of which currency is composed is not an essential element in relation to price. I am aware that there is one gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who holds on to the exploded theory that prices of commodities or the reciprocal value of our dollars is controlled by the cost of production of the precious metals. He therefore must hold, since demonetization of silver, that the cost of gold production regulates prices of products and the purchasing power of money. He may possibly draw his inspiration and enlightenment on the money question from that end of the Avenue that never seemingly consults either the lessons of history or the needs of mankind.

But surely anyone, even without the help of the great teachers and writers I have quoted in my former speech, on a moment's reflection ought to comprehend that demonetization and remonetization laws and laws for issuing paper dollars for general circulation, whether legal tender or not, have so much to do with increasing or decreasing the supply, that is, the abundance or scarcity of money in circulation, that the mining of gold, or of silver either, is and can be only incidental to the main question.

Money is the creature of law and not of nature or of mines. This has been more or less clearly seen by wise men for at least two thousand years.

In this discussion to-day I will only enumerate the names of persons quoted and refer those who wish the fuller quotations to my former remarks as published. They are such authorities as John Stuart Mill, Paulus, the Roman jurisconsult; the Justinian Pandects, John Locke, David Hume, Fichte, Ricardo, William Huskisson, Sir James Graham, Torrens, Professor De Colange, Professor Sidgwick, of Cambridge; Prof. Stanley Jevons, J. R. McCulloch, Lord Overstone, Professor Fawcett, N. A. Nicholson, of Oxford; Earl Grey, Prof. Shield Nicholson, of Edinburgh; Professor Perry, of Williams College; Alexander Delmar, Henry D. MacLeod; and I think of many others who could be cited to prove the same proposition that I have endeavored to enforce upon the attention of Congress.

VOLUME OF CURRENCY CIRCULATING CONTROLS PRICES IN GENERAL.

Then who should control the volume of money in circulation, all money, paper as well as coin?

Surely the Government itself should control the entire volume designed for general circulation, and to do this requires control of paper money as well as coin.

But, in behalf of the bank and bond and gold scheme, there will be invoked all the sophistries and ridicule and false pleas and misleading prophecies that can be brought forward against those of us who have stood for sound and sensible teaching on the money question and the rights of the laboring world to a more equitable money, adequate in volume to meet the needs of mankind and maintain the general range of prices.

SOME PROPHECIES VERIFIED.

Ernest Seyd, the great bullion expert of the Bank of England and a remarkable man in more ways than one, said of the gold conspiracy even two years before it accomplished the demonetization of silver:

The strong doctrinarism existing in England as regards the gold valuation is so blind that when the time of depression sets in there will be this special feature: The economical authorities of the country will refuse to listen to the cause here foreshadowed [the general decline of prosperity all over the world if the gold standard be adopted by other nations of which he had spoken]; every possible attempt will be made to prove that the decline of commerce is due to all sorts of causes and irreconcilable matters; the workman and his strike will be the first target; then "speculating" and "overtrading" will have their turn; many other allegations will be made totally irrelevant to the real issue, but satisfactory to the moralizing tendency of financial writers.

Note the singular precision with which the sophisms and false teaching of the gold power in these days of commercial depression were pointed out by such clear-seeing men as Ernest Seyd, who at such times spoke as an expert and statesman, although at other times as a hireling, notably when sent as a hired attorney to this country preceding the accomplishment of silver demonetization.

COUNT WOŁOWSKI'S PROPHECY.

I desire also to give you the prophecy of Count Wołowski in 1868, regarding the effect of the demonetization of silver should it be forced upon European, and American nations.

After pointing out the disasters that would follow, he says:

One of the principal difficulties in this period of general depression will be that the people will look for its causes in all possible directions. The advocates of the gold standard will offer all possible fantastic and groundless excuses and reasons of a secondary nature only, and the real cause—the demonetization of silver—will be overlooked until dire necessity shall force thinking men to point it out.

Throughout the world a decline in prices will follow, injurious alike to owners of real property and the laboring classes, and advantageous only—and unjustly so—to the owners of State bonds and similar securities.

Another prophecy is that of Thomas Carlyle, the philosopher, still further back, given mainly from his clear comprehension of the methods of the plutocratic forces to overcome the rights of labor.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S PROPHECY.

More than thirty years ago Carlyle wrote:

The Republic west of us will have its trial period, its darkest of all hours. It is traveling the high road to that direful day. And this scourge will not come amid famine's horrid stride, nor will it come by ordinary punitive judgments. It will come as a hiatus in statecraft, a murderous bungle in policy. It will be when health is intact, crops abundant, and the munificent hand open. Then so-called statesmen will cry overproduction, the people will go to the ballot-box amid hunger and destitution, but surrounded by the glitter of self-rule, and ratify by their ballots the monstrous falsehood, overproduction, uttered by mis-statesmen, and vindicate by the same ballot the infamous lie overproduction, thrown upon the breeze by servile editors through a corrupt press, and thus bring ruin upon his country, serfdom upon himself, and oppression upon his children.

We who live to-day and behold the mad rush of the gold conspirators to ride still on over suffering humanity, a humanity whose rights to the fruits of their toil are so grossly outraged, whose prices on products of labor are so broken down, whose opportunities to meet and pay their creditors and taxgatherers on terms of equitable payment are so completely destroyed, whose values and ownerships are destroyed and wiped out by the appreciation of money, and whose spirit of enterprise and progress and hope of betterment and free homes for themselves and children are so crushed by the onward sweep of the gold and bond and bank conspiracy, is it not time, if we be men and not dull brutes or mercenary cravens, that we oppose this conspiracy? [Applause.]

WHERE DO YOU STAND IN THE GREAT CONFLICT?

And where are our great papers and news journals to-day, where our orators and lawyers and even the clergy and all of those who sell their words and arguments and eloquence and influence for hire? Is it strange that beholding the might of intellect and power of position all arrayed on the side of the gold conspiracy the people become discouraged? And is it strange to any thoughtful mind that morality and character and love of country shall all decline under the withering blast of this strongly felt, although partially unseen, empire of wealth that leaps over mountain ranges and ocean barriers to fasten its venal wealth-sucking tentacles on every form of production and enterprise?

But it is on the part of labor and enterprise a fight for existence, a fight for life, and this contest will go on and on and on until either man or money is brought into complete subjection the one to the other.

If mankind can not win by the peaceful and deliberate methods—if corruption of the ballot, of legislatures, of courts, and of Administrations shall crystallize into a hard encrustation, threatening civilization and the rights of man with destruction, then the earthquake will come, will come whether you and I will it or not, will come and rend assunder the crusts and covering of injustice and let in the sunlight of heaven, and the judgments higher than those of man will be executed again on the earth.

These judgments may come attended with fire and sword, and terror and blood, and suffering and death; but revolutions such as this are the great, deep impulses of God sweeping through the hearts and consciences of mankind, and they are of a purifying and cleansing nature.

Equity and fraternity are the decrees of Heaven, and must be regarded among men upon the earth.

But be not deceived. Humanity is a great, massive, and impulsive giant with an instinct of preservation and a conscious apprehension of justice that will ultimately turn on its mercenary and tyrannical oppressors and grind to the earth their hoarded properties and vested wrongs, often improperly called vested rights, and all civilization will tremble at the excesses of its retaliation.

Can this possible culmination to a world-wide conspiracy to rob and enslave humanity be prevented? Only by doing the right thing now and here, and overthrowing the conspiracy of the gold mongers and hurling the conspirators and all of their hireling forces from places of governmental power.

In this America must lead. America, the hope of the world. America, the champion of free government and the rights of mankind. America, theegis of human liberty and justice! [Applause.]

The overthrow of the gold power by America to-day would be the most glorious achievement possible to fall to the lot of any nation, and it can be done if the proper word is uttered by you in this great national Congress.

It is but to reply and answer No, to the gold power here and elsewhere, and to all of its minions high and low, when they come forward with their aggressions upon the money of the people and the rights of man to an equitable and adequate standard of payment, an equitable currency of account and exchange and good prices, and when they ask us to place all money for payment and commerce out of the reach of the laboring and wealth-producing people. It is forever to say no. No, to all of their propositions until they shall give back and concede to the people of this country again their silver as a standard money of payment and the right of our sovereign nation to coin, issue, and furnish a national currency of both legal-tender paper and legal-tender coin without any further interference from any source whatever.

And I would, if I could, teach all men in America to treat as an enemy to our rights, our liberty, and our national sovereignty all who plot and scheme by any measures whatever to deprive this nation of the untrammelled right at all times to coin, issue, and maintain its own money, and maintain it in volume sufficient to maintain prices and prosperity.

FURTHER EVIDENCES OF A CONSPIRACY.

Mr. J. W. Schuckers, once private secretary to Secretary Chase during the war, has recently said in his able letters to Henry Carey Baird, of Philadelphia:

I seek to present the case, the fact, and the proofs that the panic of 1893 was the result of a deliberately determined conspiracy; that it originated in Wall street; that it was organized in Wall street; that it was engineered from Wall street, and that in its front stood a half score lawless and reckless bank presidents.

He then follows this with some remarkable evidence that shows how daring and reckless the gold power at times has been; but for this I must refer you to his own recently published pamphlet on the Conspiracy of New York Bank Presidents.

The conspiring of the national-bank presidents, with the newly-appointed subtreasurer, Mr. Conrad N. Jordan, and Mr. Carlisle as the intermediary counselors between the White House and the Wall street financiers, together with their frequent secret meetings and conferences in April and May, just before the turning loose of their object-lesson panic of 1893, are matters generally known and acknowledged.

But the effort to get the unconditional repeal of the silver-purchase clause through in the closing months of the Fifty-second Congress have not been so often noted.

This was urged by Mr. Cleveland's friends upon the Republicans fearing and indeed discovering by the "cute" New York newspaper interview and polling methods that the newly elected Democratic majority of the incoming Fifty-third Congress could not be relied upon to do the bidding of the gold mongers.

First, Henry Villard was sent in January, 1893, to confer with SHERMAN and others, among them being some so-called "leading Democrats" (I would say misled Democrats), to see if the anti-silver purposes of Wall street and Mr. Cleveland could be carried out before the adjournment of that Congress. He failed in his mission.

Next, in February Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, came, as it has been said, "clothed with more extensive powers than Henry Villard." The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, in a published dispatch of February 1, said:

Don Manuel Dickinson came to the city last night and has spent the day in consultation with Democratic leaders. The repeal of the silver law never before received such an agitation. * * * The word has gone out among Democrats that this act must be repealed at this session. * * * Mr. Cleveland has it in his power to make matters very uncomfortable for certain silver Democrats. The question of the patronage will be an important one after March 4. The scare is pretty general. * * * There is no doubt that this second expression of President-elect Cleveland will bear fruit. He gave his first intimation when Henry Villard came to the city and consulted with Democratic members of Congress. The second can not be misunderstood.

No; it was not misunderstood, but the people's representatives among the Democrats stood their ground.

In the same issue the New York Herald in an editorial, speaking doubtless with full consent of the machine and Wall street interests which it always loyally supports, said:

As a party man, as an upholder of the regular organization, as a vindicator of the machine, Mr. Cleveland will stand on firm ground when he declares that every aspirant for office, patronage, favor, or any consideration will be expected to line up for the repeal of the silver law.

The New York Times spoke on the same day in a similar tone, but it would seem that the plans of the Republico-Democratic-Wall-street combination failed of accomplishment.

Then, after the inauguration, and after the close and secret conferences of which I have spoken between the national-bank presidents and agents and officials of the Executive, to which on one special occasion, April 24, in the subtreasury office, the members of trust companies and representatives of the great foreign banking houses in Wall street were also invited. After this, and immediately after the conference of the bank presidents on the 27th with the Secretary of the Treasury, the furies were uncaged and the dogs of financial war against the South and West and into all regions tributary to New York as a money center were turned loose.

The great and threatened "object lesson of panic" was sent sweeping over the country to do its deadly work of ruin and commercial disaster and bring the West and South and all antigold-power regions into servile subjection to the schemes and dictation of Wall street and the Anglo-American gold conspiracy.

Mr. Carlisle's former comparisons of the destructive character of the gold-standard conspiracy with the misery entailed by wars, pestilence, and famine was proving to be true.

The record of disaster, failing banks, mercantile houses, mills, factories, and all the more enterprising purposes and industries of the people and the rapid transference of the wealth from the ownership of those who earned it to those who speculate and scheme for it through financial legislation and manipulation has never perhaps been exceeded in this country in so short a time. The highways were soon filled with tramping thousands and suffering spread rapidly on every hand.

The clergymen and good religious people who still keep voting to help enforce the gold standard and its ruinous effect on prices and industry in this country were called upon in almost every city, both East and West, to contribute to and organize and carry into operation soup houses and relief societies.

JOHN SHERMAN's prophecies were also proving to be true, as well as those of Mr. Carlisle and others whom we have already quoted.

But Wall street schemers were cold-hearted and determined in their purpose to carry out their part of the international, as well as the national, movement to wipe silver legislation from the face of the commercial world.

How deep and extensive was this dark conspiracy with the gold mongers and Jewish syndicates of Europe, or to what extent the Executives of our own nation for recent years may have been involved in it, is a secret that may never be fully revealed.

But on the 25th of June, 1893, not by action of the people of India, but by the tyrannical powers that govern India, the Indian mints were also closed to silver, where silver had been used from time immemorial. This was at once used in this country to work a scare upon our people just as the panic in relation to silver repeal was being worked as a scare in Europe.

So the President issued a call on the 30th of June for an extra session of Congress for the purpose of reaping the harvest of an unconditional repeal of the last vestige of silver use and the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes in purchase of silver. To secure the issuance of gold bonds was another part of the Wall street programme, but although the cuckoo Democrats aided the Sherman-Reed Republicans to carry the great "unconditional," yet the Democrats in Congress were too solidly against giving the President any authority whatever to issue bonds. And so this part of the Wall street programme failed.

Now another effort is being made here in this pending bill to get the bond issue authorized and the retirement of greenbacks provided for, that all legal-tender paper money may be destroyed or taken out of circulation.

It must not and, as far as my vote and influence may go, it shall not be done.

Does anyone believe, with all the evidences of the last few years, and especially of the last two years, before him, that the excessive raids on the gold in the Treasury are for other purposes or reasons than to prejudice the people against the legal-tender greenbacks and Treasury notes issued by the Government, thus to fool the people, destroy their legal-tender money, and issue gold bonds instead?

Only one other purpose can exist—that of getting gold to a premium for their profit.

I must regard him as to some degree at least stupid or hypnotized by a too steady gazing upon the yellow metal who can not see through these movements and the scheme of the gold bank and bond conspiracy with which we have been compelled to contend, not only during this Congress but for many years since this scheme for contraction, demonetization, and confiscation of the wealth produced by the laboring world was first made plainly manifest under Grant's Administrations.

While the destructive forces for contracting circulation and loans was being cruelly pushed forward the New York Tribune coolly said (May 7, 1893):

The effort of the Administration to bring the West and the South to a full realization of the inevitable consequences of compulsory purchases of silver bullion—

The inexcusable and tyrannous trick of bank contraction, I would rather say—has brought distress and perhaps ruin to many innocent persons; but there is no reason to suppose that it will be relaxed.

The Tribune's own political party was the main strength of the Administration through all this dark and devious way of the gold conspiracy. After a month of financial disaster the New York Sun, on the 7th of June, in its money article, said:

The presidents of the New York banks think that the so-called "object lesson" has been carried far enough. * * * They see nothing to be gained by a further shrinkage in values and unsettling of credits.

I commend this last quotation to the pious consideration of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. SPRINGER], who has brought in here this pending bill and who in his late article in the North American Review tries so hard, yet so vainly, to ignore the doctrine and practice so well comprehended in Wall street, as well as all over the civilized world, that values are made to shrink and gains to accrue at times to the banks by their contraction of currency and credits. He tries vainly to prove that cost of mining and producing the precious metals is the controlling element in the value of money. As we have previously endeavored to show by reason, by history, and by a long and unchallenged array of financial authorities, the chiefest element of control and regulation in the value of money and the consequent general range of prices on commodities is the volume or quantity of money in circulation. This is the "most elementary proposition" of monetary science, says John Stuart Mill.

On the 27th of June, 1893, two days after the demonetization decree of the British Government in India in its cooperative movement with the allied conspirators in this country and three days before the call for the extra session, an oracle of the gold and bond speculators of New York, Henry Clews's Financial Review, said, in clamoring for an extra session of Congress to be called by the President:

There is every reason why Congress should be brought together at the very earliest possible day. The houses that were engaged until lately in shipping gold became so zealous in that enterprise that they tried to outstrip each other. The result was that more gold was actually shipped than Europe required. The natural result must appear in the return of the surplus thus exported. Exchange has now fallen, indeed, to the specie-importing point. As soon as our crops ripen there will be inevitably a return of a good deal of gold to the country. One of the arguments in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law has been that the baser metal has driven the finer metal out of the country. In a little while, with gold returning to us, the strength of that argument will be sapped. An early session of Congress will leave the argument still in full force.

Yes, gold being shipped largely to Europe for the very purpose of scaring silver advocates and advancing the schemes of the money power in Congress was sure to return upon this country by the laws of legitimate trade before they could get their legislation through unless they hurried the call for the extra session. Oh, what tricks, what perfidy, what venality, what consummate selfishness, what disregard of right and justice, what cruelty to suffering and unsuspecting humanity!

Has their diabolism ever been excelled? Did ever vultures tear at the vitals of their victims with a more cool and heartless cruelty?

And so by false and cunning statements and manipulations of gold exports and redemption of greenbacks in gold raids, and by every trick known to stockjobbers and gamblers, the gold conspirators still work to deceive the people and still endeavor by every known method to capture votes in Congress to carry forward their gold-standard bond and bank tyrannies. Yet I believe they are again doomed to defeat.

This bill and all of the substitutes are presented and urged with but little chance of success. What I most fear is a reorganization of the gold forces and money power on new lines, in which the Republicans will come to the front to "save the country," as they would falsely term their movements, by combination here in the House under their present gold-standard leaders and almost solid gold-standard ranks, and under the generalship of JOHN SHERMAN in the Senate, whose stratagems and peculiar methods have given him great prestige as a leader and won for him and his coworkers dozens of victories on hard-fought financial battlefields, and that thus the gold forces in a Republico-Cleveland-Cuckoo combination may yet secure the destruction of the legal tenders yet remaining and the forcing of the Government upon a perpetual gold-bond debt and bank-issue policy.

Last month the Washington Star gives away to the public some of the reserved information that hovers about us here in Washington. On January 11, 1895, it says concerning Senator SHERMAN's importance and ability in behalf of Wall street interests:

HIS WORK ON THE SILVER REPEAL.

This leads to discussion of the part Mr. SHERMAN took in the repeal of the bullion-purchasing clause of the silver act bearing his name. The assertion has always been made in Washington that it was the advice of the Ohio Senator that finally prevailed in that fight. His participation in the open debate in the Senate was conspicuous, but his principal service, as is claimed, was performed in the conferences that were held. Many of these were nonpartisan, and Mr. SHERMAN took part in them upon the ground that as the question was one affecting the welfare of the whole country it was his duty to assist Mr. Cleveland fully as much as if the occupant of the White House were a Republican. That Mr. SHERMAN was fully consulted during the contest both by Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle has long been an open secret, and that it was his criticism of the compromise offered by the silver men which induced the President to reject it, and thereby force unconditional repeal in the end, is openly asserted and believed by many of the best informed men in political life.

It can be stated that many Democrats would value his assistance very greatly, and would not for a moment doubt its unselfishness because rendered by a Republican leader to an embarrassed Democratic Administration. But some of the Southern men, who have grown up in opposition to every prominent stand Mr. SHERMAN has ever taken, would prefer to see the Sherman leadership, if essential to solve the problem, exercised in circumstances of Republican control and responsibility. These men, therefore, do not look with disapproval on the proposition for an extra session, but rather hold that, all things considered, such a step would be both logical and effective. They do not hesitate to admit that the President and Mr. SHERMAN are in much closer accord on the money question than the President and the Southern leaders are, and hence if it is the Sherman view that, in any part, is to prevail, they think it would be franker and better to await the day, which need not be distant, when the Ohio Senator, in the full panoply of party leadership, would be able to take the field and carry out in person his own plan of action. It is admitted at the same time, however, that the situation is becoming so grave a delay of only three months might be attended with the most alarming consequences to the business of the whole country. The suggestion is made that the panic of 1893 developed in less time, and got entirely beyond the control of Congress.

"It was his (SHERMAN's) duty to assist Mr. Cleveland," says this editor and supporter of the gold scheme, "fully as much as if the occupant of the White House were a Republican," and "that Mr. SHERMAN was fully consulted during the contest both by Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle has long been an open secret."

Yes, the leader of the Republican forces on all financial questions, the silver demonetizer and contractionist and the ever-persistent enemy of the people's interests in their efforts to withstand the conspiracies of the money power, is taken into close and secret and frequent consultation by this that should be a Democratic Administration—this is what has so thoroughly disgusted nearly all true Democrats in Congress and has cost the party such extensive defeat at the late elections.

"The people want relief," is a frequent cry; but not such relief as the Wall street-JOHN SHERMAN combinations would give them. SHERMAN is, and has been since 1873, the careful and vigilant guardian of European bond holders and goldholders' interests.

Mr. Gordon Clark, once editor of the North American Review, author of a most excellent recent book called "Shylock," exposing the conspiracy of the Anglo-American gold conspiracy and the part that JOHN SHERMAN has played in their movements, has well said:

The American people must learn the lesson of money or they are lost. * * * Shall England impose her plan of white slavery upon the people of the United States? War with England—and not a financial war, but a conflict of powder and dynamite—would be more merciful, better, and cheaper in the end than to permit the permanent infliction upon us of her present money conspiracy.

The conspiracy producing the panic of 1893 used their "scare" circulars to make it clearly understood that their demands for the silver-purchase repeal bill must be complied with. In one they said, as has been quoted on this floor heretofore—

The interests of national bankers require immediate financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired and the national bank notes upon a gold basis made the only money. This will require the authorization of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one-third of your circulation and call in one-half of your loans. Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men.

In another, dated August 19, 1893, at the rooms of the American Bankers' Association, No. 2 Wall street, they used these suggestive words:

* * * The President of the United States having convened Congress in extra session and recommended to it such repeal, the power of public opinion should be brought to bear upon Congress to induce favorable action thereon.

The next day, speaking of the bankers' panic, the Chicago Inter Ocean, a Republican paper, said:

When the future historian tells the world of the great financial panic of 1893 he will say: "In the winter and spring months of that year the New York bankers and financiers sowed the wind and during the summer months reaped the whirlwind." We know no arrangement of words that can more graphically describe the action of New York financiers and the results of that action. * * * Nor are the New York bankers alone to blame. Those of Boston and Philadelphia come in for their share. They were only excelled by the New Yorkers because of the greater importance and opportunity of the latter.

Early in the winter a bank president, conversing with a Chicago man of business, said to him: "Mr. Jones, we are going to make the West pay up this summer." "But why should you press your Western debtors this summer?" asked Mr. Jones. The reply was: "Well, we think it would make you a little more thoughtful about currency matters, and drive you from your foolish ideas about silver."

But the conspiracy is still alive and full of selfish energy and greedy complexity. What it may yet accomplish no one can foresee; but that in the interest of humanity and good government and safety to the Republic it ought to be crushed and defeated at every turn every Congressman can see that is not in some way bound to its support.

Their cry just now is, "Bonds to save the credit and keep up the gold reserve," and "Destruction to the greenback." And why? Because they, the very fellows who keep up this clamor, can use it to raid the Treasury of its gold reserve. How totally false their pretense!

They should not have bonds. No kind of bond should be issued.

The greenbacks should be preserved; they are the best money. All coin obligations should be paid in coin, both silver and gold. The raids of these mercenaries should stop if met with silver.

The monopoly of gold is broken if silver is put forward.

Gold, $500,000,000 of it, at a premium of 20 per cent, is not one-hundredth part so bad for the people as prices and valuations of $60,000,000,000 of property and products at a discount of 20 to 30 per cent forced upon all by the tyrannous appreciation of gold.

Debts, both public and private, can be easily paid and prosperity and equity secured by breaking this artificial and legislative monopoly of gold.

And who knows how soon gold may be forced to a premium by the bank syndicate itself for the temporary advantage that it would give those who are withdrawing and hoarding gold now?

Do not be alarmed; let the shylocks have their way for a little time and overthrow, by their own folly and greed, the monopoly of gold rather than give them the bonds demanded and destroy $500,000,000 of legal-tender Government money.

Gold at a premium under such circumstances may prove a blessing rather than a curse to the people who need a cheaper and more equitable money, and the consequent rise in prices that will enable them to pay debts more equitably, rather than a longer domination of the now too high and dishonestly appreciated gold standard dollar.

So, I would say to the conspirators, come on with your threatened gold premium; your momentary triumph will be turned into a defeat and a break down of your infamous scheme to enslave our people.

The New York World very recently has raised a very pertinent question for the Wall-street bankers to answer, and so far no proper reply is offered. The World says, editorially:

The banks have no apparent use for gold.

They have absolutely no obligations of any kind, near or remote, which are payable in gold.

Nevertheless these banks are hoarding gold in large quantities at a time when to do so is to subject the Government to heavy and needless expense. * * *

Thus the clearing-house banks of New York alone hold over $1,000,000 in gold for which they have no use.

I would like to suggest here that they have drawn most of this by gold raids upon our Treasury with that "terrible" greenback which they keep in hand as far as they can for this purpose. They will buy gold bonds with their gold if they can make such terms as they demand with the Government, well knowing that as long as the parity clause is construed for gold and against silver payment on all coin obligations they can raid the Treasury and take it all out again in two months' time, as the Administration persists in permitting them to do, and as they did do following the last bond sale. Or if the Executive should use the option legally and rightfully belonging to the people, and pay these coin notes when presented largely in silver, then if they cared to do so they could force gold to a premium and spread alarm over the country, which, however, as I have said, can do no permanent harm to the too heavily burdened debtors and industries who need the opportunity that the overthrow of gold payment would give. But the World goes on to say of their gold hoardings:

If they should turn it into the Treasury and take greenbacks instead they would be in every respect as well equipped as now to meet their obligations, while the Government would not have to issue another $100,000,000 of bonds which it will cost the country $20,000,000 to pay, principal and interest. * * *

Are they seriously expecting gold to go to a premium?

Or are they and the banks all over the country in a tacit "combine" to compel repeated bond issues for their speculative profit? These banks ought to answer these questions.

On the following day the World editorially says again:

Their replies are evasive, shifty, insincere. * * *

They have no obligations payable in gold. * * *

There is no possible reason for them to hoard gold, except that they expect a premium upon it, or that they wish to force the Government to borrow money which it does not need.

The New York Times of January 26, with less loyalty to the people and far more loyalty to the money power, urges them to use means of coercion, which it would seem has frequently been done before, to drive Congress to do their bidding. It says:

* * * But we close, as we began, with the unqualified statement that Congress will not do this—

That is, authorize the Secretary to borrow on gold bonds—

that it will not do anything, unless it be forced to action by the overwhelming pressure of public opinion. It is sheer folly to rely on anything else. This force organized, directed, and concentrated upon Congress, as it was in the spring of 1891, when the free-coinage bill was killed, as it was in 1893, when the repeal bill was enacted, will do the work. Nothing else will.

The country quite well understands what their methods were in 1891 and 1893. We all should know by this time that they never move in a straightforward course, but always by feint and stratagem to gain their victories.

But I have already detained the House long enough on these questions. The steps of the gold conspiracy in the past are an indication to us of what their steps and purposes will be in the future.

The relief necessary and for which the laboring people are anxiously waiting is to see Congress, the loyal and truly Democratic part of Congress, again roll back the tide of selfishness and the organized greed of the gold and bond combine and, at the earliest possible moment, if opportunity should offer, to crush the gold conspiracy forever and set America free again from the severely threatened subjugation that England and her Tory allies in Wall street would fasten upon our country.

But I am persuaded that it is not so much simple intelligence needed now to see what is wrong and what are the motives of the gigantic forces with which we must contend, and how the gold raid must and can be stopped by obeying the present law and enforcing the option of coin, including silver payment, which our present Secretary of the Treasury as well as those preceding him have been constantly violating, and how an adequate legal-tender system of money of both coin and paper will revive prices, revive profits, revive hope and prosperity—all of these things every true and honest Representative can see—but more courage, more heart, more sympathy for struggling humanity, more patriotism is needed.

The eloquent Archbishop Ireland has well said:

Patriotism is love of country and loyalty to its life and weal—love tender and strong, tender as the love of a son for the mother, strong as the pillars of death; loyalty, generous and disinterested, shrinking from no sacrifice, seeking no reward save country's honor and country's triumph.

And I shall close with a warning and a challenge to the money power that if it shall not curb its selfishness and greed and realize that its votaries are but part of the great struggling mass of humanity, whose rights to life, liberty, and a fair opportunity in this country are as well founded as that of any of the minions of the gold power, then the people must rise up, and, if need be, crush their enemies by whatever means are lawful in defense of the life and liberty of this country and its people.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out, in section 5, line 2, page 4, commencing with the word "limit" down to and including the word "or" in line 4, the following language: "Limit the amount of lawful money which may be deposited during any calendar month for the purpose of withdrawing national-bank circulation, or."

Mr. SWANSON. Under the present national banking law all the national banks can retire their circulation in an amount not to exceed three millions a month. My amendment leaves that as it is, so far as the withdrawal of circulation is concerned. That stands unchanged, and no national bank can retire its circulation at a more rapid rate than $3,000,000 a month. But under the present law when a bank has retired its circulation it can not issue new circulation in less than six months. The amendment allows the bank to get out additional circulation without delay even though it has been withdrawn. It simply aids an increase of the currency. As the bill now stands, unless the amendment is adopted, you might have $500,000,000 of greenbacks retired in January, and an issue of $500,000,000 of national-bank notes instead, and then those national-bank notes might be retired in February, so that you would have a contraction of the currency of $500,000,000 within sixty days. By this amendment the banks can retire the national-bank notes, when once taken out, only at the rate of $3,000,000 a month, as under the present law, and when they have retired them they can reissue them without being limited as they are by the existing law, which provides that they shall not be reissued within six months.

Mr. WARNER. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia should be adopted there will still remain the repeal of the provision which would prevent the banks from expanding their currency to meet the popular demand; and the section as it would then stand with the amendment moved by the chairman of the committee would still be largely beneficial. At the same time I want to call the attention of the House and the gentleman from Virginia to this point. The business of furnishing currency, of expanding credits on the part of a bank, is just like any other business in which a tradesman attempts to serve the community. To the precise extent that you prevent him from reducing his stock and running on as low a stock as possible during the time when there is not so large a demand as usual, to that precise extent you limit his capacity (on account of the larger expense to which you compel him to go in his business) to serve that community well at the time when the community most needs his services. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will not completely destroy the effect of the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee, but it will tend to cripple it.

Mr. SWANSON. Under the provisions of the present bill could not the national banks in January next take out currency to the extent of $500,000,000, greenbacks being retired to a corresponding amount, and then afterwards—in February, we will say—retire the entire amount of the national-bank notes they had taken out?

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman can imagine such a state of things—

Mr. SWANSON. I mean could not that be done under this bill?

Mr. WARNER. No; because the banks can not take out currency unless there are people who want to use it, whom those banks are willing to trust with it, and they can not withdraw currency unless people bring it in because they do not want to use it any longer.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the gentleman will answer my question frankly. Under the provisions of this bill could not the national banks increase their currency to the extent of five hundred millions (greenbacks being canceled to a corresponding amount), and then immediately afterwards retire their circulation?

Mr. WARNER. So far as the law prohibits the banks from doing something that they could not do anyhow, that may be possible.

Mr. SWANSON. Under this bill, without my amendment, the banks could accomplish a retirement of currency to that extent within thirty days. If my amendment should be adopted no retirement could take place except in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman and I can have no dispute on that point. If the amendment drafted by myself and proposed by the chairman of the committee should be adopted, it will simply help the banks and the public by putting the fewest obstructions in the way of their serving the public when it wants to be served. If the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia should be adopted, the banks may be obliged sometimes to keep on hand a larger stock of currency than the public wants. The banks would still be at liberty to serve the public when the public required accommodations, but this would be done at somewhat greater expense.

Mr. SWANSON. While this amendment allows the banks to expand the currency, it does not leave them at liberty to contract it whenever they please according to their own interest.

Mr. WARNER. No bank can expand the currency unless there are people who want to borrow, and no bank can contract it unless there are persons who come with currency and leave it with the bank because they do not want to use it.

Mr. BOATNER. Do not the people, at any rate, put their currency in the banks? They do not carry it around in their pockets in large amounts, do they?

Mr. WARNER. So far as bank credits are concerned, the people do not, of course, carry them around in currency, although they do use the actual currency to a greater extent in the country districts than in the cities. Therefore every provision which tends to enable banks to issue currency cheaply is of more benefit to the country districts than to the cities.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman explain how it obstructs the business of a bank to prevent it from contracting its currency unduly?

Mr. WARNER. When the customers of the bank bring in money that they do not want and deposit it, the bank will nevertheless have its securities tied up at Washington and will have to continue to pay taxes upon it; and this involves obstruction and expense. Again, being put to this obstruction and expense—not being able to avoid them by contracting its circulation—it will try in dull times to keep its money out at low interest just when it is not needed. And it will almost surely result that when the time comes that the community actually needs more money the bank will not then issue it for the short time it is actually needed if it knows that, once having issued it, it can not withdraw it, but must leave its securities tied up and pay taxes on the extra circulation for an indefinite time to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that but three minutes of the time remain.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire on this amendment simply to say, in a very few words, that I hope when the committee's last amendment shall have been carried, the House will vote for the bill as it then stands and thereby strengthen the hands of the President and the Administration, and relieve the country as far as it can be relieved from the suspense under which it has so long labored on the subject of the currency. I hope that the House will adopt neither the substitute of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] nor that of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], but that it will accept the original bill of the committee as we have perfected it here.

I am in favor of this bill, in the first place, because it authorizes an issue of gold bonds and strengthens the gold reserve in the Treasury and at the same time puts these bonds out in denominations which will make them a popular investment. It was the people of the United States who took up the first national loan at a time when the bankers of Europe would have nothing to do with it at any price; and so now, if this loan is offered to the people of the United States, they will take it and it will not be in the hands of the great corporations alone.

I favor this bill, in the second place, because it gives some sign of destroying the greenbacks and paying off that debt which has existed for all these years and which is a load upon us. And I want to say a word to my friends from different parts of the country who believe in the greenbacks and desire to preserve them in circulation, because they believe that the great national money that carried the country through the perils of the war is good enough for the present time, and they want to retain it in memory of those past events.

But, gentlemen, you might just as well retain the condemned cannon that you are giving to the soldiers' monuments throughout the country because of the fact that they were fired successfully in the war. It was not the paper money that carried you through; that saved this Government; it was the promise of the Government behind it to pay sound money for every dollar issued; and we demand now that this old, worn-out artillery of thirty years ago shall be discontinued, and that real money shall be substituted in its place; and the old delusion that there was something in all this old paper that fought the battles of the country and saved the Union may be wiped out altogether.

And in the third place, Mr. Chairman, I support this bill because it gives the Executive discretion. I am aware that the doctrine is not in favor in many parts of this House. I am aware that gentlemen want to tie down the hands of the President and the Cabinet officers at every stage, and have Congress attend to every detail, while all questions of interpretation shall be settled in the courts. I believe in the Constitution as a whole. There are three departments of our Government under it, and the Executive is one of them; and I believe in investing him with full discretion in exercising the powers conferred upon him. It amuses me to hear some men on this floor call themselves Jacksonian Democrats and then go on to criticize the Administration in the very terms in which the Henry Clay Whigs of 1834 criticised General Jackson for paying his attention to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule of the House provides that thirty minutes' debate should be allowed on these paragraphs, and the committee can not, even by unanimous consent, change the rule of the House in that respect.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, it was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 70, noes 77.

The question recurred on the amendment of the committee, and on a division there were—ayes 93, noes 48.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. That ends the amendments of the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I now offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert—

Mr. SPRINGER. There are two substitutes already pending, and that is the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BLAND. I offer it as an amendment to the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule permits two substitutes. If this is offered as a substitute it would not be in order. The Chair will hear it read and then rule upon it.

Mr. BROSIUS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to perfect the bill before the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is in order, or any other substitute?

Mr. BLAND. The bill has been perfected.

Mr. BROSIUS. No; it has not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri states he offers this as an amendment, which perfects the bill. If the committee so decide, the bill will be perfected.

Mr. BROSIUS. Then I wish to make another parliamentary inquiry. Can it be said in any parliamentary sense of the word that an amendment that strikes out all after the enacting clause is an amendment to perfect the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. In other words, is it not a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. If it be a substitute it is not in order, but the Chair will have it read and will then determine.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will the Chair be kind enough to respond to my parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so after it has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 1 and insert as follows:

"That all coin obligations of the United States shall be paid in the standard gold or silver coins of the United States, and such payment shall be made from time to time in such of the coins aforesaid as may be most advantageous and convenient to the Government. That to provide the Treasury with such coins all duties on imports shall hereafter be paid one-half in gold and one-half in the standard silver coins of the United States.

"It is further provided, That in order to redeem the Treasury notes of the United States issued in pursuance of the act of July 14, 1890, directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be executed the provisions of section 3 of said act by coining into legal-tender standard silver dollars all the silver bullion now in the Treasury purchased in pursuance of said act. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and required to coin not less than $10,000,000 per month from said bullion, and is hereby authorized to increase the facilities and capacities of the mints of the United States, if the same should be necessary to execute the coinage herein required. That the Treasury notes aforesaid, when redeemed in the coin herein provided for, or otherwise become the property of the Government, shall be canceled and destroyed in amounts equal to the coin held in the Treasury for their redemption, and the coin in respect to which such notes are canceled and destroyed shall be paid into the general Treasury.

"And be it further provided, That in order to procure additional gold and silver coins for the redemption of the coin obligations of the United States, and to assist in the payment of customs duties in coin, the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled 'An act supplementary to the act entitled "An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,"' be, and the same is, hereby revived and reenacted in full force and effect, and all laws in conflict with said act are hereby repealed.

"It is also provided, That in order to meet any deficiencies that may from time to time accrue to the Treasury, and further enable the Secretary of the Treasury to set apart coin to meet the coin obligations of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cause to be prepared and issued Treasury notes of the United States in such denominations and with such devices as he may prescribe, and such Treasury notes shall be receivable and payable for all dues and demands of the United States except duties on imports and other coin demands.

"That whosoever and as often as the condition of the Treasury will permit said Treasury notes when paid into the Treasury, or otherwise become the property of the Government, shall be canceled and destroyed.

"And it is further provided, That all authority to issue bonds for any purpose, or to further increase the interest-bearing debt of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, revoked.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry this law into effect, and a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated to enforce the provisions of this act."

Mr. BLAND. I offer this as an amendment to the first section. I ask to strike out the first section and insert this.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri state how he desires to offer his amendment?

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out the first section of the bill and insert that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. As a substitute for the first section only?

Mr. BLAND. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Leaving the remaining sections of the bill as they are?

Mr. BLAND. Leaving the remaining sections of the bill as they are.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the first section of the bill nor to any other part of the bill. If the gentleman prefers, as this is an important matter, I will move that the committee rise and that this be pending so as to come up in the morning.

Mr. REED. Just so much time as this occupies to-morrow will be taken from the time for offering amendments, and I hope the gentleman will not ask that the committee rise until this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have a ruling. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise, and submit the point of order without argument, except to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the section to which it is offered as an amendment simply provides for the maintenance of a sufficient gold reserve, while the amendment is a free-coinage act and revives the act of 1837, which is a large act of itself. In addition to that extensive provision in the amendment, according to the text already read by the Clerk, it is not germane to this bill, and especially to the section under consideration, and therefore is out of order.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will read the title of this bill and see what is proposed to be done. If we may accomplish by other means whatever may be accomplished by this proposed bill that is in order. It is a bill to authorize what?

To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to maintain a sufficient gold reserve and to redeem and retire United States notes, and for other purposes.

And the section goes on and provides—

That in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to procure and maintain a sufficient gold reserve and to redeem and retire United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," he is hereby authorized to issue and sell, at not less than par, in gold, except as provided in section 2 of this act, etc.

Now, what is the object of the first section of this bill and the whole bill? The object is to procure coin for certain purposes. The bill provides for the securing of certain coin, gold coin, and in that respect is a departure from all the laws upon the subject of redeeming the gold obligations of the Government. The proposition that I am offering is counter to that proposition here in this respect, that it provides that all the coin obligations of the Government shall be redeemed in gold and silver coin, as the law now stands, and that, in order to procure this gold and silver coin, the duties on imports shall be paid one-half in gold and one-half in silver.

Now, certainly, the two things are the same in this. The idea of the bill is to do a certain thing—and that is to procure coin for the redemption, first, of the Treasury notes issued in pursuance of the act of July 14, 1890. I treat with the same Sherman notes and the same act, which is germane, but I provide a different mode of redemption. That mode of redemption is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall execute the third section of the law of July 14, 1890—in other words, that he shall comply with the law that now exists. The present law provides for the redemption of the notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, and section 3 of the act authorizes the issuance of the notes. This proposition contained in the bill is to amend the act of July 14, 1890, and provides for the redemption of these notes by selling bonds and procuring the gold.

Now, the amendment that I have offered is germane to that, because it conforms to the present law upon that subject, which is the third section of the Sherman Act, so called, which provides that the bullion in the Treasury purchased under that act shall be coined in sufficient amount to redeem these notes. That is the law to-day. I provide that this third section shall be executed for the redemption of the notes by coining not less than $10,000,000 of that bullion per month, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to increase the facilities of the mints for that purpose; so that it is not only germane, but is the law upon that subject at the present time, so far as the Treasury notes are concerned. Then there can be no question about that.

Now, the remainder of the provision is that, to maintain the coin redemptions of the Government that are mentioned in the bill, the coinage shall proceed, how? As provided for in the act of 1837. Why? Because if we are to procure coin and to procure it by duties on imports as provided in this bill, then the coin must exist. Anything that is necessary to carry out the purpose or object of the bill is a means to the end sought, and is therefore germane to the bill and an important feature of it; and to enable the Treasury to secure the coin the mints must coin the money.

The other proposition of the amendment provides also that, to meet any deficiencies that may accrue, Treasury notes may be issued which shall be receivable and payable for Government dues. Now, if the object sought by the substitute of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is germane to the bill, where that substitute provides that bonds may be issued to secure revenue for the Treasury to meet deficiencies, then certainly the provision in the amendment that I have offered is germane also, and if that portion of my amendment is to be ruled out as not germane, the provision of the substitute of the gentleman from Maine must be ruled out on the same grounds. His substitute provides that there may be issued bonds bearing 3 per cent interest, and that those bonds may be used for the purpose of meeting any deficiency in the Treasury or procuring funds with which to meet such deficiency.

My amendment provides for the deficiency, but in a different manner, by the issuing of Treasury notes bearing no interest, which are to be canceled whenever the situation of the Treasury permits. It is true that my amendment prohibits any further issue of bonds. This bill, in section 3, speaks of the issue of bonds, and the prohibition in my amendment responds to that, so that the amendment is germane in all particulars. First, it provides that there shall be no sale of bonds to redeem the Sherman notes, because the law now provides a mode of redemption, and that provision of the amendment is germane because it provides for the redemption of those notes, though in a different way. It provides for a coin redemption carrying out the present law, so that it is strictly germane to the objects set forth in the title and text of the bill.

Then, when we come to provide coin for the other obligations of the Government we provide it from the duties on imports, and in order that the necessary coin may be procurable we set the mints at work to coin the money. How otherwise is the gentleman to get his coin? He speaks of selling bonds for gold coin. That presupposes that the mints are coining the gold. If they are not you can not get gold coin, and in fact they are open to gold. When we declare that the Government shall redeem in gold or silver, as may be advantageous, we provide that the mints shall be set to work to produce the necessary coin. Certainly that is germane to the bill and a necessary part of it; therefore, so far as the question of its being germane is concerned, there can be no doubt.

I agree that the Chair made, in one respect, a proper ruling a while ago when he ruled out the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], because that dealt with the tariff, a subject foreign to this bill; but the amendment which I have offered deals not at all with that, but only with the coin redemption of the Government, its coin obligations, a subject dealt with in this bill, and provides an efficient remedy for the evils described by the gentleman from Illinois as existing with reference to the coin obligations of the Government.

The difference between the amendment and the bill is that the amendment provides a means of securing the coin required in a legitimate way and obviates the necessity of issuing bonds for that purpose. In that respect it differs, as a matter of course, from the bill, because it prohibits the issue of bonds; but it accomplishes all the objects of the bill, though in a different manner, and when the amendment reaches the same end as the bill, though in a different manner, it is germane. The gentleman might as well say that it is not germane because it is not his bill as to say that it is not germane because, although it accomplishes the objects of the bill, it accomplishes them in a different manner. We are dealing with what here? We are dealing with the coin obligations and the redemption of the Government obligations in coin. The bill deals with that subject and this amendment deals with that subject, and it is germane to the whole subject-matter and can not be ruled out as not being germane. It covers the whole subject, though in a different way.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. I understand that under the rule after we have gone through with this bill we are not precluded from going back and offering amendments, and there is one amendment that I wish to offer to the first section of the bill. Now, what I want to ask is whether I am precluded from offering that amendment to the first section by reason of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not precluded by reason of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order, then, for me to offer now my amendment to the first section of the bill and have it passed upon, and then let the gentleman from Missouri offer his amendment? That would seem to be the proper order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has not the floor at this time to offer his amendment. He has the floor upon a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair answers that inquiry by saying that the gentleman can offer his amendment after the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is disposed of.

Mr. TERRY. I rise to speak briefly on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to suggest that in determining the question of whether an amendment is germane or not, you do not look simply to the title of the bill to which the amendment is offered, nor to the machinery of the bill, but you look to the object of the bill. The machinery provided in this bill is for the accomplishment of a certain object. That machinery differs, perhaps, from the machinery in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. But what are the objects sought by both? The objects are the redemption of the outstanding obligations of the Government and providing a sufficient revenue for the Government.

That is the object. And the object being the same in both cases, the fact that the machinery may be different is a question which addresses itself not as a matter of order to the Chair, but to the judgment and determination of the House. Whether this method provides better machinery than the other is for the House to determine. We can not draw within the vortex of parliamentary order questions of expediency. I submit, therefore, that the amendment is germane.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then, as I understand, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] argues that as the amendment is directed to securing additional revenue in order to redeem the demand notes of the Government, therefore it is in order. In that view of the case, of course a tariff provision directed to providing additional revenue would be in order.

Mr. TERRY. The Chair might rule out anything that is not directed to carrying out the objects of the bill and not germane to those objects.

Mr. DINGLEY. The object of the amendment, as I understand the gentleman to contend, is to provide a fund for the redemption of the demand notes. Now, if that is the object, why would not a tariff bill for the same reason be in order as an amendment?

Mr. TERRY. In dealing with the tariff you deal with a different question entirely, and one which we will not discuss now. A tariff bill would have to come from the Committee on Ways and Means, and its objects would be entirely different.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman says this would secure the object of providing revenue—

Mr. TERRY. I do not think a tariff provision would come under the same rule, for the reasons already stated.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] think that the only admissible way of raising money is to sell bonds, and that a provision for selling bonds is the only provision that can be in order?

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri has proved more clearly than I could that his amendment is not germane to the first section of this bill. He states that the object of his amendment is to prevent the issue of bonds. Now, the sole purpose of the first section is to authorize the issue of bonds. Therefore he himself shows that his amendment is not germane to the object of the section.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the reasoning of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SICKLES] is correct, a motion to strike out the first section would not be germane.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, a well-known principle in regard to propositions of this kind is that if any part of the amendment is not germane the whole amendment is subject to the point of order. The law which this amendment proposes to revive covers five or six pages of the Statutes at Large; it is full of details of every kind in regard to coinage, the regulation of the mints, etc. All these provisions are to be revived and again put in force by the amendment. Surely this can not be held to be germane to a proposition authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury simply to borrow money in order to maintain the gold reserve.

Mr. BLAND. My amendment does not revive the whole of that act.

Mr. SPRINGER. It revives all that relates to the coinage of silver.

Mr. BLAND. So far as the act relates to the coinage of silver the amendment does revive it.

Mr. SPRINGER. And nearly the whole act relates to that subject.

Mr. BLAND. A provision for the coinage of silver and for the securing of coin for the redemption of Government obligations is certainly germane. The question involved is that of procuring coin; and how can we provide coin unless we authorize the mints to coin it? Suppose that we had no coin at all; suppose we were compelled to resort to coinage in order to get the coin at all for the purposes of the Government a proposition of that kind would be germane; and a proposition which proposes to provide additional coin, because we have not now a sufficiency, is equally germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of the first section of this bill is "to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to procure and maintain a sufficient gold reserve and to redeem and retire United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes," etc., and the section provides for issuing bonds for this purpose. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], as he states, does not provide for the issue of bonds nor for the maintenance of the gold reserve, but it provides for quite a number of things which, it occurs to the Chair, are wholly foreign to the first section of this bill. For this reason, and for others which the Chair will not take time now to enumerate, he holds that the amendment is not germane to this section.

Mr. BLAND. I now offer the amendment as a substitute for the first and second sections of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the point of order, and I move that the committee rise. [Applause.] If the Chair is ready to decide the question of order, I will withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must examine the provisions of the second section. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"] For similar reasons to those already given, the Chair thinks that the amendment in this form, as a substitute for the first and second sections, is equally obnoxious with the former amendment to the point of order. The point, therefore, is sustained.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BLAND. I now renew the amendment as a substitute for the whole of the bill except the last section.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out all of the bill except the last section, and I offer this proposition as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] move that the committee rise?

Mr. SPRINGER. I make a point of order against the amendment, and I withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Can not the gentleman from Illinois move that the committee now rise, and let the Chair examine this matter at his leisure?

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee seems desirous of settling it now, and it will take but a short time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the committee rise.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; not now.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think it better for the Chair to examine this question more carefully, and he can determine it in the morning, after examining it to-night.

Mr. REED. Let us determine it now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I insist on the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDSON) there were—ayes 32, noes 126.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to be to strike out all except the last section of the bill and insert his amendment?

Mr. BLAND. That is the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill would then consist of his amendment and the last section of the bill which has been read and acted upon by the committee this afternoon. The effect would be to make this a substitute for the bill; and inasmuch as there can be but two substitutes pending, under the rule the Chair thinks it would not be in order, not being germane, as has been already held, to this bill, and for that reason sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. With all due respect to the Chair, I appeal from the decision.

Mr. DINGLEY. Perhaps the Chair had better withdraw some of the reasons. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee does not vote on the reasons assigned by the Chair. "For this and other reasons," the Chair will say.

The gentleman from Missouri appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 126, noes 47.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed tellers.

A MEMBER. On what ground does the Chair base his ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, of course, can vote upon any ground they see fit. The Chair holds simply that the amendment in the nature of a substitute is not in order under the rule the committee is operating under.

Mr. HUDSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDSON. Will it be in order to move that the committee rise?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not until the tellers have reported.

The committee having divided, the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 18.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8705 had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8226) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8388) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

SUGAR BOUNTY CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am instructed by a majority of the Committee on Claims to report, as a substitute for one pending in that committee, an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, with a formal recommendation of a majority of the committee that it shall go to the Committee on Appropriations favorably reported, and with a recommendation that the original proposed amendment be indefinitely postponed.

I am also instructed by the committee to make a brief statement as to the nature of the proposed amendment, and in accordance with what I understand to be the universal usage of the Senate and the instruction of the committee I will now make it.

The proposed amendment relates to the claims for bounty on sugar produced—

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me a moment? A few mornings since the Senator from Oregon, as I understood, reported a bill and asked leave to explain his report. I then objected. If this be an amendment proposed to an appropriation bill it would be better that the explanation be put in the form of a written report. But as it is not a bill to go upon the Calendar to be called up again, but to be referred to a committee, the motion to refer being debatable, I will not interpose the objection that I made the other morning, but should do so if it was now, as I understood it to be then, the report of a bill to go upon the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I supposed at the time the objection was made that the Senator from Tennessee must certainly have misunderstood the character of the report, or rather the character of my request for unanimous consent, a request which I was under no obligation whatever to make; but I did it as a simple matter of courtesy to the Senate, because I am aware, Mr. President, as the Senator from Tennessee is aware and as every other Senator is aware, that no such objection is ever made. No such objection as was made by the Senator from Tennessee the other day has ever, to my knowledge, been made since I first took my seat in the Senate of the United States, now nearly twenty-two years ago. I am glad to hear from the Senator from Tennessee, whom I have always respected very highly, that he was laboring under a mistake.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not catch the last remark.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I said I am glad to hear the Senator from Tennessee, whom I have always highly respected, now state that he was the other day laboring under a mistake as to the character of the statement I wished to make to the Senate.

Now, having said this much, I will proceed to do what I intended to do the other day, and that which I was instructed to do by the committee whose organ for the moment I am.

This proposed amendment relates to the claim of the sugar producers of this country to be paid a bounty on sugar produced in the country prior to the 28th day of August, 1893, the time when the tariff law repealing the bounty provision went into effect.

The claim made by the producers is for the full bounty for the sugars actually produced prior to that date. The claim is furthermore for one-half of the full bounty for sugar produced after that date, but from crops raised in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The Committee on Claims is divided on both propositions. The majority of the committee believe, and so state, that the claims for sugar actually produced prior to the repeal of the act ought to be paid in full. A majority of the committee, in view of the importance of the questions involved as to the balance of the claims and the large amounts involved, were of the opinion that their report should be of such a character as would enable the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate to consider the matter. Therefore, as I stated in the opening, the majority of the committee report this substitute favorably, one member of the committee, however, being opposed to the payment of any part of these claims, and other members of the committee reserving the right to take such action in the future as to the claims for sugar produced after the date of the repeal act as they may deem proper on full argument and consideration.

Individually, as one member of the committee, I believe that the bounty on all sugars actually produced prior to the passage of the repeal act should be paid. I think there is a legal obligation there as well as an equitable obligation. So far as the balance of the claims is concerned I desire to reserve my judgment until the matter is fully discussed in the Senate.

It is proper in this connection and the committee desire that I should state the amounts involved. The claims for sugars actually produced in the United States prior to the repeal amount to $237,722.38. Of this amount $29,286.46 are claims on sugar produced from cane, $86,782.47 claims on sugar produced from beets, and $436 on sugar produced from sorghum, while $121,217.45 of this amount are claims for sugar produced from maple sap, making a total of $237,722.38. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his report to the committee of the Senate states that it will require, in order to meet these claims and the administrative expenses, about $250,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the claim arising from sugar produced during 1893 and not paid at the time of the passage of the act?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Produced during 1893 and in 1894 prior to August 28.

Mr. ALLISON. And in the spring of 1894?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And 1894, up to the passage of the act.

Mr. ALLISON. Actually produced and sent into market before the passage of the act of 1894?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Actually produced and reported to the Department.

Mr. MANDERSON. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion it is not from sugar produced in 1893.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not exclusively; a very small amount was produced in that year on which bounty has not been paid.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is from sugar that was produced from the crop of 1893, but produced as sugar between the 1st day of July and the 28th day of August, 1894. It is not the crop of 1894 at all, but the crop of 1893, which was converted into sugar during those dates.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a very important question. We would like to have had the Committee on Claims determine that question.

Mr. ALLISON. And it is for the claim for one-half the bounty which is now recommended for sugar in process of production.

Mr. MANDERSON. Entirely, because that is from the crop of 1894.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is no trouble about it at all. This relates to sugar actually produced prior to the repeal of the act August 28, 1894.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It has no reference whatever to the claim for one-half bounty for sugar actually produced after the repeal of the act.

Now I come for a moment, and I will only take a moment, to the character and amount of the claims for sugar produced after the repeal. Of course it is but an estimate as to what the amount will be. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports that the average increase in the product of domestic sugars subject to bounty under the old law in this country for the last three years—that is, the three fiscal years ending June 30—1894, was 33½ per cent—33.45 per cent, I think, to be entirely accurate. Upon the assumption that the increase for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, will be the same, the amount of sugar on which a half bounty would be paid if the amendment should be adopted amounts to—

Mr. MANDERSON. Let me suggest to the Senator that it approximates $7,000,000, and that he can insert in his remarks the exact amount. That is about the sum.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The amount will be—I have it here—918,974,387 pounds. That is the estimate of the Commissioner. The full bounty on that, according to the estimate of the Commissioner, would amount to $15,500,000, and one-half of course would be just one-half that amount, or $7,750,000. This, then, added to the $250,000 for sugar produced prior to the repeal act, would make the sum total of the whole claim according to the estimate of the Commissioner exactly $10,000,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does not the Senator from Oregon know that the estimate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which he has just read is but the merest conjecture, and that the figures he gives are disputed by the sugar producers of the United States, whose contention is that the sugar produced from crops grown in 1894, manufactured in the fall and winter of 1894-95, was no greater than it was the preceding year, which was in Louisiana about 600,000,000 pounds?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am simply stating the estimate of the Commissioner. I have not enlarged on it. I have not undertaken to state that it was too high or too low or indefinite. I am simply giving the Senate what the Commissioner estimates.

The product of sugar on which bounty was paid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, was 377,670,325 pounds. The product for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, was 515,255,669 pounds. The product for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, was 688,889,270 pounds. The average of all that, as stated by the Commissioner, is about 33½ per cent increase each year in the three years. My impression is from information I have that the estimate of the Commissioner, so far from being too high, is too low, and that the whole claim will amount to considerably more than $10,000,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator will permit me, I have some little personal knowledge as to the product of sugar in 1894. It is a fact which can not be questioned that the estimate of the Commissioner is erroneous and is based upon a mistaken idea of the facts. As to beet sugar, particularly in the State of Nebraska, on account of the great drought in that State, there was a shortage of production in 1894, and instead of there being an increase of about one-third in the crop, there is a very decided decrease; there was a slight increase in California; and there is no doubt about the proposition, as stated by the Senator from Louisiana, that the product of sugar from cane in Louisiana will not exceed the crop of 1894. So, instead of its taking $7,700,000 to pay the bounty—which I say is not only morally and equitably but legally due from the United States Government—it will take no more than it did in 1894, and will probably take less.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I may be wrong about it, but I am simply giving the figures of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which is, of course, but an estimate based on certain data which I have given. I have conversed with certain gentlemen conversant with the business, who are of the opinion this estimate is too low. I desire in this connection to submit, to be printed with my remarks, the following telegrams in support of the payment of the bounty received from the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oreg., and from certain citizens of that State. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., February 1, 1895.

Hon. J. H. MITCHELL:

As matter of justice and equity to Louisiana sugar planters and other sugar-producing States, who made their crops expecting protection sufficient to reimburse their outlay, we earnestly request your favorable consideration of their claim. The good faith of the Government was pledged to them and should not be violated.

G. P. FRANK, Mayor City of Portland.
D. D. OLIPHANT,
President Portland Chamber of Commerce.
T. F. OSBORN,
Ex-President Portland Chamber of Commerce.
R. S. HOWARD, of Howard & Floy.
RICHARD NIXON,
F. W. & V. COOK,
A. H. MAEGBY,
F. E. EWALD,
F. C. BARNES,
H. H. SIMMON,
And 1,000 more signatures, if necessary.

PORTLAND, OREG., January 30, 1895.

Senator JOHN H. MITCHELL, Washington, D. C.:

We ask you, as chairman of committee considering bill to pay sugar bounty, last year's crop, to use your influence in behalf of planters for the passage of the bill. Would simply be an act of justice to them.

BENJ. I. COHEN.
A. H. TANNER.
D. P. THOMSON.
J. E. LOMBARD.
D. SOLIS COHEN.

Mr. PASCO. Before the Senator sits down I wish to call his attention to a single point with reference to the action of the committee on this matter. I wish to see whether I understand the statement of my colleague on the committee correctly.

I understand that the entire committee recommended that this matter be reported back to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that a majority of the committee were in favor of the recommendation. I understood him to say that a minority only of the committee favored the recommendation. On the contrary, my recollection as to the action of the committee is, that a minority only of the committee were in favor of recommending this amendment pro forma; that the majority of the committee recommended it favorably, and that the entire committee joined in the report. Is that not the fact?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I did not understand that all the committee joined in the report. I understood that at least one member of the committee expressed himself, if I may state now what took place in committee, as opposed to the payment of any portion of this claim as to sugar produced prior to the repeal of the act as well also as to the other claim.

Mr. PASCO. I so stated, but the member of the committee referred to was in favor of a pro forma report, so that the matter might go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That perhaps is so. I do not entirely agree with the chairman of the committee. It was distinctly understood that there should be a pro forma favorable report to go to the Committee on Appropriations, so that the matter might be considered by that committee, and thus avoid any point of order that might be raised against it. My understanding was that there was not a majority of the Committee on Claims who expressed themselves as favorable to the payment of all these claims, but that is quite immaterial. It is perfectly clear that there is a majority of the committee who desire that this matter shall go, at least with a pro forma favorable report, to the Committee on Appropriations, so that it may be there considered.

Mr. HARRIS. Before this matter passes from the consideration of the Senate I wish to say to the Senator from Oregon that he is slightly mistaken in assuming that in what I said a little while ago I admitted that I had been mistaken the other morning. The language used by the Senator the other morning, when he first proposed this report, was this:

I am instructed to submit a report from the Committee on Claims, and as it is a matter of more than ordinary importance, I ask the permission of the Senate for a few moments to explain the report.

The language used was that he was instructed by the Committee on Claims to make a report. I assumed, as I had a right to assume from that language, that the Senator proposed to report a bill back adversely or favorably—he did not say which—and in the colloquy that followed I said that explanation would be necessary when the bill came up for consideration. If the Senator had then said, "I am instructed to report an amendment to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations," I trust there is no Senator here who will not give me credit for knowing that the motion to refer is as debatable as any other question which can be presented to the Senate, and no objection could have lain in such a case, nor would any objection have been made by me if the Senator had made himself understood then as he has made himself understood this morning.

That much I desire to say; no more. I care nothing for the amendment going to the Committee on Appropriations. I have no objection whatever to that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has only emphasized what I stated a moment ago, that he was under a misapprehension. Whether that misapprehension was the result of anything I said or of any omission of something I might have said, is entirely a different question. That is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not under a misapprehension, basing my action upon what the Senator did say. I say the presumption, from the language he used was that he was reporting a bill back favorably or adversely. If he had stated then, as he did this morning, "I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report an amendment for reference to the Committee on Appropriations," of course the motion to refer is a debatable motion, and it would have invoked no objection from me, because I think I understand the parliamentary law of the body and the rights of every Senator sufficiently well not to put myself in the absurd attitude of objecting to debating a strictly debatable question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, one word more. If the Senator from Tennessee had not been quite so hasty the other day he would have discovered in a minute the character of the report I was about to make, but permission was not given me by the Senator from Tennessee. He protested, and protested vigorously, and I was not permitted to disclose to the Senate the purport of my report.

Mr. COCKRELL. What action has been had on the amendment just reported, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I protest against that reference. I protest against the Committee on Claims reporting back to the Senate an important question involving hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of dollars without making any recommendation, and simply have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered in the closing hours of this Congress. The question does not belong to the Committee on Appropriations; it is a claim pure and simple, and the Committee on Claims ought to have assumed the responsibility and reported a bill for whatever amount they thought to be due—

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand they have reported it favorably.

Mr. COCKRELL. Instead of attempting to place the responsibility upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PASCO. The statement I have made is to the effect that the committee have made such a recommendation.

Mr. MANDERSON. A favorable report.

Mr. PASCO. The committee have recommended that the amendment go to the Committee on Appropriations for their action with a favorable report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not make a written report, as the rules of the Senate require, so that we may see what the Committee on Claims has reported? We have the statement of the Senator making the report, which leaves the matter in doubt. The rules of the Senate require a report to be made in writing, and I can not see why so important a question as this, which has received consideration, could not have been reduced to writing, so that the Committee on Appropriations would not be left without any data.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him for a moment, I will say that if there is any such rule as that reports must be made in writing, so far as amendments to appropriation bills are concerned, it is a rule "more honored in the breach than in the observance." It is a most exceptional thing in the closing hours of a session of Congress, when appropriation bills are on for consideration and pending in the Committee on Appropriations, that a written report accompanies any of them when proposed to an appropriation bill from one of the standing committees of the Senate.

So far as this question is concerned, I understand from the Senator from Oregon and from the chairman of the Committee on Claims that this amendment is reported favorably to the Senate, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. There can be no question about that. The Senator from Oregon has simply been explaining his own views upon the question and those of some of his associates upon the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is no question but that I was instructed, as the organ of the committee, to report the amendment favorably to the Senate, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. As the Senator said, I was simply explaining the views of individual members of the committee, and the reserved right of such members to take such course as they may deem proper hereafter, and, as the Senator has also stated, it is most unusual to accompany proposed amendments to appropriation bills with a written report; in fact I do not recollect it being done in any case.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Appropriations itself does not make written reports in regard to such bills.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is true.

Mr. PASCO. Before this matter passes from the consideration of the Senate I will call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the very elaborate report made from the Treasury Department upon this question, which was elicited by the Committee on Claims; and with that elaborate statement before the Senate it certainly is not necessary that the committee should make a formal written report, even if the rules require it; and I am obliged to state, without reference to the rules, that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is mistaken in supposing that a matter of this kind need be reported in writing. There is, however, as I have stated, a very elaborate statement from the Treasury Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that been printed?

Mr. PASCO. It has been printed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is an executive document.

Mr. PASCO. And the Committee on Appropriations will find all the necessary information for them to act upon in considering the merits of this claim.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Claims that this amendment is reported favorably by the committee. I understood from the Senator from Oregon who reported the amendment that it was reported favorably, but that the majority of the committee were against it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANDERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If that be true, and I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that a majority of the Committee on Claims were not in favor of paying these claims, and this amendment is for an appropriation for the payment of the claims—if I am mistaken, I shall be very glad if the Senator from Oregon will correct me—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Colorado does not accurately represent me.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not seek to represent the Senator; I am only asking in the utmost good faith for information. I understood the Senator from Oregon to say that he was instructed to report this amendment favorably, but that he felt bound to say that the majority of the committee were not in favor of paying the claims.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No, Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me, I did not say in any part of what I said this morning that the majority of the committee was opposed to the payment of these claims. What I did in substance and effect say, and what I intended to say, was that the majority of the committee, if not indeed the whole of it, were in favor of reporting the amendment favorably to the Committee on Appropriations, but that I believed a majority of the committee individually reserved the right, when the matter came up in open Senate, when it was further discussed and we had all the facts before us, to take such course, either by speech or vote, as they thought proper. It was, however, a matter of so much importance, that we believed it should come in with a favorable report in order that it might be considered and thus avoid a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. And dump your labor upon another committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, if I am in order, I move that the amendment be recommitted to the Committee on Claims, with the request that the committee submit a report in writing.

Mr. PASCO. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Claims, which considered this question, I wish to say that I think the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Missouri are in error as to what we did. I think the Committee on Claims were unanimous—that was my understanding—with the exception of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN], in agreeing that this claim should be recommended to the extent of the bounty on sugar that was produced up to the 28th of August last. I do not think there was any particular dissent on that branch of the case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. ALLEN. When it came to recommending the claim in so far as it allowed a bounty upon sugar for the crop of 1894 after the 28th of August, there was some division of sentiment; but even then I believe a majority of the committee were in favor of that. But as to that branch of the claim there was a general expression that went around the table that each member of the committee reserved the right to vote and to act upon that branch of the claim when it came into the Senate.

That is about the condition of the claim as it was recommended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Colorado please state his motion again?

Mr. WOLCOTT. At the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] I withdraw my motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, the Committee on Claims, charged with deciding these matters and reporting this question for the action of the Senate, have almost unanimously agreed to place the responsibility for acting upon it upon the Committee on Appropriations, and they are quite unanimous in saying that the whole matter shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and when that committee come in with a report, if the amendment should be incorporated in the appropriation bill, then they would be at liberty to fight it to their heart's content, agreeing that a part of it, at least, should not go upon the bill.

I protest against that course toward the Committee on Appropriations. I protest that the Committee on Appropriations shall not be made the dumping ground for all business which is referred to other committees of the Senate, and that they shall be relieved from responsibility by simply referring matters to the Committee on Appropriations.

Here is a subject of vast importance to a large number of people of this country. It is a claim based upon certain laws and repeals of those laws. The Committee on Claims should have taken up the question, considered it, and reported what they believed ought to be paid to the claimants, and it should have been considered as a separate and independent matter.

The Committee on Appropriations is not the proper committee to which questions of this kind should be referred. We remember how that committee has been criticised in this body time and again because it was said it was attempting to usurp the functions of all the other committees of the Senate. Now, we see all the other committees attempting to dump their business upon the Committee on Appropriations and force them to do what is absolutely impossible for them to do, with twelve appropriation bills yet pending, give consideration to matters which ought to be reported by other committees.

We have now a report made from the Committee on Claims, which, as I understand it, includes the entire bounty question, not only for arrears of bounty which were not paid on the crop of 1893, not only for the bounty which may have been claimed to have been earned by the actual manufacture of sugar prior to the 28th day of August, 1894, but also to any rights and equities which may belong to the sugar producers for the sugar produced from the cane grown and matured prior to the 28th day of August, 1894. That whole question is left for the Senate Committee on Appropriations to consider, when it was the duty of the Committee on Claims to have adjusted the whole matter, to have made a report, and recommended certain amounts, and not referred that report and bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. One word in answer to the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator forgets that the report we have made is on an amendment submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. It is not a bill, but a proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the Committee on Claims were called upon simply to pass upon that amendment. As I have said, it is not a bill. We were not called upon to determine and make a report upon a bill, but, on the contrary, our jurisdiction as a committee—I must say this in defense of the committee—only extended to reporting on this proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill introduced by the Senator from Louisiana. We reported back that amendment with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, and we reported favorably a substitute, which is substantially the same, or but little different, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me, do I understand him to represent the Committee on Claims in reporting the amendment favorably and in asking that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the only committee to which it can go?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. With the statement of the Senator representing the Committee on Claims here, the Senator whose duty it was to make the report to the Senate, that the Committee on Claims has favorably reported a substitute amendment and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, there is nothing to do but carry out the regular routine of the Senate and refer it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. We can not go back of the statement of the Senator that the Committee on Claims has authorized him—which means a majority of the committee—to report the amendment favorably.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state, in reply to what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has said, that the Committee on Claims has not been disposed to "dump"—to borrow the elegant word of the Senator—anything on the Committee on Appropriations. We have given careful and mature consideration to this proposition; we have put it in a different shape from what it came to us, after getting all the information we could from the Treasury Department. We have given the Committee on Appropriations the benefit of our investigation orally upon the floor, and these remarks will appear in the RECORD, and the committee will also have the benefit of the very full statement of the whole question from the Treasury Department. We have taken the responsibility of reporting a substitute for the amendment favorably, and the only thing left for us to do was to refer it then where every amendment relating to appropriations belongs, to the Committee on Appropriations, to be passed upon by that committee.

I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with whose committee the responsibility finally rests, talks with his usual fairness when he accuses the Committee on Claims of attempting to shift any of our responsibilities or any of our burdens on the Committee on Appropriations. We have assisted that committee in the three or four sessions we have had over this matter; we have put the question in proper shape for the Committee on Appropriations to act upon it; and we have given to that committee the information from the Department which will enable them to act intelligently; and, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has suggested, there is nothing now remaining to be done except for this amendment to take the usual course and go to the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope it will go there without further debate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Just a word further upon this matter. It was I who introduced the amendment upon which this action was taken by the Committee on Claims. It is well known that, under the rules of the Senate, the Committee on Appropriations has not jurisdiction to consider an amendment of this kind unless it is previously reported by a standing committee of the Senate.

An amount to pay the bounty was not placed in any estimate of any of the Departments, and the law under which the bounty was formerly paid had been repealed and was no longer the existing law. Therefore, the only way in which the subject, under the rules of the Senate, could be gotten properly before the Committee on Appropriations for action by them was to refer an amendment to one of the regular appropriation bills to one of the standing committees of the Senate, to have action taken favorably upon it by such standing committee, and then have it reported back to the Senate for reference to the Committee on Appropriations. If that course had not been taken the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, would have been the first to have met it in the Committee on Appropriations with the objection that there was no "existing law" which authorized this payment; that it was not in any of the estimates of the Departments, and that no standing committee had reported it. He would have insisted it was not in order for his committee to consider it, and if it had later been offered in open Senate to one of the appropriation bills he would have been quick to make the point of order against it.

All this having been anticipated, an amendment designed for incorporation in the sundry civil appropriation bill was introduced in the Senate and sent to a standing committee—and the appropriate committee, too—that on claims.

This committee have been considering the amendment for weeks. They applied to the Treasury Department for information touching the bounty question. This information was reported in full by the Treasury Department, and the same is printed and is on the files of the Senate. After this the committee took action.

A substitute for the amendment which I had introduced is now presented from the Committee on Claims with a favorable recommendation and accompanied by the motion that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to be considered by that committee in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill. This is strictly in accordance with the rules of the Senate, and it can not properly be challenged by any Senator. The amendment should now take the usual course, namely, be printed and sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. There is no question before the Senate, as I understand, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the Senator from Oregon has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair will state to the Senator, and there is no question now pending before the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8388) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to send to the House a duplicate of the engrossed bill (S. 341) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with and a duplicate of the engrossed bill sent to the House.

SURVEY OF KALAMAZOO RIVER.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 269) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of Kalamazoo River from Lake Michigan to Saugatuck, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a very simple little joint resolution, consisting of a few lines, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that the cost of the survey will be only $350, to be taken out of an appropriation already made.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RULES OF NAVIGATION ON INLAND WATERS.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," to report it favorably with amendments. I submit a written report thereon.

It is a bill which must be a law before March 1 on account of the proclamation of the President putting into force the international rules of the sea. Therefore I ask that the bill may receive present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 5, before the words "forty-four hundred and twelve," to strike out the words "forty-two hundred and thirty-four," and in line 7, after the word "be," to strike out "obeyed by vessels of the merchant marine of the United States, other than vessels coming from or departing for the high seas," and insert "followed," so as to make the section read:

That on and after March 1, 1895, the provisions of sections 4233, 4412, and 4413 of the Revised Statutes and regulations pursuant thereto shall be followed on the harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States.

The provisions of said sections of the Revised Statutes and regulations pursuant thereto are hereby declared special rules duly made by local authority relative to the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters as provided for in article 30 of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed from time to time to designate and define by suitable bearings or ranges with light-houses, light vessels, buoys, or coast objects the lines dividing the high seas from rivers, harbors, and inland waters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section:

SEC. 3. Collectors or other chief officers of the customs shall require all sail vessels to be furnished with proper signal lights. Every such vessel that shall be navigated without complying with the statutes of the United States, or the regulations that may be lawfully made thereunder, shall be liable to a penalty of $200, one-half to go to the informer; for which sum the vessel so navigated shall be liable, and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section:

SEC. 4. The words "inland waters" used in this act shall not be held to include the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal; and this act shall not in any respect modify or affect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters," approved February —, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, except the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled 'An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea.'"

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. RANSOM, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 952) for the relief of Catherine Caine;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 252) relative to the British-Venezuela-Guiana boundary dispute.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1935) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ellery;

SEACONET RIVER BRIDGE, RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to send to the Senate the report of the engineer dated on or about February 8, 1893, in regard to the railroad bridge over the Seaconet River, Rhode Island; and also to inform the Senate what action, if any, has been taken thereon by the Department.

JOSEPHINE F. KELTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig.-Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, deceased.

The amendment were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "Josephine F. Kelton" and insert "Josephine P. Kelton;" and to amend the title by striking out "Josephine F. Kelton" and inserting "Josephine P. Kelton."

Mr. GALLINGER. As the amendments of the House of Representatives simply correct the name of the beneficiary, I move that they be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 952) for the relief of Catherine Caine was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Richard R. Knight was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, on the 19th of December I submitted a resolution asking for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the Honduras Lottery Company in its operations in Florida. By unanimous consent the resolution was laid upon the table without prejudice, subject to be called up at any time. I now ask for the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 19, 1894, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the State of Florida and is engaged in business there and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States and of the State of Florida. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents, have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections and the legislature and the members of Congress and the executive officers of the State of Florida. The committee shall also inquire and report whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, or any person connected with it, or any corporations in any way connected with such lottery company, expended money in the late elections in the State of Florida for members of Congress or members of the legislature, and whether they own, either directly or indirectly, any interests in newspapers published in the State, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report whether the political conventions or the elections for Congress and for members of the legislature of the State of Florida have been influenced or controlled by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, and if so, to what extent, or by any corporation or person in any way connected with or in combination with it or with the persons composing it.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, were expended in the late elections by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, or in persons connected with it, and in what way and by what person such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida to make some little explanation of the resolution. I do not object to its consideration.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall object to the consideration of any resolution or bill that is to elicit debate. It is my purpose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill as soon as the routine morning business shall have been completed. I shall object to the consideration at this time of any matter that is calculated to lead to debate.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask if the resolution has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been so referred, the Chair will state.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the resolution is obliged to go to that committee.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was in the chair when the resolution was introduced. This very question was then raised, and he decided that as the resolution involved no expense it was in order without reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. HARRIS. I am advised that the original resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida provided for the payment of the expenses of the committee out of the contingent fund of the Senate. To avoid the reference I now understand the Senator from Florida withdrew the original resolution and introduced this one, which does not provide for an expense against the contingent fund.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read again for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will again be read. The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Honduras Lottery Company, formerly known as the Louisiana Lottery Company, is a foreign corporation, domiciled in a foreign country. It is perhaps the most powerful corporation in the world. It assailed the form of government in the State of Louisiana for years. It proposed, as has been stated in the public prints, to pay the entire debt of the State of Louisiana for the privilege of continuing its operations there. It is believed to have been essentially dangerous to the continuation of government by the people of that State. It is now known to have established itself in the State of Florida, claiming to conduct its drawings outside the jurisdiction of the United States, and to find a place of distribution and a place of publication within the limits of that State.

It is believed by the people of Florida that in connection with others it has expended great sums of money toward perpetuating its existence in that State, eluding the operation of the laws of the United States, which seek to prevent its continuance within any State. A foreign corporation finding a location within the United States and seeking by the most powerful influences to corrupt officials charged with the execution of the laws, in my judgment, ought to be investigated, to the end that Congress may see what legislation is necessary to prevent its operation in this country.

If it be true that the company has violated no law of the United States, that there is nothing within the competency of Congress to do, I for one shall not ask any violation of the Constitution or the distinctive authority of the General Government and the States. But it seems to me that it concerns the whole country to know whether a foreign combination can find a lodgment here against the laws of the United States and against the laws of any State, and interfere with the political conditions and the public policy of this country. Upon that point it would seem to me there can be no difference of opinion. Therefore I have asked for the appointment of a special committee. No regular standing committee of this body can be expected to take the labor and the continued trouble which the investigation will impose, and for that reason I have asked that a special committee be created.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Florida whether the resolution carries with it authority to appoint a clerk and provision for a stenographer and so on?

Mr. CALL. It does not.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Florida what earthly effect the committee will have or what benefit it will be if there is no machinery to carry out the investigation.

Mr. CALL. We will see after the resolution is adopted what machinery is necessary to carry out the purpose of the resolution, and then we can ask for it if it is necessary. The resolution provides for no expense.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Florida in his own interest as well as the proper and orderly conduct of affairs here whether it would not be better to refer the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and, if we are to have the investigation, provide for whatever clerical force is necessary.

Mr. CALL. I think not. I prefer that the Senate shall say whether or not they think it is advisable to make such an investigation. If that be the sense of the Senate, as I think it ought to be, then there will be ample time to make provision for whatever is necessary in the way of clerical force.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Florida has made a sufficient explanation of the resolution, or, if he has done so, whether the Senate has given that attention to the subject which it ought to give to everything the Senator from Florida submits for consideration.

I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether he himself is convinced that the lottery company has been doing all those things in the State of Florida which he has set out at so much length. According to the resolution, it has been interfering generally in the management of the government of Florida. It has been taking possession, so to speak, of the politics of the State and of the machinery of government therein.

If I am not mistaken, that is the purport of the resolution, and I wish to understand distinctly whether the Senator from Florida believes all those things have been done by the lottery company. If they have been done or he believes they have been done, and so says upon his responsibility as a Senator, I shall certainly vote for the investigation. But I do not think the resolution ought to be adopted unless there is a pretty strong assurance from some quarter that the lottery company is doing the extraordinary acts which it is suggested by the resolution it has been doing. I should like to hear further from the Senator from Florida on that point, if he will oblige me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service.

Mr. CALL. I do not think that is a fair way to oppose the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My motion is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is hearing the suggestion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to treat the resolution unfairly, but I desire that the Senate shall proceed with necessary legislation.

Mr. CALL. The resolution is debatable. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I do not understand that under the rule a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill is debatable. I should be obliged if the Senator from Florida would show me the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is not debatable. The Chair will listen to the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, however.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to any debate.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that I may answer the question of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to any debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question must be taken without debate on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name on the roll call.

Mr. PLATT. I am too late.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 40, nays 15; as follows:

Mr. CALL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What position does that leave the resolution in?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution goes to the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I will state that there was unanimous consent that the resolution might lie on the table, and be called up at any time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was called up.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have the resolution retain its place.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The resolution was called up and it has gone to the Calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 9, after line 8, to insert:

CONSTRUCTION OF TELEGRAPH CABLE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that if I could have obtained the floor before the commencement of the roll call I should have made the point of order that while morning business is being transacted prior to 2 o'clock it is not in order to move to take up any bill. I simply give notice that whenever that question shall come before the Senate again I propose to make that point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not care to discuss a point of order that has not been raised, but I submit to the Senator from Connecticut that if he will consult the rule a little more closely than he seems to have done, he will find that after the hour of 1 o'clock it is in order to make the motion I made.

Mr. PLATT. I have consulted the rule, I think, as closely as the Senator from Kentucky has, and I am quite ready to maintain my proposition that by the rules of the Senate if morning business has not been concluded, there can be no motion made to take up any bill until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not care to discuss a point of order that has never been submitted; but the Chair has already ruled upon the proposition raised by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I know it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the bill may be proceeded with.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to renew the discussion of the Hawaiian matter, but in support of what I said yesterday I wish to read the action of the British commissioners in those islands. I find in the morning paper the following:

HONOLULU, January 30.

The instructions to Admiral Beardslee reached Honolulu some days before the admiral, who arrived on the Philadelphia last evening. Much comment has been made upon the words "refusing protection to American citizens participating in attempts to maintain as well as to overthrow any existing government." Nearly every American citizen in Honolulu has taken an active part on one side or the other in this unpleasantness. The general opinion is that the admiral's instructions leave him with nobody to protect and little to do here.

British Commissioner Hawes takes an entirely different view about affording protection to British subjects. The editor of the Bulletin, until lately a royalist, consulted the commissioner on the subject, and was explicitly informed that it would be highly proper for him to render active support to the Government, and that he would not forfeit his protection as a British subject by doing so.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I did not intend to say another word in regard to the proposition which the Senator from Colorado and myself discussed yesterday. I hoped at one time we had agreed. I am very sure that the contention maintained by me as to the instruction of the Secretary of the Navy to Admiral Walker last summer is sound. I do not propose to discuss it any further. But as the Senator from Colorado has read a dispatch as to what certain people in Honolulu think in regard to that instruction, and it is apparent that they are laboring under the same mistake which I conceive the Senator from Colorado was laboring under, I will merely at this time ask that there may be printed in the RECORD an English authority on that proposition, inasmuch as the dispatch read from the newspaper refers to what England would do under the circumstances that have been detailed. I read from Lorimer's Institutes of the Law of Nations. It is a late work, written by James Lorimer, LL. D., who is regius professor of public law and the law of nations in the University of Edinburgh, member of the Institute of International Law, corresponding member of the Academy of Jurisprudence of Madrid, etc. I know nothing of this writer except what I find in the title page of the book; but it seems to be a carefully written book, and written by a person who has been a student of international law. The writer answers the following question, put by himself:

May the citizen of a neutral State enlist in the service of a belligerent State?

I do not wish to detain the Senate longer than is sufficient to read a brief extract, but I ask that what I have marked may be printed in the RECORD. He had been discussing the conduct of Captain Hobart, of the royal navy, who took service in the Turkish navy and became Hobart Pasha. He says:

First. May the citizen of a neutral State enlist in the service of a belligerent State?

The response which our theory yields is simple enough. The citizen qua citizen of the neutral state may not, but the person qua citizen of the world may. But how is the same individual to act in two separate capacities? Can he stay at home as a citizen while he goes to war as a person? My answer consists in observing that while his personality is indelible his citizenship is not. The right on his part of putting it off falls under the category of those personal rights which are inalienable, while the right of depriving him of it springs not less obviously from the very existence of the state.

While his personality, with its corresponding rights and duties, exists independently of human volition, separate or aggregate, subjective or objective, his citizenship, with his citizen rights and duties, may cease by an act either of his own will or the will of the state to which he belongs. For the time being, it is true, he may subordinate his personality to his citizenship, and this he does in every case in which he accepts the service of the state. So long as his service to one state continues, it shuts him out from serving any other state, just as any contract of service shuts him out from any second contract. He can not serve two masters at the same time; but inasmuch as he is a servant and not a slave, he may pass from the service of one master to the service of another, when the conditions of his contract with the first have been fulfilled. As we have said, the conditions of free citizenship do not and can not exclude the right of renouncing it.

Now, such, I think, is not only the true theory of the international position of the person, but it is the theory which more or less consistently the common law of nations recognizes. Hobart Pasha was compelled to resign his commission in the English navy when he took the command of the navy of the Sultan. Had the theory of neutrality been accurately carried out, Hobart Pasha ought not only to have resigned his commission as an English officer before he became a Turkish officer (which he did not do till after), but he ought to have renounced or to have been deprived of his nationality or citizenship as an Englishman the moment after he became a Turkish officer. Citizenship and public service are inseparable, and Hobart Pasha, as an English officer, was not entitled to accept Turkish service.

The distinction between his position as an English officer and as an English citizen I hold to be this: Had he been a private English citizen he would have been entitled, in virtue of his personality, to enlist in the Turkish service, though by doing so his English citizenship would eo ipso have been abandoned. As an officer he was bound to resign his commission before his freedom of choice as a private citizen revived. He was under no obligation to continue to be an Englishman, but he had no more right to be an English citizen and a Turk at the same time than he had to be a Christian and a Mohammedan. Whilst yet an Englishman in the enjoyment of his free citizenship he was entitled to elect whether he would continue to be an Englishman or become a Turk. His last exercise of his rights as a freeborn Briton consisted in the act by which he ceased to be one. When he had become a Turk there was, of course, no impediment, either municipal or international, to his becoming a Turkish admiral.

Very much the same juristic consequences, I imagine, would have resulted had Captain Hobart, R. N., accepted the command of a Turkish trading vessel or entered into an engagement as a man before the mast; because he would thereby have passed out of the jurisdiction of the neutral state of which he was a citizen into that of one of the belligerents. As England could no longer have controlled his actions, she ought no longer to have been responsible for them. The flag which determines the nationality of the ship and cargo ought to determine the nationality of all who sail under it otherwise than as passengers. If nationality and domicile be kept apart, and on other grounds I have attempted to show that they can not be identified, no difficulty need attend either the renunciation or resumption of nationality. It does not seem, therefore, that there would be any hardship in its renunciation being made imperative on citizens of neutral states who participated in the war, or neutral sailors who entered the mercantile marine, or even on all persons who voluntarily resided in belligerent countries during the continuance of hostilities.

He does not contend that international law goes so far in the latter respect as he contends it would be reasonable it should go; but the proposition he is contending for (and I think it will be seen to be maintained by the extract which I ask to have printed in the RECORD) is that where a citizen of the country voluntarily enters the military service of a foreign country he has thereby, quoad that act, renounced the citizenship of his own country so far as to preclude him from claiming protection for the consequences of the act.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is nothing in that antagonistic to the position I took yesterday.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad the Senator thinks so.

Mr. TELLER. A man may by going permanently into the army of a foreign country expatriate himself. There is no doubt about that. The point I was making yesterday, which I seem to have some difficulty in impressing upon the mind of the Senator from Delaware, is that it is not inconsistent with the laws of the United States to assist in maintaining the existing government of a country with which we have some relations—in other words, it is not an offense against either the laws of that country or the laws of this country—and that a man is entitled to protection until he makes some movement that is offensive—

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. TELLER. No; wait a moment.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to state—

Mr. TELLER. Let me finish my sentence.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator is misrepresenting me; that is all.

Mr. TELLER. I hope I may be allowed to go on.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator is generally allowed to go on.

Mr. TELLER. I asserted yesterday over and over again, and I thought the Senator could not misunderstand it, that a man is entitled to the protection of his flag until he has forfeited that protection or has himself voluntarily abandoned that protection. That is the principle I laid down. I said that assistance in the maintenance of the status quo of a country save by a revolution of the subjects of that country is a meritorious act and not a criminal act.

Now, when a man goes into the army of a belligerent nation, a nation fighting some other, he violates the law of his land, which requires that he shall not do so. For instance, Turkey being at war, we will say, with Russia, a British subject has no right to go into the Turkish army, because that would violate the neutrality between Great Britain and Russia, and therefore he could not come in and claim protection. Now I will read what the Senator from Delaware wants to say.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Colorado is always very sure of the propositions that he lays down. That is the character of his mind.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; fairly so.

Mr. GRAY. And a very good mind it is. But unfortunately the propositions that he lays down can not be accepted, even by those who must respect him, as international law, unless they are supported by arguments that are more convincing than those he has advanced.

Now, the proposition the Senator seems to have laid down, and which I agree with, is that a citizen of this country, for instance, who enlists in the military service of a foreign country must not be considered to have committed a crime thereby. Is that the proposition?

Mr. TELLER. That depends upon a great many things. I have made no such general proposition as that.

Mr. GRAY. I have not said that he committed a crime.

Mr. TELLER. I simply spoke of the citizen who attempts to maintain the government of the foreign country where he resides.

Mr. GRAY. I do not pretend that he committed a crime.

Mr. TELLER. But if he serves that government for the purpose of attacking some other country, that may be an offense against the law of this country; and it is.

Mr. GRAY. I do not pretend that he commits a crime. The writer from whom I read the extract does not contend that he commits a crime. On the contrary, he says it is a part of the liberty that belongs to his personality, not as a citizen, but as a man, to enter the service of a foreign country; but having exercised that option, he thereby relinquishes the attributes that belong to him to a certain extent as a citizen of his own country, and he is no longer entitled to the protection of that country from the consequences which follow the act of entering the service of a foreign country. That is all I contend for. His country may, of course, see that he is not falsely accused or condemned without a fair trial. That is all that it seems to me this writer contends for. The person has a right to enter the foreign service. The American citizens in Honolulu who defended the existing government there had a right to do it. They committed no crime against this Government. We have no right to punish them. We have no right to visit them with any forfeiture further than to say that they then lose the right to call upon us to protect them from the consequences of the act of entering the service of that country; and that this English writer says.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware a question to see if I understand him. The morning reports from the Hawaiian Islands show that Great Britain places just the opposite construction upon the law, as I understand the law laid down by the Senator, and that is, if citizens of Great Britain help to maintain the existing Government they do not forfeit the right of protection of their own government. The reports state further that every American citizen there in the Hawaiian Islands did assist in maintaining the existing Government, and that under the instruction given by the Secretary of the Navy every one of them, in his person and his property, would have forfeited all the protection which the Government ordinarily ought to extend to its citizens.

Mr. GRAY. That is a plain categorical question; and I say in reply to it, in the first place, so far as propositions of international law are concerned, I do not think the best authority for them are reports of what citizens said in Honolulu that come to us by telegraph from San Francisco.

Mr. FRYE. But they raised the point.

Mr. GRAY. The telegraph says they raised the point. The citizens at Honolulu who helped maintain the existing government against a revolutionary attack, or against any attack, domestic or foreign, had a right to do it; they did not commit a crime, it may have been their duty to have so done; but in so far as their right to the protection of the United States from the consequences of that act is concerned, that they lost sub modo. However, after the revolution is over and when the military situation does not exist, when they are no longer in that service, that does not prevent them in regard to situations that are not a consequence of that act from asserting their United States citizenship and claiming the protection that that status entitles them to. That is all there is of it; and that is what I contend was involved in a proper construction of the orders given to Admiral Walker by the Secretary of the Navy last summer.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words on this subject. It seems to me that the executive department of this Government and some gentlemen who have discussed this subject here forget what ought always to be borne in mind and what is essential to a full and complete statement of this proposition, that the duties and rights and responsibilities of American citizens there in relation to the Government of the Sandwich Islands are not determined by the ordinary rules of the law of nations. They had the express permission and assent of this Government for the maintenance of a dual citizenship, expressly recognized by Mr. Bayard in his instructions to the American minister in the first Administration of President Cleveland, and expressly recognized by Mr. Foster and, I think, by Mr. Blaine afterwards.

Here was a semibarbarous country emerging from barbarism, emerging from cannibalism, under the instruction and guidance of great religious and benevolent organizations in the United States, especially the American Board of Foreign Missions. The residents of those islands were authorized by the full consent of that people to take a part in the administration of their Government, still retaining fully their character of American citizens. That was brought to the attention of our Administration by the American minister and approved. Here is a position unknown to the general law of nations, not laid down in treaties on the law of nations, not recognized by diplomacy in any other countries of which I am aware, that what is impossible without international consent exists here, a dual citizenship, in which the Government has consented that our citizens may take part, retaining that authority, in the administration of that Government, as its citizens.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. HOAR. Not just now, because it will interrupt what I am going to say.

Mr. GRAY. It is in line with what the Senator is saying.

Mr. HOAR. That being the case, it is not true to say that there can not be two domiciles, as is ordinarily said when we are speaking of residents of one state or one country, or in one town or another. It is not true to say that a man can not be a citizen of both countries at the same time. A man under that understanding has the same right to be at the same moment clothed with the full character, quality, privilege, and authority of a citizen of the United States, and the full character, quality, privilege, and authority of a citizen of Hawaii as he has to be a stockholder in two corporations at the same time. There is no inconsistency or difficulty about that position in the nature of things. We might pass a law to-morrow providing that the citizens of the various States of the Union who are here in the discharge of the public business may also and at the same time be citizens of the District of Columbia, and have every authority, including suffrage if that existed, which pertains to such citizenship.

Now, then, that being true, when they take part in maintaining the Government which the United States has recognized, and take part in maintaining a lawful government which the United States has authorized them to take part in maintaining, still being American citizens, I contend that they have a claim to the support and the protection of their own Government while they are doing that act against all consequences of the proper act. I do not suppose that the Government ever intended to go so far as to lend its own force for the maintenance of the Government; certainly not without an act of Congress; but the question whether an American citizen having taken part lawfully in the maintenance of that Government shall be seized and imprisoned or subjected to the intrigues of Great Britain or any other government in a hostile way without our intervention is a question for the sound discretion of this Government; and in accordance with the law of nations we have a full right to exercise that discretion.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this discussion; I have said more than enough about it; but I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts so far has lent me support and authority as to the question of international law by putting the contention of the Senator from Colorado upon the exceptional ground that between Hawaii and the United States a condition of things exists which takes it out of the ordinary domain of the rules of international law. The Senator from Colorado was contending yesterday, as a principle of general international law, for the very things which the Senator from Massachusetts is contending for; but the Senator from Massachusetts, I think, with more acumen, has seen the necessity of taking the question out of the domain of general international law, and basing it upon the alleged conventional relations that exist between Hawaii and the United States.

Now, about that I would have something to say. I do not agree even with the Senator from Massachusetts on that point, but I merely rose to remark that in what has just been said by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts I have his support in my contention with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, not at all. I did not hear the discussion which took place yesterday between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. Therefore I am a better judge about that.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know. I merely say that there is this ground which ought never to be forgotten, which our Department of State seems to have forgotten, and which has been often forgotten in the discussion here. It does not at all imply that the Senator from Colorado was not right or was right to say that there is another independent argument in support of the general proposition. I know nothing about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside informally in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the pending appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HOAR. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the general appropriation bill known as the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for the next fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I suppose that the motion just made would have the effect of displacing the bankruptcy bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Only temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The effect of the action of the Senate in taking up the bill moved by the Senator from Kentucky will be to send the bill which is now the unfinished business to the Calendar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was not the motion I intended to submit.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Massachusetts objected to unanimous consent being given to the bankruptcy bill being laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the only motion the Chair can entertain is to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I move that the unfinished business be informally laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he can not entertain that motion. The motion is not in order.

The only motion the Chair can entertain is a motion to proceed to the consideration of another bill, the effect of which would be to displace the unfinished business. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to prevail.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I will call for the yeas and nays on that motion, because if it is desired to displace the bankruptcy bill we ought to know it.

Mr. HOAR. I will save the time and feelings of both Senators by withdrawing my objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am obliged to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his objection; and unanimous consent is granted that the unfinished business be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I have been somewhat interested in the discussion between Senators upon what I regard as a very dry and useless abstraction. The theories they have advanced when applied in practice will hardly be considered in our future relations with the Hawaiian Islands. I believe the controversy commenced yesterday morning by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], with the pride of a lawyer whose opinions have been questioned, undertaking to vindicate himself. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], I think, with like pride responded, and the question as to which of those Senators is the more accurate lawyer still remains undecided.

The real question before the Senate is upon the amendment which authorizes a present appropriation of $500,000 and authorizes the President to enter into a contract for the construction of a cable from some point in the United States to some point in the Sandwich Islands. It proposes an immediate appropriation of $500,000, and it proposes future liabilities on the part of the Government to an uncertain amount, conceded by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to exceed $2,000,000, it may be $3,000,000, and the inquiry which presents itself to my mind is, would that be a proper appropriation of public money? I throw out of the question all the politics which may be supposed to be involved at present in the discussion, except what is embodied in a statement yesterday made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in a question of mine and his answer. The Senator said:

There had been in the past, and there was now, a project on the part of the English Government to obtain communication from Vancouver with the Hawaiian Islands. We can not afford that. There is not a single man in the Senate who thinks we can afford that.

I put this question to the Senator:

Will the Senator allow me to ask him why we can not afford it? What difference would it make to us?

To that the Senator from Connecticut responded:

Because a cable from American soil to Hawaiian soil, while it has nothing to do with political annexation, constitutes the commercial annexation of those islands to the United States, and a cable laid from British soil to Hawaiian soil practically leads to commercial annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to Great Britain. That is the reason.

The Senator from Maine yesterday admitted that the commercial necessities for the construction of such a cable would not justify construction by private capital, and he put it upon the ground that there were considerations which were far beyond the money involved, that our commercial relations with those islands were the motive.

These Senators seem to have it in their minds that the landing of a cable, or the selection of a point for the landing of a cable, would control the commercial value of the cable. That is the logic, that if a cable shall be landed in any country, that amounts to a commercial annexation of that country, or to the establishment of such intimate and exclusive relations with the country from which a cable is constructed, or on which a cable is landed, that it amounts to the annexation of that country. Whether Senators mean that that applies only to these islands or not I do not know.

Mr. President, it is the fact that some of the cables connecting the United States with foreign countries terminate on British soil at both of the termini. The great cable that was first constructed was from a point within the British jurisdiction to another point within the British jurisdiction. I have never heard that had the slightest exclusive business significance, to say nothing of political annexation.

What is the object of a telegraphic cable? It is the rapid transmission of information. What difference would it make whether it were landed at one point or another? If it is open to commerce and open to communication, what difference can it make? What advantage would we gain or lose by landing a cable upon the shores of the United States or upon a point in the British possessions, an open cable, free for all, accessible to information, and our telegraph lines being connected with it, wherever it may be placed, the telegraphs which exist in Canada or in the British possessions being also connected with it, furnishing information impartially, as commercial necessities would compel them to do, or as the common obligations of comity would compel them to do? I say, what can be the difference as to the mere terminus of this end of the line, the point selected for the cable?

Something was said yesterday in regard to the military advantages of a cable. Mr. President, can any reasoning be more absurd than that in case of a war with Great Britain such a cable could be controlled by Americans except by force? We know that these cables are regarded now as extensions of continents; their value can not be overestimated; but in case of war with Great Britain, can it be supposed that an American cable would be of any value whatever, especially one to these islands—and it would be unimportant except for that end, because we have neither fleet nor armies there?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Suppose a case like this: Suppose we had not a cable from San Francisco or Portland, Oreg., or some other point on the Pacific Coast, from our own territory to the Sandwich Islands, and there was a cable from some point in British territory to the Sandwich Islands; suppose we were at war with Great Britain, and suppose that Great Britain even had no control and no fleet that would be powerful at the Sandwich Islands, would we not be at her mercy, she having control of the only line there, whereas if we had one of our own we should not be at her mercy?

Mr. PALMER. Suppose Great Britain had a fleet in the Pacific Ocean sufficient to command our cable and take it and destroy it, what then?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then it might be different.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, these are visionary conjectures, I will not say they are not statesmanlike, but they are the ildest fancy. The idea that a cable from any point in the United States to the Sandwich Islands would be permitted to be used by this Government in case of a war with Great Britain concerning those islands is entirely fanciful and visionary.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask the Senator if he does not anticipate a time when the United States will have a fleet in the Pacific Ocean amply able to protect its interests against Great Britain and every other country?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, when that time comes we ought to make our arrangements with reference to the new conditions; but the idea of having a cable in anticipation of a fleet is exceedingly remote. I scarcely know how to illustrate the ingenious suggestion of my friend from Delaware. We may have a fleet in the centuries, and, when we have the fleet, we may begin to talk about the cable, but I scarcely know of a suggestion that so savors of Hibernicism as that of beginning now the providing of a cable with the possible anticipation of a fleet in the next century.

Mr. President, the question is, ought we now to enter into an engagement which will cost $3,000,000 on account of existing conditions or on account of such conditions as can be fairly anticipated? I say, no. I throw out of view now all the considerations except those suggested by the Senator from Connecticut. I know it is not correct to say that the construction of a cable connecting the British possessions with the Sandwich Islands would give to them the commercial control of Hawaii. I know that is not sound as a proposition of fact; I know that one cable is sufficient, if one is required. The fact is, the British Government is using the Hawaiian Islands as a mere way station, and the Canadian company promises, with the subvention of the Government, a profit from its cable, a private enterprise, if I understand, that looks to probable extensions. Ours does not. Our cable has no other possible or future connection. It is proposed to construct a cable to those islands, which contain a population probably of 90,000, upon the theory that somehow or other we are interested in prompt communication with them.

One of the Senators from Maine said yesterday that our imports amounted to about $12,000,000 a year and our exports to something over $3,000,000, I think was his statement. Here we are expected to incur expense to an amount equal to the whole sum of our exports to the Sandwich Islands, and actually to pay as much for this object as our whole exports to the islands, if the Senator from Maine was accurate in his figures. How can it be that in a business point of view such a scheme can enter into any mind as justifying the extraordinary expenditure which this amendment implies?

Mr. President, there still lies beyond all this a question to which I may give very brief attention, and analyze this bill somewhat in the line of the thought which I now propose to follow.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator leaves that point will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think the policy of Great Britain in laying telegraphic cables, opening canals, and securing coaling stations and harbors in various parts of the world is defensible for that country from a commercial or political standpoint?

Mr. PALMER. It is perfectly in harmony with British policy, Great Britain having possessions all over the world, that she should seek prompt communication between her various possessions. I can comprehend that; but we have none; our territory is limited by the continent.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me another question, does he not think that the United States ought to extend commercial relations with the various countries of the world?

Mr. PALMER. I think so; and I think those commercial relations could be extended as completely and perfectly by cable from some point in the British possessions to the Sandwich Islands as our relations are extended by the cable which terminates in the British possessions on this continent.

Mr. ALDRICH. In other words, the Senator thinks we can trust our commercial relations to our rivals, Great Britain and other countries, without taking the means for their development ourselves which all civilized nations upon the face of the globe have found necessary in their own cases?

Mr. PALMER. Most of the nations of the globe are unlike ours. Ours is a republican Government; it is based upon popular suffrage; its great purpose is the happiness of its people. Considerations of national glory, however much they may be entertained by some men, do not enter into American considerations, or ought not to enter into the consideration of American statesmen when the glory of the Republic is disconnected from the happiness of its people.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have always understood that those who sympathize with the economic views of the Senator from Illinois believe that the happiness and prosperity of the American people would be conduced by an enlargement of our foreign commerce. I have always understood that was the object they favored above all others.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator can suggest to me how our commerce with the Hawaiian Islands can be enlarged by the construction of a cable to be laid there I will listen to him with pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me very plain that a cable to these islands would be of the greatest benefit to our commerce. There can be no question about that. That is so plain, that it is not worth while to argue it or even to make a suggestion about it.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator believes in generalities. I will ask him how it will enlarge our commerce. Would it increase the productions of the islands, or would it increase the share we should get of the productions of the islands to have such a cable?

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me very plain that if American merchants could know promptly the condition of the Hawaiian markets at all times, and if the Hawaiian merchants could know the condition of the American markets, it would facilitate trade between these countries; it would give to the American merchants a much larger proportion of the trade of those islands than they now have, and if not done, the trade may be taken away from us by other countries, especially by those countries having direct communication by means of cable.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, how very shadowy all that is to a business mind! That is hardly characteristic of that noble State of Rhode Island, where men do business and make money and work for money. Here we have a mere shadow, and we are expected to follow it as if it was composed of real facts. I ask, if this cable were constructed from some point on the American continent to Hawaii, would it not help the commerce of the world?

Mr. ALDRICH. It might or it might not. That depends entirely upon circumstances; but, unfortunately for us, it might so happen that Great Britain, for instance, might prevent our use of the cable.

Mr. PALMER. It might.

Mr. ALDRICH. And there might be a very good reason for their not permitting the United States to use the cable.

Mr. PALMER. There might; and yet has Great Britain ever denied us the use of a cable which lands upon its shores?

Mr. ALDRICH. It has not for one very good reason, I take it, that there has been no occasion arising since that cable was laid for doing so; and there is very good reason that there are other cables laid from the United States to France and various European points, so that we are not dependent upon any cables which terminate upon British soil.

Mr. PALMER. And there are no occasions arising now other than those which have been invented for the purpose. We know, if we know anything, that the Sandwich Islands will gravitate in that direction which its people desire.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is the Senator from Illinois not willing to admit that there is a commercial warfare or a contention going on among the great nations of the world for enlarged markets, for the markets of the Hawaiian Islands, and for every other market in the world; and does he not know that these rivals of ours are taking advantage of every agency, of every instrumentality, to improve their commerce and enlarge their markets; and does he expect that the United States is to sit down silently and submissively and allow those countries to take these markets?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I object to the use of the words "commercial war." There are commercial rivalries in nations and between nations, and enterprising men in the United States are engaged in rivalries with each other; so are nations engaged in rivalries with each other; but the idea that a nation shall from any consideration of profit invest in a cable the cost of which will equal its whole exports to the point to which the cable is directed is one of those unprofitable experiments which does not strike me as having any business in it.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is it which has led the Government of Great Britain to build an expensive highway across her dominion to the Pacific Coast? What is it that led Great Britain, through commissioners, who have been to the Hawaiian Islands, to negotiate with the Government of that country for the construction of a cable?

Mr. PALMER. It is because, I suppose, they need it, or think they need it. I suppose they think they will make profit out of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. And it is because we think we need it, and because we believe the commercial interests of the United States demand it, that we are supporting this proposition.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator is right if he believes it, and let him act according to his beliefs. I do not believe it, and therefore I act according to my belief. I could never think of constructing a cable at a cost of $3,000,000 to a country where our imports amount to but $12,000,000 and our exports to $3,000,000. I should regard that as investing an enormous amount of money which must necessarily be unprofitable. The Senator, however, I have no doubt, will be candid enough to say that this cable would be valueless in a mere commercial point of view.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means.

Mr. PALMER. Well, valueless in the sense that it would not justify the expense. I apprehend from a mere commercial point of view the commerce would not pay the tolls on the cable. No one relies upon the cable as a commercial cable. The proposition is that it shall be built by the United States, and the tolls are regarded as altogether unimportant. Can it be that a business man would construct a cable or construct a telegraph between two points where the tolls would inevitably fail to pay a profit or interest on the investment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me further?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. We expend many millions of dollars every year in constructing and maintaining a navy, and other millions of dollars in the maintenance of our consular service. Does the Senator think that from a purely commercial standpoint those investments pay, and that the Government of the United States ought to continue those expenditures?

Mr. PALMER. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why?

Mr. PALMER. They have a value far beyond and out of proportion to their commercial results.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are no other results in sight. We certainly do not maintain a navy just at this moment for any purpose of warfare.

Mr. PALMER. Are there any other results in sight here?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. What are they?

Mr. ALDRICH. The commercial uses.

Mr. PALMER. It is confessed, I take it, by not being denied, that the whole of the amount exported from the United States to the Sandwich Islands in any one year is less than would be the outlay for a cable.

Mr. ALDRICH. Aside from the broad and general considerations of a commercial character and of a political character, which make the construction and the putting down of this cable a necessity, I believe that the investment would at least pay measurably from its inception.

Mr. PALMER. "Measurably!" How shadowy again! What exact significance is to be attached to the word "measurably?" Would it be a tenth, a twentieth, a fiftieth, or what? That is what I complain of in this discussion. The appropriation is maintained by shadows and by arguments that seem to me to lack that sort of certainty which can carry conviction to any considerate mind. The Senator says "political," and there is the true kernel of this nut. It is in order to promote the possibility or the chances of the annexation of those islands to the United States, and any pretext beyond that is hardly justified by the dignity of this body. It is proposed by these means to bring the United States Government into such relations with the so-called Hawaiian Republic that the latter can be maintained in power. That is it, that this Government shall be responsible for the maintenance of the Hawaiian Government, and if that fact were frankly avowed it might meet with an equal degree of frankness. I am opposed to the annexation or acquisition of those islands by the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois for information.

Mr. PALMER. I will furnish it if I can.

Mr. MORGAN. By what line of telegraph or cable do we now send dispatches to our fleet in Chinese waters and Japanese waters and receive dispatches from that fleet?

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Alabama can answer the question himself.

Mr. MORGAN. I can not answer it. Will the Senator from Illinois answer it?

Mr. PALMER. I supposed a Senator whose knowledge of our foreign relations is as extensive as that of any other member of the Senate would be able to furnish information on such a point.

Mr. MORGAN. I can give a guess at it. I supposed the wisdom of the Senator from Illinois—

Mr. PALMER. A guess by the Senator from Alabama would be far more valuable than a positive assertion by me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose there is no doubt about the fact that all telegraphic communication goes by way of Europe, India, and China.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to know whether it goes by Egypt and Australia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know of no cable line to Australia.

Mr. ALDRICH. Have not the English such a line?

Mr. SHERMAN. The English may have.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Ohio is mistaken in that regard.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have a line from China to Australia.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I suggest to the Senators also whether dispatches are not sent through China and Russia overland to St. Petersburg and out through Great Britain.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. There are two lines there. Can any Senator inform me which line is now being employed by the United States Government? I inquire for information, because it is a very important matter to know the fact in connection with the question whether we shall establish a cable line under our own control, or whether in times like these, when we have a ship now, it appears, involved in trouble with Chinese on account of some accident happening to a young man there, we are to send telegraphic dispatches to and receive dispatches from our Navy entirely through foreign sources, where of course the communications can be inspected.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no line of our own.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no line of our own. I have no doubt that is correct.

Mr. PALMER. I do not feel humbled when I confess my ignorance in matters as to which Senators of so much intelligence disagree. They seem not to know; I confess I do not know.

I return to the line of thought I meant to pursue a moment ago. I said the pending amendment is not dictated by commercial considerations. It is dictated by political considerations that begin and end in the United States and the Sandwich Islands. The purpose is to give to this Government the means of communicating with such directness with our forces employed near the islands as will enable the Government to command them from here. I have just said that I do not favor the acquisition of the Sandwich Islands either by annexation or otherwise.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] yesterday spoke of the necessity or the popular passion for acquisition, and he spoke of the possible acquisition of the islands and their retention as a mere province. There is no place in our system for a mere province. We have States, we have Territories of two classes, but they are contiguous to the United States. They are set up by American citizens.

Mr. ALDRICH. What kind of a government have we in Alaska?

Mr. PALMER. We have a Territorial government. It may be of an imperfect order, but still Alaska is a Territory of the United States and is so governed. As the Senator from Rhode Island is aware, we have officers there, a governor and a judicial organization. I observed that a bill passed the Senate yesterday authorizing the governor of Alaska to appoint justices of the peace and other officers for the administration of the law. What would be the province of Hawaii or the province of the Sandwich Islands? What would be its relation to the United States if it were a Territory? But I ask again what place have we in our system for such a people as inhabit those islands? I am not speaking harshly of the men who have taken possession of the Government there. That is one of the processes of development. It is so natural for the intelligent, the active, the earnest, and the greedy to usurp control and seize the property of feeble races that this case furnishes no exception to the general rule.

There are now in the islands say perhaps 90,000 souls. The Government is in the hands of a few hundred. From that few hundred, from all participation in the Government, the great mass of the people are excluded. Let us suppose that to-morrow, to-day if possible, the American Congress should pass a bill, which should become a law by the action of the President, annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States; what would be the first requirement of our Government, considering it according to its own organization and its own spirit? We should find the bulk of the valuable property there in the hands of less than 5,000 people. The great bulk of the property is in the hands of corporations organized in Hawaii mainly, but the stock is held by persons all over the United States, England, and Germany. The great bulk of the property is in the condition I have described, and that association of people have the absolute control of the Government.

I am not speaking of the wisdom of the Government as adapted to the conditions of that particular population. My argument is that we have no place in our system for such a Government or such a population. What would we do with it? Would an American Congress ratify that Government thus reorganized with all the powers the governing party claim for themselves? What would we get? Would we, as we did with the State of Texas, annex them with their constitution? Would we take them as it is now, with a President in office until 1900; with nearly all the property in the hands of a few; with a property qualification necessary for election to the legislative department; and with that anomalous organization, neither executive nor legislative, which, as I observed yesterday, made an appropriation of $50,000 for the emergent purposes of the occasion? They have a President, they have a Legislature, but each member of the Legislature must have $3,000 worth of property, I believe. The electors for the same body must have a property qualification. The second branch of the Legislature is also composed of men who are required to possess a certain amount of property, and the electors must have property. Would we have that Government, so abhorrent to the American mind, with its institutions as they now exist?

How many Japanese there are in the islands I do not know absolutely. At the time of the last census the population consisted of 89,990. Of that number 1,928 were Americans; natives and half castes, 40,612; Chinese, 15,301; Japanese, 12,306; Portuguese, 6,602; British, 1,344; Germans, 1,034; French, 70; Norwegians, 227; Polynesians, 588, and other foreigners, 419. It may be conceded, if it is demanded, that the political power is in the hands of the Americans, the British, and the Germans. They own substantially all the property, and the Government is in their hands. What would the American Congress do with respect to the great body of that population? Three or four thousand is the whole number of white people who are there. That would leave in round numbers 85,000 inhabitants of the islands who own but the smallest amount of property, many of them nothing, and who have no place in the Government.

What would an American Congress do with those islands with respect to their Government if we were to annex them to-morrow? At present we know that the people, to use a very old-fashioned term, one authorized by the usage of Mr. Jefferson, have been captivated; their power has been taken from them; their property has been taken from them. The problem for the American Congress would be to place those people in a different condition or to undo that which has been done and restore them to their rights.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said yesterday, "Oh, for one hour of Marcy and Polk!" I say, Oh, for one hour of Charles Sumner, who would not consent to the annihilation of the negro Republic of San Domingo! In his place in this Chamber he confronted power, he repelled the effort, he defended those people. Oh, for one hour of Charles Sumner, to infuse into those who were his associates the spirit that animated him! That was the genuine, manly sentiment of the Republican party. When an attempt was made to acquire San Domingo; when an attempt was made to overthrow that Government, he in his place here resisted the effort and prevented its consummation. It cost him his political life; it cost him his life. From that time on he was hunted down and pursued until he died. But there never was a moment when he halted in defense of the rights of the people of San Domingo. Is there no one now who will rise and speak for those helpless people of the Sandwich Islands who have been robbed and who are now governed by agencies as despotic as can be imagined?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

Mr. SHERMAN. As there was a question raised as to the existence of a cable line with Australia I have inquired of the encyclopedia of America, I think I may call him, Mr. Spofford. He says: "So far as I can find there is no cable working to Australia, except that of the Eastern Extension, Australia and China Telegraph Company." It is just as I supposed; all messages are sent from here by that circuitous route to Australia, when there is occasion to send any.

Mr. WHITE. I will state, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me, that in the atlas which I have before me the submarine telegraph which goes from Southampton to the Mediterranean and thence through to Suez passes to Bombay in connection with Java, and from Java it goes thence to Australia.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely the impression I had, and it is verified.

Mr. WHITE. And a switch passes up the Chinese coast and is anchored at Nagasaki in Japan.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no cable line across the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, who can measure the flight of lightning? It shineth from the east even to the west in a moment. Electric communication outravels the sun. The transactions that occurred in Europe this morning, or will occur there this afternoon, reach us according to the measure of time before they occur. Indirectness is nothing here. But still I do not mean to go back to that branch of the argument. I have shown the condition of those people; and we have been discussing the rights and duties of American citizens there. Paying but a moment's attention to the subject of international law, which has been discussed, I will say that I have no doubt of the right of American citizens abroad to assist in every attempt at maintaining order, and the Secretary of the Navy does not mean to contradict that view. His language is as follows:

An American who, during a revolution in a foreign country, participates in an attempt by force of arms or violence to maintain or overthrow the existing government, can not claim that the Government of the United States shall protect him against the consequences of such act.

Undoubtedly it is the duty of an American citizen abroad to assist in the maintenance of public order. But that can be accomplished by what are termed civil means. The Secretary of the Navy does not refer to that. He says "during a revolution." Of course that applies to an entirely different condition of things. Those who have spoken upon this subject heretofore seem to have lost sight of that question. During the American civil war we had many illustrations of it.

The doctrine held by the Administration at Washington during the civil war was that a citizen of a foreign country who interfered on either side in the civil war simply shared the fortunes of his party. I recollect a very significant case that occurred during my administration of the Department of Kentucky. A French subject, or citizen, reported himself to me at Louisville as having just left the Confederate army, which was then disbanding. I had an impression that participation in the rebellion, as I regarded it and termed it, was a flagrant offense against the laws of the United States.

He needed my assistance. I asked him to remain until I could communicate with the Secretary of War. I did so by telegraph. The answer of the Secretary of War was that he shared the fortunes of his party, that, the rebellion having been overthrown, he must be regarded precisely as other soldiers in the Confederate army were to be considered. I have no doubt that that is the correct view. That was a rebellion or an attempted revolution. There the Confederates were treated as belligerents. They were given many of the rights of war. They were recognized to a very large extent as belligerents. This French citizen had taken part; he had been a soldier in the Confederate army; and he simply shared the fortunes of his party.

The Secretary of the Navy has reference to a revolution, and he warns American citizens as to what will be the course of this Government toward them in case they take part in a revolution.

The fact about it is that it is very difficult to imagine a revolution in the Hawaiian Islands when the army does not consist of more than 200 men. It seems to me to be so small an affair that it must be like Mr. Lincoln's story of the fight when the justice held that the two men before him were not able to get up a fight and were therefore entitled to be discharged. [Laughter.] This being the warning of our Government, it must be supposed to have relation only to that which can be relatively regarded as a revolution.

The right of a citizen to participate in such a revolution is no violation of our laws, as I understand it, but it means, and the Secretary of the Navy means, no more than this: "If you take part in a revolution you must share the fortunes of those of the party with which you act." Notwithstanding the theory of the Senator from Massachusetts, who supposes that our relations to the Hawaiian Islands are governed by a modified international law, that was the warning given by one having the right to do it, the warning given to our people to take no part in a revolution. It had no relation to the performance of their duties as citizens in the preservation of public order.

Mr. President, I think I have said substantially all I wish to say. What may be the future of those islands I do not know. I voted for the resolutions passed at the last session of Congress; and I insist now that any interference with those people would be unfriendly to the United States. Why? I say nothing of our commercial relations, but I watch with the greatest interest this development of our republicanism in those islands. At present it is worse than a bastard republic. It is to-day a mere oligarchical government from which the great mass of the people are to be excluded, and are excluded, and robbed. We have nothing like it. We have no methods of aiding such people.

The philosophy of our relations with those islands should be to leave them undisturbed. Their Government is a miserable one, an oppressive one. It is antirepublican except by comparison, and it is more violative of popular rights than was the Government of the Queen. A comparison between the constitution which was enforced during the nominal reign of that Queen shows that the Government was more favorable to popular rights than that which has been adopted by these republicans. I invite comparison between the two constitutions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Illinois pardon me?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator how in his opinion it compares with the government at the capital of the United States, where suffrage is absolutely denied to all the citizens.

Mr. PALMER. The comparison is hardly a fair one, because the foreigners there are robbing the people, and here the people are robbing us. [Laughter.] That is a very palpable distinction. We give to the people here; they take from the people there. That is a very striking difference, it seems to me.

Mr. President, I am substantially through with what I had to say. I am endeavoring now to make the idea more distinct, if I can, that nothing has been gained except in the forms of popular government. We have got rid of the nominal Queen, and we call it republicanism. If permitted to continue it will ripen into true republicanism, I have no doubt, as education is diffused among those people, which will perhaps take centuries. It is a Government not worse than that to which they have been accustomed. They were the slaves of their chiefs. They are now the inferiors of a much more enlightened body of men. There is some hope for them. I say such may be the development of that Government that it may reach the point of true republicanism.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. HIGGINS. I understand that the first work of the American missionaries was to establish schools in those islands; that the natives showed the greatest avidity for learning and for knowledge, and that they are probably among the best educated people in the world in common-school education.

Mr. PALMER. It is by such means that I expect their development; but now there is no place in our system for them. What the great Master may do hereafter, what may be His purposes in regard to those people, I know not. I know this, that one of these days the new Empire of Japan will be appearing on the Pacific Ocean as one of the active political forces, and that there is to-day far more to dread from Japanese influences in the Hawaiian Islands than from British influence. The British influence is civilizing. I understand that there are now 20,000 Japanese on the islands.

The Chinese are not to be reckoned, because the campaign of the Japanese in China has been but a march. When those people are impressed, as they will be, by the belief that they are the greatest soldiers in the world because they have overcome the Chinese, you may look for their domination or attempted domination of whatever may be brought within their reach. I regard the force of 20,000 Japanese in the Hawaiian Islands to-day as a subject of extreme danger.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I must express my surprise that the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] should close a speech against the United States building a cable from San Francisco to Hawaii by a statement to which we may all agree, that a new and great power in the Pacific has arisen for this country and all others to reckon with. It seems to me that that furnishes a new, a novel, and a potent argument why the cable should be laid by the United States Government. The fact that this question has arisen and is here to-day shows that the struggle for commercial if not for military supremacy in the North Pacific has reached an acute stage.

The fact that the morning papers give us the news of the final overthrow of the monarchical party in the Sandwich Islands, the abdication of the Queen, and that her retainers are subject either to execution or exile, further shows that the struggle for commercial supremacy has reached an acute stage. For, disguise it as we may, it seems to me that the contests or conflicts that have been going on there apparently between two factions of the Hawaiian people have really been conflicts between the interests of the American Republic and the British Empire. Behind a cable from San Francisco to Honolulu rests American interests. Behind a cable from Vancouver by way of Honolulu to Australia are British interests. Behind the interests of a republic there are the interests of this American Republic of ours. Behind the monarchy and the Queen lurk the interests of the British Empire.

The commercial race which is going on throughout the world with such acuteness, with such vigor and activity, is not to be criticised. It is the peaceful race of mankind at this day. But it behooves every country to look after its own interests, and it seems to me that those of the United States can in no way be better subserved in the North Pacific than by the laying of this cable.

A short review of the position of the United States in respect to those islands may not be without interest or out of place. It first arose, of course, out of the New England whaling fleets in the Northern Pacific and Bering Sea finding the Sandwich Islands their proper base of operations. That communication carried with it American commerce and American missionaries, American civilization, Christianity, schools, government; and out of these would come in turn an American republic developed by just such influences. That originated in 1820. Later on the acquisition of California and the settlement of Oregon gave to our country upon the Pacific Coast as long a shore as on the Atlantic, and that has been followed in turn by the closest relations with the Hawaiian Islands.

In 1875 we took a long step, a decisive step, of national policy which no party and no statesman to-day would assume to revoke or undo, unless it may be our friends from Louisiana with regard to their sugar interests, and that was the negotiation of the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Hawaii. By that treaty those islands were incorporated into the commercial system of the United States. No duties were laid against their principal products and no duties were laid by them against our principal products. They became, for all purposes of production, manufacture, and trade, a part of the American system. Therefore there was a reason behind the fact called to the attention of the Senate yesterday by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in urging the pending amendment to the appropriation bill that there are more American vessels trading with those islands than those of any other country, and there are more American vessels trading with them than trade with any other people. What is left to us of commerce under our flag is the commerce with those islands. Elsewhere we have been driven from the seas. Only at Southampton does the American tonnage exceed that at Honolulu, and that for the simple reason that two large Atlantic steamers have been put under the American flag.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will it interrupt the Senator from Delaware if I ask him a question?

Mr. HIGGINS. Not at all.

Mr. CAFFERY. I inquire of the Senator how much tonnage the American ships carried that landed at Honolulu, and how much tonnage was contained in the vessels that landed at Southampton?

Mr. HIGGINS. The tables presented by the Senator from Maine yesterday show that the American tonnage at Honolulu is 146,993 tons, being larger than that to any other foreign port except Southampton and Yokohama. Also that the American tonnage to the Hawaiian Islands is 181,817 tons, while the British tonnage aggregates 111,655 tons.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to ask the Senator another question. I ask the Senator whether the tonnage that is carried by American ships to Southampton represents the American trade?

Mr. HIGGINS. Not at all.

Mr. CAFFERY. Is not the American trade carried in other than American bottoms?

Mr. HIGGINS. Undoubtedly. Of course, Mr. President, we face the fact that American trade is carried in foreign bottoms except in the North Pacific. What I argue for is a policy on the part of the United States that will at least maintain as much of the carrying trade of our own products as we already have.

No more interesting chapter is to be found in our national history than the development of American sentiment by American missionaries among that most interesting people. We carried to them the teachings of our religion; we developed among them the principles of our liberty; and at last in the fullness of time, when their old high chiefs had died and their really royal line had become extinct and none but parvenues could aspire to the position of monarch, monarchy itself became effete and an anachronism no longer possible. This marvelously speedy evolution of the Hawaiian people, beginning with barbarism in 1820, passing through the stages of feudalism and limited monarchy, came to that of the republic in 1893; and now on this 7th day of February, 1895, we have the definitive fact announced that the monarchy has passed, and passed forever, and that Hawaii has substantially become one of the republics of the world.

The interest of our country and of all countries in this question arises of course out of the geographical location of the islands. They are in fact appended and appurtenant, to use the old language of the law, to this continent. They are a part of our great landed possession here between ocean and ocean. They are more than twice as far from the Asiatic continent as they are from our continent. We are the great people bordering upon them whose power and position necessarily dominate there. More than that, Mr. President, they are an interesting example of the great truth that it behooves all parties and all public men not to forget that it is the American market that dominates this continent and largely dominates the world. The West Indies on our other shore only prosper as they have access to our market. Hawaii can only prosper as it has access to our market. That of itself determines naturally and properly the relation of Hawaii; and it seems to me it should teach a lesson and a plain one to all who would attempt to substitute British for American domination there.

I have to confess, Mr. President, to a further surprise at the position taken by my distinguished friend from Illinois this morning, that a cable to Hawaii would be of no great commercial advantage to the United States. The old principle is that trade goes with the flag. I do not know but that the Senator from Illinois in claiming to speak for the business people in his controversy with the Senator from Rhode Island thinks that good business does not require prompt communication, whereas everyone knows that cable communication is indispensable to the best conditions of business, and that whoever has it under the circumstances has a vast advantage over any competing interest which does not enjoy quick communication. But it is more singular that that contention should be advanced here this morning, when the question whether we shall initiate a cable has really been forced upon us by the British undertaking, a statement of which always lies upon our table. The Senator from Illinois may well take a leaf from the book of our brethren of the north and read the proceedings of the Ottawa conference last September. I had the report of all those proceedings as reported by the Earl of Jersey to the British Government, he being the representative of that Government, but I neglected to preserve it, so that I have not the use of it now.

The British scheme is a cable from Vancouver to one of the Australian ports, to stop at Honolulu upon one condition, and that condition is that it shall land on soil over which the British Government shall have the sole sovereignty. Of course it would be vastly easier, cheaper, and in all respects better to lay a cable stopping at Honolulu, and, there beginning its route, measure again from that point to Australia, than it would to take it over the vast distance which would be necessary to unite British Columbia with the Australian Islands. But that advantage will be abandoned by the British Government unless they can land the cable upon British soil. As the result of the Ottawa conference that proposition was made by the British representative to the Hawaiian Government, and the latter Government referred it to the United States.

The statesmanship of the past, Mr. President, stood this people in good stead then, and the reciprocity treaty of 1875 between us and the Hawaiian Islands provided that that Government should not sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any portion of its territory to any other Government, power, or principality than to the United States. What is it that the British ask in this regard? That they shall have the right of sovereignty over one of those islands—Necker Island. The scheme began a little more modestly, apparently, in the letter of Mr. Hatch, which is one of the inclosures in the President's message to Congress of January 9 on this subject. It recites the provision of the treaty of reciprocity between the United States and Hawaii, which reads:

It is agreed on the part of His Hawaiian Majesty that so long as this treaty shall remain in force he will not lease or otherwise dispose of, or create any lien upon any port, harbor, or territory in his dominions, or grant any special privilege or rights of use therein to any other power, state, or Government, nor make any treaty by which any other nation shall obtain the same privilege relative to the admission of any articles free of duty hereby secured to the United States.

In a further memorandum of agreement purporting to be between the Hawaiian Government and the representatives of Great Britain and the British Colonies, made at Honolulu, in October, 1894, with regard to the proposal to lay a submarine cable between Canada and Australia, connected by a branch line with Honolulu, there is provision made for a lease of Necker Island, or French Frigate Shoal, or Bird Island, or some other uninhabited island, whichever the British Government may select. The second paragraph provides that exclusive possession, free from disturbance, shall be given to the British Government, with exemption from all kinds of taxation. But when the memorandum reaches us in the message of the President, incorporated in the text of his words to Congress, it goes further and to complete sovereignty. The President says:

The attention of the Congress is directed to the following statement contained in a communication addressed to the Hawaiian Government by the representatives of Great Britain:

"We propose to inform the British Government of your inquiry, whether they would accept the sovereignty of Necker Island or some other uninhabited island on condition that no subsidy is required from you. As we explained, we have not felt at liberty to entertain that question ourselves, as we were definitely instructed not to ask for the sovereignty of any island, but only for a lease simply for the purpose of the cable."

So it comes before us in the suggestion of a grant of sovereignty. It has been claimed by the friends of a distinguished statesman, formerly a member of this body from my own State, Mr. Clayton, as one of the justifications of the famous Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that other than the handing back in one of the great treaties of peace of territory captured in war, it was the first instance where the British Government, by negotiations, were ever induced to give up possession of any land on this globe upon which they fastened their grasp. They did retire from Grey Town, and gave up their claim to the sovereignty of that section of country which would be the mouth of the Nicaragua Canal. Here the deliberate proposition made to the American people is that by our act we shall create a British sovereignty in the heart of the Hawaiian Islands, and in the face of a treaty which provides that no other country shall ever have sovereignty there.

Why is such sovereignty asked? Why is the lease of an island there asked for by the British Government? Have we not cables from the other side landing in the United States—the French cable and possibly British cables? Do we cede sovereignty to France or England when such a cable is landed in the United States? Is there any call or need or necessity for the cession of territory in landing a cable merely for commercial purposes? Clearly not. Why is special sovereignty asked by the British for the terminus of a cable in Honolulu, except it may be for a military or a naval purpose, so that in time of war they will have exclusive control of all information which passes through that channel? We thus see that this is an open and undisguised attempt to extend on the Pacific Coast of our continent not merely a commercial, but a military and naval cordon, which incloses and encompasses us on the Atlantic shore.

All this, Mr. President, looks forward to an aggrandizement of British trade and commerce. As I said before, that is perfectly fair and open competition in this world of ours. It is for somebody to take the hindmost place. But British trade and commercial supremacy have not always depended merely upon commercial efforts. On the contrary, such trade and supremacy rest on the power of the Empire. One portion of the world which was largely free from competition, in which we had almost unchecked opportunity for development, was this very Northern Pacific Ocean; but a great change came over it with the opening up of Vancouver and British Columbia by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

Before I say a word on that subject, however, it may not be out of place to simply review the chapter by which this situation came about. It originated in the French occupation of Canada. In the treaty of 1760 the boundary lines between France and the British possessions in what is now the United States were not given accurate and complete settlement. The conflict over who should control this continent then arose, and the first gun of the seven years war, which spread over Europe and chronicled the heroic achievements of Frederick the Great, began with the crack of the rifle on the banks of the Ohio in the Pennsylvania mountains. It was as to who should control this country that the great nations of the earth then joined issue in battle. The peace of 1763 almost wiped out French interests on this continent and gave them all to England. But there was a sudden upsetting and change of that determination about twenty years afterwards in the peace of 1780, which acknowledged the independence of the United States of America, left Great Britain in possession of Canada, and transferred to her the old French attack upon our people and our commerce.

We had the war of 1812, and subsequently the adjustment of the boundary in Maine and the Oregon boundary. So all such questions have been settled. Almost the one unsettled matter is that of these islands appendant and appurtenant to the continent of North America. The news of yesterday and to-day goes a long way to determine what the course of empire is there.

As I said earlier in my remarks, behind the monarchy and the Queen stood British interests. I do not mean for an instant to say that the British Government, as such, ever took an aggressive step toward the control of those islands. At the same time, we have testimony that their late representative there, Major Wodehouse, went a great way in support of the monarchy and the interests of the Queen.

The attitude of the British in respect to Hawaii is very similar to what it is in respect to Turkey and the Bosphorus. She does nothing actively or aggressively there, and yet one of the great questions which agitate and concern the world is that it is British interest which retains the Turk in Europe; that the line of British empire in India, China, and Australia must be preserved by her dominance at the Bosphorus and over the Mediterranean; that people of Birmingham and Manchester and other places in England must not starve, even though Bulgarian atrocities go unpunished and Armenian Christians are spitted on Turkish bayonets. No such thing has been done in Hawaii. It has been the microcosm of politics, the opera bouffe of political and commercial conflict, but on this small stage a similar conflict has been wrought out.

But, Mr. President, as I took occasion to say on this floor earlier in the session, the adverse influence met a different sort of opposition in those who sustained the American interests in Hawaii. The sons of the missionaries, the blood of New England, the American spirit stood, not only for American interests, but for American civilization. To our shame, be it said, unaided by this Government, but on the contrary, frowned upon and antagonized by it, they have pursued their course with manly dignity and firmness, until to-day their enemies are under their feet. Do what we may, build this cable or not build it, help Great Britain forward in her struggle for supremacy, or make it a fair race in competition by building the cable ourselves, we have this great interest in charge; and as in the past, so in the future, we can leave those matters to the American men on those islands.

Mr. President, the letter of Admiral Walker in response to a resolution of the Senate of August 17 last to the Secretary of the Navy is evidence, and, under the circumstances, is about the best evidence to which we can recur as to the actual facts of the situation in Honolulu. The question he was writing about is one which does not concern us particularly now, and I do not intend to consider the question whether it was well to have a United States vessel at Honolulu at that time; but in discussing it he throws light upon the policy of the British Government or their representatives in respect to the islands. He says:

In my opinion the Republic has ample strength to maintain itself and to preserve peace, and would suppress riot or counter revolution with a firm hand; but as long as foreign vessels lay in the harbor of Honolulu, ready at a moment's notice, in the event of disturbance, to land forces to secure the safety of life and property, it was open to the enemies of the Government to say that tranquility was maintained only by the presence of those ships. I found leading members of the Government and others strongly of this opinion, and expressing satisfaction with the prospect of being left for a time entirely alone.

But as soon as it was known that the Philadelphia was to leave on the 8th a movement was set on foot among the English residents to retain the Champion, and the British minister, Major Wodehouse, willingly consented to order her to remain in port.

This change of plan, and the circumstances under which it was made, put the situation in a new and somewhat serious light, to thoroughly appreciate which it is necessary to understand the attitude and ambitions of Major Wodehouse.

He had been at Honolulu nearly thirty years, and his constant struggle had been to set English influence against American influence, and make it predominate, and as an essential part of this policy to maintain the monarchy. The successful revolution and the establishment of a Republic during the last year of his diplomatic service, upon the eve of his retirement, was an evidence of failure which made him bitter and hostile. Although holding the position of British minister and transacting diplomatic business with the Government de facto, he had been a pronounced and partisan Royalist. It is currently believed that he had been in constant secret communication with Liliuokalani, and entirely in the confidence of the Royalist leaders, and he had certainly lost no opportunity to embarrass the present Government, disregarding the courtesies and amenities due from one in his position. But for his impending retirement, matters would have probably come, some time ago, to an issue which would have resulted in his recall or dismissal.

The commanding officer of the Champion—

That is a British vessel—

had the same interests and views, and was quite ready to support his minister.

These unusual circumstances presented the situation in the following light: The chances of any disturbance taking place through the action of the Royalists after the departure of the Philadelphia were considerably increased by this significant detention of the Champion. Should any such disturbance take place I believe the British minister would seize upon any pretext, however slight, to land the Champion's forces, and that once on shore their influence would be to encourage the Royalists and to increase or prolong the difficulty. Should such action result in the restoration of the monarchy, English influence would henceforth control with Liliuokalani.

There is another consideration which bears upon this point. The British are very much in the habit of retaining any foothold once obtained; and there is much talk at present of a cable between the Pacific colonies, "to land only on British soil." Should an English military force be established on shore at Honolulu to preserve order there might not readily be found the opportune moment for its withdrawal. Whatever might be the willingness of the home

Government to yield to the claims of the United States, strong colonial pressure would be brought upon it to oppose these claims. It should not be forgotten in this connection that Pearl Harbor offers, strategically and otherwise, the finest site for a naval and coaling station to be found in the whole Pacific.

Later on he says:

It is a fact which should not be lost sight of that English influence is always opposed to American influence in the Hawaiian Islands. It is colonial and local in its character, influenced largely, if not principally, by trade jealousies, but it is a very potent factor, and is strong enough to eventually influence the attitude of the British diplomatic representatives and to have its effect upon British naval officers who remain there for any length of time. The existence of this antagonism and of its influences should always be taken into account. Their expression was not noticeable during the last few days of my stay at Honolulu, especially before Major Wodehouse ceased to be minister. The English and Royalists were equally elated at the impending departure of the Philadelphia, leaving the Champion in port, while the supporters of the Government regarded the situation with regret. Many women, especially, were emphatic in their apprehension, fearing a revival of former excitements and anxieties.

He then goes on to say:

While I would not hesitate in the least to leave the islands entirely alone, I deem it unsafe to leave them under British protection. It jeopardizes our influence there, and might lead to awkward complications.

That is substantially the position taken by the British influences there. All this, as I stated before, has become more exigent and acute with the opening up, through the Canadian Pacific Railway, of a great commercial and military route around the world, controlled by Great Britain alone. Of course it is true that that railway line could not subsist for six months without the privilege which we foolishly, as I think, granted to it, of carrying freight between American points. Without that, as its own promoters say, it could not earn its axle grease, but that company has established from Vancouver, upon the Pacific, to the Pacific ports in Japan, China, and Australia lines of large and fast steamers, which are now rapidly taking in British bottoms to British ports this very Hawaiian trade which hitherto has been ours. I saw a statement to that effect within the last three weeks in the newspapers, but neglected to preserve it. It will be found, however, that that is going on more and more rapidly, and that the rapidity of change will be insured if a British cable goes there and no American cable. We could hardly hold it if we had an American cable and there was no British cable.

But the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] referred to another matter which carries with it very different consequences from those which the Senator drew. I speak of the heterogeneous population of the Islands. He argues from that fact that the islands are not fit for incorporation with the United States. I argue from it that it lays upon us a grave duty to discharge toward those islands, to see that they do not pass into hostile hands, and that American interests and American influences shall continue predominant there. We can see from the revolution, which has now come to its end apparently, under what great stress the people there who are charged with the functions of government have had to conduct their affairs. Only 1,500 men in all constituted the entire military force which, by the reports of this morning, was employed by the Government in the suppression of the so-called rebellion. Yet there are 90,000 people in the islands. Of this number 20,000 are Japanese, courageous, and disposed to assert themselves.

There is also no mean fighting capacity in the natives themselves. But we can not be the dog in the manger. We can not order England and Japan off the premises and keep off the premises ourselves. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us. The fact of the existence of that heterogeneous population is no excuse to Mr. Dole and his colleagues in attempting to meet the difficulties of the situation, and it seems to me it is no reason why we should refuse our assistance in such a solution of the problem as will conduce most to their interests as well as to those of the American Republic.

Still further, as I remarked at the outset, the presence of a new first-class power in the world and upon the Pacific is not less startling than it is interesting to all the nations of the earth. Notice is served upon them that Japan has appeared armed cap-a-pie and taken her place in the front rank among the great nations of the earth. Be she civilized or barbarous, according as people may think with respect to the occurrence at Port Arthur, there is no denial that upon the Pacific Ocean this great military, naval, and commercial power has appeared.

Her manufactures are growing apace, her commerce is growing apace, and we must reflect that this is not the Atlantic Ocean, but the Pacific. We may well leave to European powers the settlement of all question in the Atlantic and with a little, if any, fleet maintain ourselves secure in our great military strength and in our peaceful situation against possible aggressions from any European power. It may be that in like manner we have nothing to fear from Japan or China, should the latter in a few years under this rude awakening become in turn an aggressive military power, as is possible, but we can not rely in that far ocean upon the presence of European fleets alone. It comes to us. Least of all can we afford to allow the Hawaiian Islands to pass under Japanese control and thus bring an Asiatic power that near our door.

We may go along here dreaming, in this happy-go-lucky sort of manner, under the belief that there is no interest beyond ourselves which we are called upon to secure or protect, but the misery of the situation will be revealed when we wake up to find our commerce destroyed and insult and dishonor put upon us because we have not taken the ounce of caution and by the establishment of a great fleet made ourselves able to fill the place we hold as one of the great powers of the earth. We shall abandon that position if we abandon the Hawaiian Islands, and almost the first step of that abandonment would be if, with this project of a British cable pending, we should say to the people of those islands: "We will not let you have a British cable and we will not build one ourselves. Rich we are, but we are also mean; greedy we are, but we will starve you. We will be the dog in the manger. We will let nobody else give you the breath of commercial life which a cable infuses, but we will not build one ourselves."

Mr. President, if the proposition of a British cable between British Columbia and Australia has done nothing else, it has at least served the good purpose to wake up the United States and to let us see that events will not wait upon us, and that in this behalf on a matter so important to our people and our nation we can no longer sit supinely by and leave these things alone.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, in the course of the eloquent and interesting remarks made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], who has just taken his seat, he said no other Senators were opposed to the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Hawaii than the Louisiana Senators. I do not think the Senator, who was a member of this body in 1890, can have a very clear recollection of what occurred then, because at that time, when the Hawaiian treaty was before the Senate for discussion, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], referring to the treaty, said:

No country ever made so foolish a treaty as that. There probably is not in the history of the human race a contract so one-sided, so absurd, and so indefensible. That treaty has cost us $48,000,000. We got no advantages from it, and our exportations to those islands did not largely increase.

Another Republican Senator on that occasion spoke thus:

We could have given to the Hawaiian Government all the imports that we have made to that country, and then paid it a bonus of over $13,000,000, if we had charged the ordinary duties on sugar, rice, and other articles admitted free under the treaty. If this treaty stands five years more, we will have given to the sugar kings of the Sandwich Islands and to the sugar kings of San Francisco enough money to construct and put in operation the Nicaragua Canal. We have already given them between $11 and $12 for every acre of land in the Kingdom of Hawaii.

Again, I find that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], another distinguished Republican, introduced a resolution in the Forty-seventh Congress to abolish the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty, and it was referred to the Finance Committee. The committee made a report from which I will read an extract. It says that a simple recital of the facts as to our trade with Hawaii, before and since the treaty—will show its great inequality and the conspicuous injustice to our Government and its people of its longer continuance.

The report goes on to make a calculation of the amount of sugar imported into this country from those islands and the amount of produce imported into the islands from the United States, showing this great inequality.

So the Senator from Delaware has crept into an unconscious or an unwitting error by the remark he made that the reciprocity treaty with Hawaii was opposed by only the Louisiana Senators. Possibly the Senators whom I have quoted have seen a new light since the last dispensation of the McKinley Act. I do not know about that, but at that period they were hostile to the treaty, and the reasons they then gave are quite as potent now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Louisiana will agree that the act of 1890, to which he has alluded, took away the advantage which before that time the planters of the Hawaiian Islands had over other sugar producers.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not aware of that act.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see why the Senator from Louisiana is not aware of it. He understands the history of that act.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am aware of the fact that the McKinley duties left raw sugar free, and that a duty was imposed upon all sugars above 16 Dutch standard, in favor, particularly, of the American Sugar Refining Company, which sugar refining company the Senator from Rhode Island himself announced in the debate on the tariff bill last year derived $6,000,000 from the imposition of that tariff.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Louisiana either does not understand my question or else he is evading it; I do not know which.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not evading the question if I understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Louisiana could not have understood it, then. I asked him if he was not aware, as I suppose he must be, being familiar with all questions relating to sugar production, that the act of 1890 in express terms took away from the sugar producers of the Hawaiian Islands the advantages which they had over other sugar producers.

In other words, prior to 1890 other producers of sugar throughout the world had to pay a duty of 2 cents a pound to have their sugar introduced in the United States. Under the reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands the producers of sugar in those islands paid no duty whatever. This was in fact and in effect a bounty of 2 cents a pound upon all the sugars produced in the Hawaiian Islands; and for that reason the Senator from Vermont and myself and other Senators have at all times opposed that provision of the reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands. The act of 1890 put the sugar producers of the Hawaiian Islands upon the same plane as every other sugar producer in the world, and gave to the sugar producers in the United States a bounty of 2 cents a pound practically upon their product. The act of 1890 for the first time took away the advantages of the producers of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. CAFFERY. I understand that. I said possibly a new light had dawned in regard to the treaty after the enactment of the McKinley law.

Mr. ALDRICH. There was no new light in regard to it at all. The act of 1894, which was passed by the vote of the Senator from Louisiana, restored that advantage to the sugar producers of the Hawaiian Islands and took it away from the producers of the United States.

Mr. CAFFERY. Consequently the Senator from Rhode Island ought to be, as he is, in accord with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont in regard to the reciprocity treaty, because now the Hawaiians have their sugars free under the treaty, while when the rest of the world import their sugar they pay a tax.

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated in the course of the debate upon the act of 1894 that that was the fact. I called the attention of the Senator from Louisiana and his fellow-Senators upon the other side to the fact that it would restore to the sugar producers of the Hawaiian Islands the advantages which they did not have under the act of 1890.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will remind the Senator from Rhode Island that I was then and am now hostile to the treaty.

Mr. ALDRICH. A hostility that takes the form of words with votes upon the other side sometimes leads to inconsistency.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator can not put me in a hole on that point with his sophistical reasoning. The Senator knows very well that, as a Democrat, I had to vote for the whole bill, and could not reject it on account of some clause in it that I did not indorse. The clause in the last act maintaining the reciprocity treaty was exceedingly distasteful to me. I am as hostile to it now as I was then. But I simply wanted to say to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] that the assertion that he made that nobody was opposed to the treaty but the Senators from Louisiana was not correct, as leading lights on the Republican side had manifested their hostility to it.

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask the Senator from Louisiana if any of them are now moving for its abrogation?

Mr. CAFFERY. If they hold the same view they did then, that the rest of the world importing sugar into the United States must pay a tax, while giving sugar free to the Hawaiian Islands is an unnecessary and unequal bonus to Hawaii, I imagine they would still be opposed to it.

Mr. HIGGINS. If the Senator will allow me I should like to say a word.

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. HIGGINS. As I understand the position of the people of Louisiana it is that they crave from the United States—

Mr. CAFFERY. Is the Senator proceeding to ask me a question?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes, sir. They propose to ask of the United States either such a duty on sugar or such a bounty to be paid to them for the production of sugar as will enable them to produce sugar profitably. I wish to say that I am in favor of the latter policy. I prefer a bounty to the duty. In that respect the citizens of Louisiana are asking a favor of the rest of the country. Now, I ask the Senator from Louisiana if the country in its totality feels that for national, commercial, political, military, and naval reasons it needs such a policy to be applied to the people of Hawaii as to incorporate those islands as a part of the American Republic, does he think that it is a wise policy on the part of the people of Louisiana to antagonize the United States when they are asking the United States for favors?

Mr. CAFFERY. I understand the Senator from Delaware to presume that the people of Louisiana indorse the principles of a bounty and now ask the Senate and the other House to adopt the bounty proposition.

Mr. HIGGINS. I do not intend to get into any dispute with the Senator on that point, but I really did say that, for I thought the Senator or his people wanted the bounty. If they do not, I will withdraw the statement. But I will suppose that they want a duty on sugar, and it is immaterial to me whether it be a duty or a bounty, for the purposes of this question.

Mr. CAFFERY. Even conceding the fact to be as the Senator from Delaware has stated, and I do not so concede, that the people of Louisiana desire the granting of a bounty for national purposes, to develop a great industry in Louisiana, I do not think there is any sort of comparison between the development of a home industry in our own States and the laying of an ocean cable to a foreign country.

Mr. HIGGINS. I then suggest to the Senator whether it is not important that the mass of the people of the United States differ with him; whether the people of Louisiana can afford to put themselves in the position of antagonizing the wish of the people of the United States in the maintenance of a national policy because it happens to compete with their local interests as sugar producers.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not know that the people of the United States desire the adoption of any such national policy as is suggested by the Senator from Delaware. If opinions were to be given I am quite free to give mine that they do not desire the adoption of any such policy.

Now, Mr. President, while I am up I will say that there is no sort of warrant, in my opinion, for the Government of the United States, either directly or indirectly, to lay a cable between the United States and Honolulu, or any part of the Hawaiian dominions. It has been broadly stated on this floor, it has been iterated and reiterated, that we possess in regard to foreign subjects every right and power that every other nation possesses. The argument seems to be that every other nation possesses the power to lay a submarine cable, or telegraphic communication, from beyond its own dominions to foreign dominions, and therefore the United States possesses that power.

I do not see that it is a foreign power, to start with. I do not see that it has any relation to a foreign power. I see that it is only a domestic power. The only warrant which you can possibly have for it would be to regulate commerce; and the regulation of foreign commerce is a domestic power and not a foreign power. If the argument be that we have the power to lay this cable in execution of the grant to regulate commerce with foreign nations the argument falls, because the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations is necessarily a domestic power; and it implies that the foreign commerce must be within the scope and purview of the jurisdiction of the United States before the power of the United States to regulate commerce can attach.

Now, Mr. President, what argument is there of any sort of weight to establish even the utility of this submarine cable? Senators who have addressed the Senate upon this subject laid great stress upon the number of ships bearing the American flag that land at Honolulu; but there are only about $10,000,000 of exports annually from that country to the United States and only about $3,000,000 of exports from the United States to that country.

Is it possible that it would take this vast number of ships—greater, as I am told by the Senator from Delaware, than annually visit the port of Southampton—to transport $10,000,000 worth of products from Honolulu to the United States and $3,000,000 worth of products from the United States to Honolulu? How is this commerce to be facilitated by a submarine cable? We monopolize the commerce of that coast, as has been stated time and time again. As far back as the time of Mr. Webster he stated that we had four-fifths of the trade of that country. The nearness of our coast to Honolulu, the direct trade flowing between the Pacific coast and that country, will maintain that trade.

The spook of the supremacy of Great Britain in these trade relations does not at all appal me. That is no sort of reason why we should lay a submarine cable. If the trade of Hawaii with Great Britain threatens in the near future to be so large, then that is a reason why we should consent to the British Government laying a cable from Vancouver to Honolulu. I do not know that trade follows geographical lines or that it follows sovereignty. If that be so why is it that we have $450,000,000 of exports annually to Great Britain and have so little intercourse with our neighbors in South America and all our neighboring countries?

Mr. HIGGINS. I suggest to my friend from Louisiana that the very reason is because we have no adequate means of communication with the South American Republics, while England has communication with every one of them. I remember a conversation with an American who is a manufacturer and a merchant in London. He is a manufacturer of drugs. I asked him why he conducted business in London and from London rather than some place in America. He said, "Because from this point I can reach the whole world." They have their lines of steam communication and, as far as they can, cable communication which carry them directly to the points. Dependent upon the world and its products for the life and welfare of the British Islands, they have these communications everywhere as the best means of commanding that welfare.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I am fully aware that England has run us out of the ocean, and I am fully aware, I believe, of the reasons why she ran us out of the ocean. I believe it is on account of the enormous tariff that you have heretofore placed upon all articles that enter into the construction of iron ships. I believe further it is on account of the enormous taxation you have heretofore levied upon the raw materials which enter into the product of American manufacture that you are shut out from competition with England in the markets of the world.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the foreign trade of the United States increased since the Senator's tariff law was enacted?

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator from Rhode Island is a little previous in asking that question. Give that tariff law time to operate before you denounce it. I am not aware whether the trade has increased or decreased; but I am aware, from the history of the past, that with lower taxation, especially upon articles that enter into shipbuilding, especially upon the raw materials that enter into textile fabrics, that our trade ought to increase, and I believe it will increase.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Louisiana must be aware that materials for building ships are and have been for at least ten years admitted free of duty.

Mr. CAFFERY. I was not aware that the materials which enter into ship building in the United States are admitted free of duty.

Mr. HIGGINS. Ninety-nine per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am aware that the registry laws prevent our purchasing English ships to be owned by American owners, and I know that, therefore, the carrying trade of the world is in the name of the English owners of ships. But that is a digression, Mr. President.

I do not see any commercial utility whatever in the laying of a cable between the United States and Honolulu. I do not find anywhere any sort of warrant for paying out $500,000 of the money of the people of this country for that purpose, and I state distinctly that that purpose will not receive my sanction.

As has been correctly stated, the whole object of the peculiar regard for Hawaii here is nothing on earth but a stepping stone to its annexation, and the annexation of Hawaii is something that I can not view with satisfaction. I do not regard that at this or any other time the acquisition of those islands would be in any respect favorable to the United States.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about the Democratic policy of annexation under Mr. Marcy while he was Secretary of State, and the Senate has been invoked in the name of Democracy for one or two hours that that Democratic spirit might inspire us which is said to have been rampant at that time to annex all the outlying islands of the ocean. A reading of the letter of Mr. Marcy to the then representative of the United States in the Sandwich Islands may throw some light upon the reasons why at that period the project of annexation was dropped by the then Democratic Administration. In the Hawaiian correspondence, Executive Document No. 48, page 374, is a letter from Mr. Marcy to Mr. Gregg, the then American consul at Honolulu. Mr. Marcy says:

The draft of a treaty you have forwarded to the Department has been considered by the President, and he directs me to say that he can not approve of some of the articles. If ratified in its present shape at Honolulu and sent hither, he would not probably submit it to the Senate. There are in his mind strong objections to the immediate incorporation of the islands in their present condition into the Union as an independent State. It was expected that the Hawaiian Government would be willing to offer the islands to the United States as a Territory, and to leave the question in relation to their becoming a State to the determination of this Government, unembarrassed by stipulations on that point.

Mr. President, what was the main stipulation in the treaty which the Hawaiian Government had prepared and which they solicited the Government of the United States to ratify? The controlling stipulation was that Hawaii was to be immediately allowed to enter the Union as a State with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the American States. Even the Territorial form of government was objected to by them. In that condition of affairs Mr. Marcy very properly stated that the treaty would not be submitted by the President of the United States to the Senate, and why? Because manifestly in the opinion of the President and of Mr. Marcy it was not proper to incorporate into this Union a State with a body of electors composed of a population like the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands.

Is not that objection as fatal and potent to-day as it was then? Can we afford to take into this Union as a body of electors a population which, according to the testimony of the most intelligent men from the Hawaiian Islands, who gave their evidence before the Committee on Foreign Relations when investigating the subject of the dethronement of the Queen, was utterly incapable of self-government? Do Senators now desire, do the people of the United States desire, to incorporate into their midst a body of electors unfit to govern themselves, so said to be by the people who are now governing them?

The very Government that is now erected in Hawaii, oligarchical in form, oppressive in character, aye, Mr. President, despotic in character, shows that the people of the Hawaiian Islands are unfit for self-government. The object appears to be to incorporate into this Union people whom the resident Americans there in Hawaii say can not be maintained except by a quasi despotism; and this evidence springs from the most intelligent residents of that island, Mr. Spaulding particularly. Some men who are now high in authority in those islands emphatically state that the Kanakas, the Japanese, the Chinese there are not fit to be governed by republican institutions. They can not govern themselves. That kind of people I do not desire to have embraced within the limits of the American Union as a State or as a Territory or in any way whatsoever.

Mr. President, this discussion has taken a very wide range, and it has embraced a great many subjects, and, among other subjects, the right of an American resident abroad in Hawaii—because that is the particular instance in discussion—is maintained to enter into the militia or other service of that Government in order to maintain that Government against revolution. The proposition is broadly stated as derived from international law, that an American citizen resident abroad, having a commercial residence, can maintain the existing authority against any attack to overthrow it. That proposition I do not think to be sound. In Wharton's Digest of International Law the general principle is enunciated in paragraph 202:

There is no principle more distinctly and clearly settled in the law of nations than the rule that resident aliens not naturalized are not liable to perform military service. We have uniformly claimed and insisted upon it in our intercourse with foreign nations.

This was Mr. Seward, when Secretary of State, to Mr. Morton; and this principle of international law is admitted by everybody. There have been quotations from Vattel and other international sources to show that a resident alien in a foreign country can be made liable to militia service, to police service, to serve on a posse comitatus, and the like; and the argument is advanced that, therefore, he can be compelled without violating the laws of neutrality and violating his rights as a citizen of another country to perform militia duty or a temporary military service in maintaining the government of his residence against rebellion.

Mr. President, it is evident that the meaning of the law has been strained; it is evident that a distinction must be drawn between an organized rebellion, an organized uprising, and a mere émeute, a mere riot, a mere uprising of unlawful people to assault the Government, but the principle that wherever a rebellion takes such form and assumes such shape as to be so formidable in its proportions as to be able to wage war, as to be able to control the services of a considerable number of citizens, and after it takes such shape, that war is actually entered upon, it is evident to my mind that an alien citizen can not oppose such an uprising as that under the plea of maintaining the established Government as a part of the posse comitatus; that wherever war is active, wherever the character of belligerency attaches to a rebellion, in that case a resident alien can not be compelled to enter into the service of the established Government which is sought to be overthrown, and if he does so voluntarily he forfeits all right to the protection of the home Government; but the opposite proposition is broadly maintained.

An uprising may be rapid, it may be an ebullition of forces which have been sleeping for a time that all of a sudden takes sufficiently strong and firm a shape as to amount to the character of belligerency. It is not necessary that the belligerents have had an existence for a great length of time in order to establish that character, but the very moment that the belligerent character is established, whether it is done immediately, whether it is done after sufficient interval, that very moment the alien resident is not authorized to oppose it; and there, it appears to me, is the proper distinction.

But, sir, the argument cuts both ways. The argument advanced upon the other side is that a resident alien under no circumstances may oppose an established Government. How would that apply to Hawaii? When these American citizens resident in Hawaii, with the full cognizance of the resident American minister, organized a rebellion against the Hawaiian Government, the Government they established was stated to be a patriotic Government which ought to receive the support and sanction of the United States; and that, while it was well known that this rebellion was organized for the purpose of overthrowing the then existing dynasty, the landing of American troops to do nothing more than give moral aid and comfort to these people was an act of the highest patriotism and justice.

I do not propose, however, Mr. President, to go into the history of the dethroning of Queen Liliuokalani. I think the evidence submitted by Mr. Blount, which the evidence before the Foreign Relations Committee did not at all impair, makes it perfectly manifest that the successful overthrowing of the Government of that Queen was done by Minister Stevens, with the aid of the United States marines. I do not mean to say by that that the resident Americans were unable to have effected that purpose themselves, but I do say that they meanly and cowardly took advantage of the known proclivities of the American minister sympathizing with them in their efforts to get rid of the Government of the Queen, and prevailed upon him to land the American marines, so that their revolution would be without the slightest danger to themselves.

I do not mean to say, Mr. President, that a number of American citizens anywhere, living amongst an inferior race, as these Kanakas are, can not rule them either by intrigue or by force; and the history of those islands shows that from the very time the Americans put their feet upon those islands they commenced to have a paramount influence in their government. They did so properly, but it was done by means of persuasion; it was done by means of pardonable intrigue, as it were; but however accomplished, they were the ruling power in Hawaii, and the Government which was set up there was their own Government, and when the Queen attempted to proclaim a constitution, which they themselves had given a precedent for in a prior proclamation which they instigated, they took advantage of that pretext to dethrone her by and through Minister Stevens.

I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to say—his remarks have not yet been published—that the President of the United States had in his answer to the communication of the royal commissioners of Liliuokalani, who visited this country some time ago, stated that he had done all that he could do toward repairing the wrong that had been committed in those islands toward that Queen, and that statement of the President, not only by the Senator then, but by a large number of Republican Senators thereafter, has been made the subject of most bitter partisan attack, and the doctrine has been boldly asserted that however accomplished, by what means soever accomplished, whether by the participation of the United States or not, if a government is once recognized by the United States, that recognition is irrevocable, is fait accompli, and nothing can be done to undo it, even if it is accomplished by fraud and misrepresentation.

I, Mr. President, have the hardihood to say that the efforts of the President of the United States to restore the status quo through his representative, Mr. Willis, ought not only not to be a subject of attack, but it ought to be a matter of the highest praise to him.

We have heard a great deal of American patriotism; we have heard a great deal of the course of empire taking its way westward; we heard yesterday a very eloquent apostrophe to the Caucasian race from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]; but, sir, a man who does his duty for duty's sake climbs to a higher point of patriotism than the man who is carried away by the frothy sentiment of American patriotism. The highest type of an American, whether he occupies the Presidential chair or whether he occupies a humble place in the community, is one who has the courage to say and do right under all circumstances.

When the President of the United States was convinced that it was wrong to use the military arm of the United States to dethrone this weak and defenseless Queen, and undertook to repair that wrong, he gave evidence of an American courage and an American manhood which, in my opinion, far transcends the glittering froth and declamation of sentimental Americanism. As long as this evidence is alive, as long as the testimony exists showing the complicity of Mr. Minister Stevens in this revolution in Hawaii, and showing the unlawful use of the marine power of the United States to effect the dethronement of the Queen, in my opinion it will be a foul blot upon the manhood and upon the integrity of this nation. It may be, Mr. President, that the thing is done, and can not now be revoked; but notwithstanding that, the blot is upon us, and it will take years, in my opinion, to efface it.

I quite agree with the Senator from Connecticut in the march to empire of the great Caucasian race; I quite agree with him that that race is the superior governing race of the world; and there is no American who can establish by force of his own arm, without adventitious and unlawful aid, a government of Americans in any part of the known world, and hold it by virtue of his superior powers and strength, that I shall not heartily support and welcome; and if these people over in Hawaii had undertaken with their own right arm, without the aid of the military power of the United States, to establish a government of a republican character, or any other government there, that action would have met with no kind of rebuke from me, but rather I should have applauded it as evincing the dominating character of our race and their superiority in all governmental affairs so far as other races are concerned.

Mr. President, right here I will say that the evidence that we have before us in these voluminous reports shows that the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands are the most docile, the most tractable, and the most intelligent of all the Indians that white men have heretofore come in contact with, but the inevitable fate of the Indian seems to have overtaken them. Our people went there with the Bible. The men who went there were devout men; they were Christian men; they went with a holy purpose, and they carried it out with a holy zeal. They did Christianize, they did educate and civilize, the inhabitants of those islands, but, sir, the inevitable fate of the Indian seems to have overtaken those inhabitants.

From some 130,000 souls, when first the missionary put his foot upon their soil, they have decreased to about 40,000 souls; their possessions have all gone, have been swept from them. Even the last little vestige of power and authority which they enjoyed—a masquerade of power, as it were, a travesty of government, as it were—has been taken away from them. The white man will not even let them have the show of power. That is the inevitable fate of the Indian. Whether it comes by fire and sword, or whether it comes by the Bible, the Indian has to be obliterated. It is a sad commentary that the only people of whom history gives us any note who ever received civilization without force, who received it readily, who accepted the white man as a friend and invited him into their councils, and gave him their government, have alike shared the fate of the savage Sioux and of all the savage tribes in North America who resisted the white man with rifle and hatchet. So be it, Mr. President. There appears to be a controlling destiny in this matter which neither the power of the Government of the United States nor any other power can control.

In view of the declarations of international writers, why is it that Secretary Herbert has been criticised for his letter of instructions to Admiral Walker?

Mr. CHANDLER. I inquire of the Senator if he would prefer to finish his remarks to-morrow? If so, I shall make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am nearly through, and other Senators wish to speak.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not make the motion if the Senator prefers to go on.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do. I shall conclude in a few moments.

I would say, Mr. President, in view of the statements of international law, as read by me in Mr. Seward's letter to Mr. Morton, I do not see how it is that the criticisms of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber of the letter of Secretary Herbert to Admiral Walker can be so easily and flippantly made. That letter states simply this:

An American citizen who during a revolution or insurrection in a foreign country participates in an attempt by force of arms or violence to maintain or overthrow the existing government, or who aids in setting on foot a revolution or insurrection in such country, can not claim as matter of right that the Government of the United States shall protect him against the consequences of such act.

Mr. President, it is manifest that the Secretary of the Navy was within the lines of international law in this letter. Any American citizen who, during a rebellion or insurrection in a foreign country, should either maintain or oppose one of the contending factions can not claim as a matter of right the protection of the Government of the United States. What kind of insurrection or rebellion must it be? It must be one of that character which will take on the shape of belligerency, and that was the intention of the Secretary; that was his evident meaning. He did not mean that in a mere émeute over there in Hawaii, or anywhere else, an American citizen could not join in putting it down, nor did he so say; but he said wherever, during or pending a rebellion or insurrection, an American citizen took part, either in maintaining or opposing the government, he must necessarily forfeit the right of being protected by his own Government; and the argument has been made with great stress that the Secretary of the Navy was guilty of a gross violation of international law because Senators on the other side of the Chamber construe a rebellion or insurrection to be a mere émeute.

Mr. President, whenever there is a state of affairs which divides a community into two hostile camps, whenever a rebellion takes such form as to command a considerable body of the citizens of a country in which the rebellion occurs, it is manifest when that kind of war, flagrant war, if you choose, is pending, that an American citizen can not participate without forfeiting his right to be protected by his own Government.

Mr. KYLE obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KYLE. For what purpose?

Mr. CHANDLER. I was going to move an adjournment.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the Senator will move an executive session.

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator will withhold that motion, I can finish what remarks I have to make in a very short time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to an executive session, but there is a storm outside, and the Senate ought to adjourn shortly.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I went to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and inquired of him whether he desired to go on to-night, and suggested that probably it would be to the convenience of the Senate to take an adjournment now, but the Senator said that his remarks would take but a short time, and he preferred to go on this evening. That is the reason I have not already moved for an adjournment of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky I will withhold the motion.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to move an executive session.

Mr. KYLE. If it be agreeable to the Senate, I will defer the remarks I desire to submit until to-morrow morning, and take the floor at that time.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his motion for an executive session for a few moments.

Mr. HUNTON. For what purpose?

Mr. MARTIN. I have two local bills which I should like very much to have passed. There is no objection whatever to them. They have been favorably reported, and I have been waiting for a week for an opportunity to secure their consideration. I shall be greatly obliged if the Senator will allow me an opportunity to have them considered now. They will take but a few minutes.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire particularly to have an executive session this evening for the purpose of confirming the nomination of General Schofield. He was commander of Military District No. 1, which was that in effect he was governor of Virginia, and he has left behind him none but friends in my State. I desire to show my appreciation of the promotion to the high grade to which he has been nominated by confirming him at the very first moment we can.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HUNTON. To introduce a bill?

Mr. ALLISON. No; but to have considered and passed a purely local bill, which will take but a few minutes, and if it leads to discussion I shall withdraw it.

Mr. HUNTON. I can not yield for that.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] is asking permission to have considered two bills which will not take any time, and I do not think they will encounter any kind of opposition. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not interpose his motion, but will give the Senator from Kansas an opportunity to have the bills in his charge considered.

Mr. HUNTON. With that understanding I yield for that purpose, and then I hope I shall be recognized by the Chair.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Virginia. The bills for which I desire present consideration are House bill 8165 and Senate bill 2372.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please indicate which bill he desires to have first considered.

RAILWAY THROUGH THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8165.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8165) authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which had been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the word "through," to insert "all Indian reservations in;" in the same line, after the word "Indian," to insert "Territory;" and in line 10, before the word "Oklahoma," to insert "the Territories of;" in the same line, after the word "Oklahoma," to strike out "Territories" and insert "and New Mexico upon a line," and in line 23, after the word "extensions," to insert "through such Indian reservations;" so as to make the section read:

That the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, and operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through all Indian reservations in the Indian Territory and the Territories of Oklahoma and New Mexico upon a line beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company at or near the town of Coffeyville, in the county of Montgomery, State of Kansas, and running thence in a south and west direction over the most practicable route, through the Indian Territory and the Territory of Oklahoma, to a point at or near Pawhuska, and also Guthrie and Kingfisher, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and thence to the east line of Wheeler County, State of Texas; thence to the east line of the Territory of New Mexico, and through the Territory of New Mexico to the city of Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, sidings, and extensions through such Indian reservations as said company may deem to their interests to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "said," to strike out "Territories" and insert "reservations;" so as to read:

That the said corporation is authorized to take and use, for all purposes of a railway and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 8, before the word "State," to strike out the letter "a," and in line 9, before the word "formed," to strike out "government is" and insert "governments are;" so as to read:

Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway, and of messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until State governments are formed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 8, after the word "said," to strike out "Territories" and insert "reservations;" so as to read:

That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said line may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to the compensation provided for in this act for property taken and damage done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway constructed in said reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 27, after the word "said," to strike out "Territories" and insert "reservations;" and in line 30, after the word "said," to strike out "Territories" and insert "reservations;" so as to read:

Said company shall also pay, so long as said reservations are owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 2, after the word "said," to strike out "Territories" and insert "reservations;" so as to read:

That said railway company shall cause maps showing the route of its located line through said reservations to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 6, after the word "tribes," to strike out "of Indians;" in line 7, after the word "whose," to strike out "Territory," and insert "reservation;" and in line 12, after the word "Indian," to strike out "Territory" and insert "reservation;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the United States circuit and district courts for the district of Kansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company and the nations and tribes of Indians through whose reservation said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amounts in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of the said nations or tribes and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of such courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian reservations without distinction as to citizenship of the parties so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 2, after the word "railway," to strike out "within said Territory;" so as to read:

That said railway company shall build at least 100 miles of its railway within three years after the passage of this act or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 2, before the word "right," to insert "grant of the;" so as to read:

That the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company shall accept this grant of the right of way upon the express condition, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 3, after the word "said," to strike out "Territories" and insert "reservations;" so as to read:

That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railway with its franchises, that may be constructed in said reservations, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through Indian reservations in the Indian Territory, and the Territories of Oklahoma and New Mexico, and for other purposes."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate. That a special committee be, and is hereby created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the State of Florida and is engaged in business there and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States and of the State of Florida. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents, have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections and the legislature and the members of Congress and the executive officers of the State of Florida; and whether they own, either directly or indirectly, any interests in newspapers published in the State, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, were expended in the late elections by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, or in persons connected with it, and in what way and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution be printed and that it lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over and be printed.

Mr. HUNTON. I now renew my motion.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me for a word of personal explanation?

Mr. HUNTON. With pleasure.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, in view of what transpired this morning when the question of the sugar bounty was up, it is evident that there was a misunderstanding day before yesterday between the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and myself, which led to a somewhat heated colloquy and resulted finally in the use of certain language on the part of both of us that ought not to be used in the Senate under any circumstances, and ought not to go into the RECORD of this body. I regret it so far as I am concerned. I have had no communication whatever with the Senator from Tennessee on the subject. I have always held the Senator in very high regard. The relations between us have always been of the most pleasant character, and so far as I individually am concerned I desire to withdraw everything I said on that occasion.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, nothing was more foreign to my intention or purpose than to say anything that could be construed into a disagreeable remark. My objection was in no sense personal to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. It would have come just as soon if the same suggestion had been made by my elbow neighbor, with whom I am on the most intimate and kindly terms. I am glad the Senator from Oregon has withdrawn such remarks of his as were reasonably construed as being offensive. It affords me great pleasure to withdraw anything that I may have said in the course of that colloquy which is susceptible of the construction of being disrespectful or offensive. I am glad the Senator from Oregon has made the statement we have just heard. I respond to it in the same spirit in which it was made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HUNTON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 8, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

FORT JUPITER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2493) to amend and extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the opening of certain abandoned military reservations, and for other purposes," approved August 23, 1894.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act approved August 23, 1894, entitled "An act to provide for the opening of certain abandoned military reservations, and for other purposes," are hereby extended to all abandoned military reservations which were placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior under any law in force prior to the act of July 5, 1884. SEC. 2. That the preference right of entry given to actual settlers by the terms of the act to which this is an amendment shall, so far as the lands to which the provisions of said act are extended, take effect and continue for six months from the date of this amendatory act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I would like to know more about this bill, reserving the right to object.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I will explain the bill to the House in a few words. There was a bill passed at the last session opening certain military reservations with homestead rights, giving the preference to homesteaders. That was thought to include Fort Jupiter Reservation, and that it would give the homesteaders the same preference there.

By the terms of the bill which passed it limited the provisions of the act to reservations which had been opened for settlement up to a certain date. The Interior Department has held that it did not apply to the Florida reservation, and that the homesteaders there would not have their preference rights under that act. The bill has been passed by the Senate and has been reported on by the Committee on Public Lands. It only applies to the Fort Jupiter Reservation in Florida, and does nothing for that reservation but to give the homestead settlers there the same rights as were given to them everywhere else in all reservations of this kind. All that is intended is to give the homesteaders the preference right; and if we do not give them that right, then the reservation will be taken by land scrip and the homesteaders will have their preference taken from them. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But the bill seems to be broader than the explanation of the gentleman. It applies to all military reservations.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. The bill which it amends was a general act; and if there are any other reservations in which we have not protected the homestead rights, it ought to apply to those also. So far as I know—and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is here—I do not know of any reservation except Fort Jupiter that it does not cover, and by some mistake that was omitted, and we ought to carry out the purpose of the act by including this reservation.

Mr. REED. What was the limitation as to time originally, and how was that mistake made? Why was it necessary for making a limitation of the original act?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. The original act provided that it should apply to abandoned military reservations placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the act approved July 5, 1894, the disposal of which had not been subsequently provided for by Congress. When that was put in it was supposed that covered them all.

Mr. REED. It was put in because it was supposed to have no effect?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. It was put in because most of these reservations were opened before that; but it seems that Fort Jupiter Reservation was transferred prior to that act, although the Interior Department reported to us that it was not, and enumerated it amongst those that were to be included by that act. They have decided since that that was a mistake, and that the homesteaders would not have the preference rights there. There is nothing in the world in the bill except to give to that reservation the same status that has been given to settlers on other abandoned military reservations.

Mr. LACEY. I will state to the gentleman from Maine that it was the intention of the committee to cover that case, but there was a mistake made by the Department.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain this bill in a few words. The act of August 23, 1894, sought to be amended, was introduced by myself. The Committee on Public Lands asked the Interior Department to furnish a list of reservations that would be covered by it. The Fort Jupiter Reservation was named as one of them. It exceeded in area 5,000 acres. No one supposed that any of these military reservations had been turned over to the Department prior to the passage of the act of July 5, 1884, which provided for the disposal of them; but it appears that at least this one and perhaps some others were turned over prior to that time as useless.

There is no special privilege granted to the settlers on this reservation, but puts them upon the same basis as others of the same size in other parts of the country. But for a mistake made by the Department in naming it as having been turned over under the act of July 5, 1884, it would have been provided for in the original bill. It was turned over to the Department of the Interior and became a part of the public domain prior to that act. By technical construction of the act of August 23, 1894, those lands can not be disposed of under it. Now, we seek by this bill to amend the law so as to allow not only this reservation, but all others that were turned over prior to the act of July 5, 1884, to be disposed of if they exceed in area 5,000 acres. It does just what was intended to be done by the original bill. It ought to be passed.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I will state to the gentleman from Maine that the only effect of the bill is to make secure the rights of a considerable number of homesteaders.

Mr. REED. Who are already on it?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Who are already on it. If the bill were not to pass the probability is that scrip entries would be put upon the land, and they would be deprived of their rights under the homestead act, and the bill only gives to them the same rights that are given homestead settlers in their settlements all over the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI AT SIOUX CITY.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8499.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be waived. It is similar to a bill which passed in the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, save and except that the bridge is changed to a wagon bridge. The bill is in legal form, and is approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SAYERS. The bill ought to be read, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Iowa and Nebraska Pontoon Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct a wagon bridge across the Missouri River between the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa, within the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa, and to build, erect, and lay on and over said bridge ways for wagons, vehicles of all kinds, and for the transit of animals; to provide ways for foot passengers, and to lay on and over said bridge tracks, upon which may be operated street railways; and to maintain and operate said bridge for the purposes aforesaid, and for all other uses and purposes incident to the use of a wagon bridge not specially enumerated; and to charge, collect, and receive reasonable compensation and tolls for the transit over said bridge of all wagons, carriages, vehicles of all kinds, persons, foot passengers, and animals, street railways, and for all other uses of said bridge not specially enumerated: Provided, That the Secretary of War may at any time prescribe such rules, regulations, and rates of toll for transit and transportation over said bridge as may be deemed proper and reasonable.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot drawbridge, with two or more draws, as the Secretary of War may prescribe, which said draws shall not be less than 200 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot piers of the draws; and all other spans over the river shall not be less than 250 feet in the clear, measured at low water; and said spans shall not be less than 10 feet above high-water mark, measuring to the lowest part of the superstructure of the bridge; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river at high water.

SEC. 3. That no bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially and materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and that no bridge shall be commenced or built under this act until the location thereof and the plans and specifications for its construction shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War; and any change in the plans of such construction or any alteration in the bridge after its construction shall be subject to the like approval; and that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, whenever in his opinion the said bridge shall substantially obstruct the free navigation of said river, to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge or the person operating or controlling same; and the said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper protections for confining the flow of water to a permanent and easily navigated channel for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely through the draw as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order to be constructed and maintained, at the expense of the company owning said bridge; and the said bridge shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passing of vessels through said structure; that said draw shall be opened promptly to its full width upon reasonable signal, without unnecessary delay, for the passage of vessels, steamboats, and other water craft requiring the opening of said draw for their safe passage; and the owners of said bridge shall maintain, at their own expense, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as shall be prescribed by the Light-House Board.

SEC. 4. That said corporation, or its successors, may, in conformity with plans approved by the Secretary of War, construct and maintain defensive and corrective works in or along said river, above or below said bridge, for the protection of the same and the approaches thereto, or for the improvement, correction, or control of the channel of said river.

SEC. 5. That any bridge built under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the public highways leading to such bridge. The United States shall also have the right to construct, without charge therefor, telegraph and telephone lines across and upon said bridge.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold that for two or three days. I do not know that there will be any objection to it, but I do not want it considered this morning.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, on a statement made to me by my colleague, Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, I withdraw the objection.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSEPHINE P. KELTON.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to call up and have considered at this time Senate bill No. 879.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

An amendment was agreed to striking out the initial "F" in the name and substituting "P."

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SICKLES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CATHERINE CAINE.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, being House bill No. 952, for the relief of Catherine Caine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Catherine Caine, widow of the late Rev. Charles Caine, the pay and allowances of a chaplain in the volunteer service from the 10th day of December, 1861, to March, 1863, the said Charles Caine having served as such chaplain in the organization known as Yates's Sharpshooters, Illinois Volunteers, during the time mentioned, under a commission issued by Richard Yates, governor of the State of Illinois, without pay.

Amendments recommended by the Committee on War Claims were agreed to, as follows:

In line 8, strike out "tenth" and insert "first."

Same line, strike out "December" and insert "January."

Line 9, strike out "sixty-one" and insert "sixty-two."

Same line, strike out "March" and insert "1st day of August."

Line 10, strike out "sixty-three" and insert "sixty-two."

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered in Committee of the Whole on the 13th of July last, and has been on the Calendar ever since. It was reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims with the amendments which have just been read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think the phraseology of the bill is incorrect. It provides that "the proper accounting officers of the Treasury" shall be authorized and directed to pay, etc. We ought not to confer that power on the accounting officers. I suggest that the bill be amended so as to direct the accounting officers to ascertain the amount and the Secretary of the Treasury to pay it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. If the gentleman will suggest the proper amendment I will accept it. The bill was prepared in accordance with suggestions made at the War Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman had better have the bill properly amended in the Senate, as it can not well be done here now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OCCUPATION OF UNITED STATES PROPERTY IN BALTIMORE.

Mr. McKAIG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 265) authorizing the mayor and city council of Baltimore to occupy for a period of five years, and erect a building thereon, a certain lot in the city of Baltimore owned by the United States.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas consent to the purchase by the United States of America of any lots or parcels of ground in the city of Baltimore, for the purpose of erecting a building for a post-office, court-house, and other public offices of the United States of America, was given by the State of Maryland by the act of the general assembly of said State passed at the session of 1880, chapter 2; and

Whereas by said act jurisdiction over said lots or parcels of ground after the same should have been lawfully conveyed to Maryland, United States of America, was ceded, released, and relinquished to the United States of America, as in said acts more fully set forth; and

Whereas among the lots or parcels of ground so lawfully conveyed to the United States of America for the purposes aforesaid is a lot or parcel of ground in the city of Baltimore, described as follows: Beginning for the same on the corner formed by the intersection of the west side of North street and the south side of Lexington street, and running thence south, binding on the west side of North street 112 feet; thence west, parallel with the south side of Lexington street, 70 feet; thence north, parallel with the west side of North street, 112 feet to the south side of Lexington street, and thence east, binding thereon 70 feet, to the place of beginning; and

Whereas the said described lot was not covered by the building erected by the United States for a post-office, court-house, and public offices on the square of which it forms a part, bounded by Lexington, North, Fayette, and Calvert streets, in Baltimore City, and has been for many years vacant, and is not now needed or occupied by the United States for any purpose; and

Whereas pending the construction of the new court-house in the city of Baltimore, for the use of the State courts within said city, the mayor and city council of Baltimore desire to obtain the privilege of erecting on said described lot a temporary brick building, to be used by the State of Maryland for the purpose of holding therein the sessions of the State courts within said city; and

Whereas at the time the United States was acquiring title to the aforesaid square bounded by Lexington, North, Fayette, and Calvert streets the mayor and city council of Baltimore made a gift to the United States of two lots of ground, forming part of said square, valued at over $50,000: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That full permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the mayor and city council of Baltimore to erect on the lot hereinbefore described a two-story brick building, to be used by the State of Maryland for the purpose of holding therein the sessions of the State courts within said city, for a period not to exceed five years from the time said building shall be begun, and that during said period concurrent jurisdiction, so far as the same may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, ceded to the State of Maryland for said purpose, so that the sessions of the said courts in said building, upon said lot, may be during said period fully legalized: Provided, however, That the mayor and city council of Baltimore will enter into a contract with the United States of America, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury before the erection of said building shall be begun, that within three months after the expiration of the said period of five years the said building shall be entirely torn down and the materials thereof removed, and the said lot restored to the same condition in which it now is; and in default thereof, that the said building may be removed and the lot restored to its present condition by the United States at the expense of the mayor and city council of Baltimore.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire the distance of this lot from the United States public building in that city.

Mr. McKAIG. It is immediately adjoining the present public building—the post-office and court-house.

Mr. SAYERS. But how far distant from the building is it?

Mr. McKAIG. Not more than 20 or 30 feet, I suppose.

Mr. SAYERS. I believe there is a general law which forbids the erection of a public building within a less distance than 40 feet from any other building.

Mr. McKAIG. But may I explain with reference to this? Some few years ago the post-office and court-house building was erected in the city of Baltimore. The United States moved into that building, abandoning the old one, which was constructed upon a lot given by the city. The old building is now being occupied for the purposes of the court. A year ago we gave the city a right to occupy that building for five years for court purposes, while the city was engaged in erecting a new court-house. In that building there is not room for what is called the hall of records, and leave is now asked for the city to erect a two-story building on the adjoining lot for the purpose of keeping the records.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that within 40 feet of the new post-office building?

Mr. MCKAIG. No, sir. It adjoins the old Federal court building.

Mr. SAYERS. That building is not now occupied by the Federal offices?

Mr. MCKAIG. It is not. The Federal offices have moved into the new building. This bill gives the right of occupancy for only five years, and the city will guarantee to tear down the building at the end of that time if it is desired. Gentlemen should remember, too, that the old building is erected upon a lot given by the city.

Mr. PAYNE. And at the end of five years we shall be under obligation to give them the lot.

Mr. MCKAIG. No, sir; they do not want it. The city will erect a building that will be better than your Federal building.

Mr. PAYNE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 8388) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, had asked a further conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. ALLISON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 397) to provide for the erection of a government building at Chicago, Ill.; and

A bill (H. R. 5603) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8552) to authorize the appointment of cadets in the Naval Academy; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 269) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of Kalamazoo River from Lake Michigan to Saugatuck.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2669) to repeal section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requiring the district judge in the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West;

A bill (S. 2364) for the relief of Silas P. Keller; and

A bill (S. 1921) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 41) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2097) granting to the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railway Company a right of way through the San Carlos Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona;

A bill (S. 2165) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880; and

A bill (S. 1935) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ellery.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears by the published reports of the proceedings of the legislature of the State of Tennessee that it is alleged by a large body of respectable citizens of said State that at the election held on the 6th day of November, 1894, for governor, members of the legislature, and members of Congress, in said State, such a total disregard of law was abroad in nearly the entire territory of said State of Tennessee as that no legal election was held therein; and

Whereas it is claimed that large numbers of persons disqualified by the laws of Tennessee, to the number of more than half the voters thereof, participated in said election and cast their ballots in violation of law, being at the time wholly disqualified; and

Whereas the legislature of the State of Tennessee now in session has declined and refused to recognize said election as a legal and binding election, and has refused to permit the person having the greatest number of votes upon the face of said returns to be inaugurated as governor, holding that there was apparently no legal election in said State; and

Whereas the said general assembly is at this time engaged in an investigation to ascertain whether or not there was any such legal election; and

Whereas there was a form of election of members of Congress gone through with at said election in the several Congressional districts of Tennessee, and certificates have been issued to the persons receiving the highest number of votes by the governor of Tennessee, who himself refuses to recognize the legality of the election of a governor under the same conditions and disabilities and alleged violations of law which it is claimed have rendered the election of governor void and illegal; and

Whereas said alleged and pretended members of Congress will present themselves at the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress and claim seats therein;

Now, therefore, in order to ascertain the facts in regard to said election and to ascertain whether the certificates of the members aforesaid claiming to have been elected from the State of Tennessee ought to be received and acted upon, and in order to ascertain whether there was any valid election of members of Congress from said State on the day aforesaid:

Resolved, That there be a committee of five members of this House who are members of the Committee on Elections of the present House and who are re-elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress, appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate, ascertain, and report all and singular the facts touching said alleged illegal and void election, and to ascertain whether or not it is true that large numbers of persons voted at the several Congressional elections in said State without the legal qualifications of voters, and the extent to which such illegal voting was done, and whether or not it is possible to ascertain who did receive the greatest number of legal votes, and to report whether or not said election ought to be, in fact, treated as null and void and disregarded by the House of Representatives in the same manner and to the same extent that it is being disregarded and held for naught by the legislature of the State of Tennessee. And said committee is authorized to appoint a stenographer and a sergeant-at-arms, and to issue process for the securing of witnesses and to compel their attendance. And said committee is further authorized to make use of the testimony and evidence taken by the legislature of the State of Tennessee, if copies thereof can be procured, and, in so far as it is competent, to consider the same in making their report. And said committee is authorized to sit during the vacation between the close of the Fifty-third Congress and the assembling of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and to make report to said Congress on the first day of its session or as soon thereafter as it is possible. The sum of $2,500 out of the contingent fund of the House is hereby appropriated to pay the expense of said investigation, to be paid upon the warrant and certificate of the chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. COX. I object. Let it take its regular course through the committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I ask that it be properly referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the resolution and refer it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

NICARAGUA SHIP CANAL.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (S. 1481) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1899; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DEDUCTIONS ON TONNAGE OF VESSELS.

Mr. COOPER of Florida, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 8056 a bill (H. R. 8803) to amend section 1 of chapter 393 of the laws of 1882, entitled "An act to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 8056) was ordered to be laid on the table.

SALE OF INTOXICANTS TO INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence, on account of sickness, was granted for this day to Mr. TUCKER.

THE CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order heretofore made the House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the currency bill.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8705) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue bonds to maintain a sufficient gold reserve, and to redeem and retire United States notes, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. On yesterday afternoon, when the committee rose, a question was pending on an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] had proposed an amendment to the pending bill striking out all of the bill except the last section and inserting an amendment which was read. The Chair held that the amendment was not in order, stating that it was not germane to the bill or to the sections being stricken out, and for that reason and others, held it to be not in order. From that ruling of the Chair the gentleman from Missouri appealed, and the question was submitted to the committee whether the ruling of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the committee. The committee was dividing on that question when the committee rose.

The question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Upon that tellers have been ordered. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BLAND, will please take their places as tellers.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 130, noes 52.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. BROSIUS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 insert:

"Provided, That such amount of said bonds, of the denominations of $20, $50, and $100, as can be disposed of in that manner shall be placed for sale at such national banks as the Secretary of the Treasury shall select; the banks so selected to give bonds, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the security of the proceeds of said sale."

Mr. BROSIUS. I only desire to say that I think it important that our people should have this facility for obtaining these bonds. I desire a vote on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there is a saying that God and one make a majority. That seems to be the spirit in which gentlemen on the Democratic side and our Populist friends approach the consideration of legislation touching the finances, and especially the consideration of the so-called Springer-Administration bill now pending. We all admire in the individual those qualities that enable him to be true to a conviction, or, in other words, to have the courage of his convictions. But if there shall be no legislation until every individual member is thoroughly satisfied in every particular, then there can be no legislation at all. The Government of the people, especially a Government consisting of 70,000,000 people, if it acts at all, can only act through compromise and concession.

Here is a bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, which, it seems to me, has not the slightest chance of being enacted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is not even recommended by the committee that reports it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now come the silver Representatives and say, "We can not vote for the bill because it does not recognize the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1." The antinational-bank men say, "We will not vote for it because it perpetuates the national banking system." The Representatives who favor State banks of issue say, "We will not vote for it because it does not remove the 10 per cent tax from State-bank circulation." Other Representatives say they will not vote for it because it provides for the issuing of bonds specifically payable in gold. Again, still other Representatives say that while the bonds of the United States, heretofore issued, are payable in coin—and under the construction of the law and the practice of the Government, "coin" means gold—they will not vote for an issue of gold bonds because it would tend to impair the value and violate the faith of the Government as to bonds already issued.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How does the gentleman from Illinois want to vote?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will tell you in a minute.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman wants to vote, I reckon, for gold bonds?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No, sir; I am content with the law as it now exists touching the issue of bonds.

Mr. Chairman, let us be practical. Is it desirable—aye, more, is it possible—to enact at this time any legislation that would be beneficial? The President of the United States has already put on the market $100,000,000 of bonds of the United States in the name of maintaining resumption, and has paid the proceeds not to maintain resumption, but to pay current expenses of the Government incurred from day to day. He stands ready to put on the market more and more bonds of the United States, bearing 4 or 5 per cent interest, under authority of the legislation of 1875. The Representative who refuses to him, this being the condition, the authority to issue the same kind of a bond payable in coin at not exceeding 3 per cent interest, practically indorses by such negative vote the continuance of the present policy. So much for that.

All agree that the pending bill can not be enacted. But it seems to me that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] can be enacted, and when enacted will meet the present emergency. To maintain resumption it authorizes the President to issue a bond at not exceeding 3 per cent interest, payable in coin. The President now has authority to issue bonds at 4 and 5 per cent interest. Second, it authorizes the President, in the event there is a deficiency in the revenues to pay the current expenses of the Government from month to month, to issue currency certificates at not exceeding 3 per cent interest, payable in two years, which could practically be paid over the counter in liquidation of current obligations.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not do the latter without the former? Why not simply adopt the latter part of the proposition of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The latter proposition is the important one, and the gentleman from Maine so stated, in his exceedingly terse and forcible remarks, when he presented the substitute.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that from 1879, the period of resumption, to the commencement of this Administration, the redemption of greenbacks in gold did not annoy the Government or disturb the business of the country. Why does it annoy us now? Simply because we do not collect enough revenue by taxation to pay our daily expenses, and when the Treasury notes are presented for redemption in gold, and the gold paid therefor, the Government is compelled to take these identical Treasury notes, that have been redeemed, and pay them out the next hour, or the next day, to liquidate our daily expenses. For fifteen years after resumption we received enough money from taxation into the Treasury to pay our daily expenses, and more, so that the Treasury notes that were redeemed could remain and did remain in the Treasury after redemption.

The substitute leaves the silver man with the law as it is. It leaves him undisturbed in his contention as to what "coin" means. It leaves the gold man with the law as it is, in statu quo; but it does provide for the deficiency until our revenues become sufficient to meet current expenses. It gives us, if enacted at once, in this respect the condition we had for fifteen years after resumption, and resumption, too, in gold whenever demanded. It leaves the national banks as they are. It leaves the State banks as they are; and, in my judgment, it ought to be enacted and will be enacted if the majority or a reasonable and respectable proportion of it will perform its function and meet the existing condition without seeking to attach to a wise proposition measures that can not be enacted and are not necessary to be enacted at this time. There is much of financial legislation that I would enact if I had the power; but not having the power, wisdom dictates that the present emergency be met.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Chairman, I can not help feeling that the deliberations of this House to-day upon the bill before us will mark an important epoch in the history of this country. I am not an expert in finance. I am unable to contribute any information to the House in regard to the details of any financial scheme. I rise, sir, to say a few words only, to express my deep sense of the importance of this measure in substantially the form in which it is before the House, because I solemnly believe that the honor and welfare of my country are involved in the action of this body upon this measure.

I believe it involves a question of honor for the American people and its Government. I have too often had occasion to differ with the Executive—the Executive who is the choice of my own party—but I forget all those differences in my admiration for his brave and manly action in the present financial crisis of this country. His attitude is worthy of the most illustrious of our statesmen and Chief Magistrates, and I repeat, I forget all differences with the Executive in my admiration for his course on this question.

This is not a time, I may be allowed to say, to settle definitely and permanently the financial questions that have agitated this country within the last two or three years. This is not a time to determine the future of silver or of bank notes. This is not an occasion for partisan animosities or for sectional antagonisms.

This is a supreme moment when the honor and welfare of the country require us to meet its obligations as we have promised to do. There are hours in the history of every nation when its fortunes depend upon the issue either of a battle or a vote. I believe this is one of those occasions. And if a long life, largely devoted to the public service, gives me the least right to appeal to my colleagues, in the name of our common country, to hold aloft the high standard of integrity which it has heretofore maintained I profit by this opportunity to make that appeal to them now. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, and I am opposed to the bill. I am opposed to the selling of bonds the payment of which is specified to be in gold, whether those bonds are to be the basis of national-bank currency or not. I am opposed to placing this country upon a single gold standard, thereby utterly destroying the money of the common people, which is silver.

The common people do not have money enough to carry gold. They can carry a little silver, and that is what this bill means—to destroy silver money. Now, Mr. Chairman, adhesion to a good principle is a good thing, but oftentimes it works great mischief. My free coinage silver colleagues are opposed to the issue of bonds. They have seen $100,000,000; they know that $100,000,000 will be issued soon. Is it not a better principle to vote for the Reed substitute, which will limit the issue of bonds to an amount only sufficient to maintain the credit of the country until the revenue proves adequate? I am a Republican. I am a partisan. I believe in partisanship; not quite as much as my Populist friends do, but enough to satisfy an ordinary man.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Yes.

Mr. POWERS. I understand you to say that gold should not be the money in which bonds are to be paid. I wish to ask you, are not all your State bonds in California paid in gold?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I do not know anything about that. I did not vote for them if they are.

Mr. POWERS. Are not your contracts between individuals framed with stipulations that they shall be paid in gold?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I know nothing about that. I have never been a bondholder.

Mr. POWERS. I did not know but you might be a contract signer.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I never helped to make such a provision and I shall not do it now.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, I am a Republican and a partisan; but first I am an American citizen, and I hold it to be my duty now to maintain the honor, integrity, and credit of the United States by my word and vote as it was thirty years ago to help maintain it on the field by force of arms. But that does not require me to help those people who are trying to put this country on a gold standard to-day. I can vote for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], which provides a temporary relief until we can get this country under the management of men who know how to run this great and complicated machine. But what this country wants to-day, what it ought to have, is an Andrew Jackson, a U. S. Grant, or an American "Czar" at the head of affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. MEREDITH. A Bowers of California is the man we want. Mr. BOWERS of California. Well, if I was there I think I would stop this raid of the shylocks on the Treasury mighty quick. [Laughter.] I would at least try it.

Mr. MEREDITH. Yes; stop it like Harrison did.

Mr. BOWERS of California. No; not the way he did. Mr. Chairman, when I was a boy I used to go around the neighborhood during the winter time with my uncle thrashing wheat and oats. He had a little one-horse tread power and an open cylinder. We could thrash about 25 bushels of wheat a day. It was a very simple machine. Anyone could operate it successfully. They were quite different from the modern combined harvester and thrasher that in the California grain fields harvests, thrashes, and sacks ready for market 40 acres of wheat in a day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the trouble with this country is that a lot of men who thought they knew how to run this great Government—but they do not—they might be able to run a one-horse tread, but the modern, improved machine is too big for them. They supposed it would run in the same way exactly as the one-horse tread. It does not do. You have got to have a modern harvester and thrasher. That is the trouble with the old Bourbons, "they never learn anything and never forget anything," and that is where this bill sprang from.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a communication which I have received.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE INDIANAPOLIS BOARD OF TRADE,
ROOM 38, BOARD OF TRADE BUILDING,
Indianapolis, Ind., February 5, 1895.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of the governing committee of the Indianapolis Board of Trade held last evening the following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That this board of governors, representing 500 members of the Indianapolis Board of Trade, heartily approves the recommendations of the President of the United States in his recent message concerning the financial condition of the country, and urge upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress a hearty support to any legislation necessary to carry out said recommendations; and we especially favor the making of a popular loan which may be taken by the people.

Yours, respectfully,

JACOB W. SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM D. BYNUM,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, the Board of Trade of the city of Indianapolis is composed of the merchants, the manufacturers, and the traders of that city, and in politics a majority of the members, I think, Republican. I therefore take it that the resolution adopted by the Board of Trade represents the conservative sentiment of the business element of that active and growing young city regardless of political division.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that this House is going to pass any legislation that will relieve the condition of the Treasury of the United States, and, as the gentleman from Tennessee said, if this House should pass such a measure, I have serious doubts as to whether the other branch of Congress will favorably act upon it. The division of sentiment in this House, as well as throughout the country, certainly does not argue well for the enactment of any measure. We have here displayed a division arising from a division on different questions than that which we are at present confronting. The currency question comes up; the question of the free coinage of silver comes up.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, we ought to lay aside all these questions and simply attempt to legislate upon the one important question to which the President has called our attention, and that is the deplorable condition of the United States Treasury. The Government of the United States is the only party that has ever resumed specie payments in this country. In my judgment the great mistake that has been made in our financial affairs is that the Government, under the act of 1879, did not continue the retirement of the greenback currency and require all our customs dues to be paid in gold.

Now, gentlemen are very much alarmed that the provisions contained in this bill providing for a gold bond will place us upon a gold standard. We have been upon a gold standard for more than half a century, and there is not a government in the world to-day, I care not whether it be a government upon a silver basis or not, but what is on the gold standard; and I care not whether this country go to a silver basis or not, it is impossible to get off the gold standard. We may just as well recognize that fact now and provide for it; and if this Government by issuing a gold bond can secure higher premiums and a lower rate of interest and better preserve its credit, I am willing to stipulate in the bond that it shall be paid in that standard of value which exists and is recognized throughout the commercial world.

Mr. Chairman, I of course would vote for any measure that I believed would give relief to the Treasury of the United States. I would vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Maine, if I believed it would give any relief. But it does not reach the problem at all. The trouble in this country to-day did not begin when there was a deficiency of the revenue. In 1890 the foreign governments of the world were paying a premium for our gold, and we were shipping it abroad, while the Treasury had at the end of the fiscal year a surplus of $105,000,000. The trouble with the Treasury to-day is that it is perfectly defenseless. With more than nine hundred millions of demand obligations to be maintained at a parity with gold, it has a reserve of only one hundred millions, and no way of replenishing that reserve except by the sale of bonds. There is plenty of available cash in the Treasury to-day to meet all current demands. In fact, the available cash is near a hundred millions. Nothing short of a retirement of demand notes of the Government will permanently remedy the evil.

Mr. STRAIT. Mr. Chairman, I have been upon the floor of this House for nearly two years, and as this is the first opportunity that I have had to express a sentiment one way or the other, I would like to say here to-day that I am a Democrat of the South Carolina stripe. I stand here to represent my district, to represent a people as noble, as proud, as deserving as any people upon God's earth. I stand here, Mr. Chairman, to state that we are in a depressed condition, have been, and we expect to remain so just so long as this kind of work is carried on. I would like to state that I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] for proposing to act as sponsor for South Carolina, when he stated upon the floor of this House that a great reaction was taking place in the South, and gave Charleston as an instance of it. Charleston is a little spot upon the seacoast and has little to do and little to say in matters of interest to South Carolina.

Why, I heard upon this floor a sentiment that seems to be prevailing that the whole South is turning over to this gold standard system. We have felt the effects of it for the last thirty years. It has ground our people down almost to the dust. It has reduced the price of our products until our people are almost in a state of starvation; but, thank God, in that country we have we can live upon sweet potatoes, and rice, and so forth, and become purified from the effects of gold. [Laughter.] There was an old negro in my neighborhood who came to me and said, "Doctor, I am glad to see you. What is our friend, Marse Grover, doing up thar? Why, I think he is going to accomplish more than all the preachers of the world for the last three thousand years. Why, he is purifying our people. You know that the love of money is the root of all evil, and, my God, he has placed it out of our reach, so that I have not seen a dollar of it for six months. Thank God, there is no getting it, and I think I may be saved in the end." [Laughter.]

I am constrained to think if my friend from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] would go down to South Carolina and travel around he would open his eyes and rechange his system, that he would get on the other side of the fence and become reconverted and happy.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think he would be made to believe that Mahomet would have to go to the mountain instead of the mountain having to come to Mahomet?

Mr. STRAIT. I think he would recognize the fact that he was but a very small bit of humanity, and that he would get over his passion for the gold standard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have seen sights in this Congress. I have been watching, and I have been singing the old song, "Watching and waiting," for two long years. We were promised upon this floor, and by men who considered themselves Solomons—men who came from the great State of New York—who said that all we needed was to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act and we would have such a time of prosperity in this country as never had been since its organization. And what comes next?

Oh, the Treasury! The Treasury! The Treasury is gone! Mr. Chairman, what need we care for the Treasury so that our people have something, so that they can live and can raise themselves above that condition which is dragging humanity down to the very earth and imposing upon the people, as it were, the very effects that our forefathers trod through the snow with bleeding feet to prevent? What would Washington say to-day if he could come down and look upon this House? [Laughter.] Oh, tears bigger than mountains would flow from his eyes and he would almost die of the pangs that would pierce his heart.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. He would take a whip and drive the money changers out.

Mr. STRAIT. What would old Hickory Jackson (who was born in my county) say. He would say, "Get out of here!" And he would throw out about half the members of this House and lay the lash upon the balance. [Laughter.] The idea of talking about peace and prosperity. Oh, if New York had her way, she would fix the matter all right, sure enough! She would stand here and dictate to the people with her sordid gold. The question for us to consider now is whether man is greater than gold. [Applause.]

There was a time when man was, in this country, equal at least to gold; but in this day of evolution when great statesmen, like our friends from New York, by sleight-of-hand can materialize and vitalize any sordid object and place it over mankind, we are forced to admit in this day gold is greater than man. Because Grover says so. [Cheers.]

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

When we realize the fact that the whole available gold for money in the world could be stacked into a space 23 feet square and 22 feet high (not much more space than "Grover" and his Cabinet could stand on), about two and a half dollars per capita for every man, woman, and child in the world, we know that that would not be anything like sufficient to supply the medium of exchange. So our prices must run down to virtually nothing that these great fortunes may be amassed by the few.

MR. CLEVELAND, YOU KNOW, IS A GOLD BUG.

He has repeatedly urged the laboring man to practice frugality—contends that a dollar will buy more to-day than ever before, which fact no one denies; but where are they to get the dollar when there is so great stagnation in every business, with a shrinkage of money and money values and a corresponding decrease in the demand for labor, which prevents men from investing in and improvement of property of a real character which may be bought to-day, and in a year's time is liable to depreciate more than the interest would accrue. It is very well for Mr. Cleveland to preach frugality to the laboring man while his salary and other incomes are being doubled by such a process as is above stated. [Cheers.] And it seems that he wishes the people to be a little more frugal that they may continue as slaves to the "lords." [Cheers.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us examine the condition a little further. Why the demand for this gold-bond issue? It is this: The bonds now outstanding are nontaxable, interest payable semiannually in coin, and the bond itself convertible into coin. The bondholders, fearing that the Government may change hands, are determined to urge their dear friend "Grover" to bring all the pressure, by force of patronage or otherwise, upon the members of both Houses to pass a bill to their liking, which, lasting for fifty years, would place them on a solid gold basis, which bill proposes to retire the greenback money, which is taxable, to be replaced by gold bonds, noninterest-bearing and nontaxable, with complete control of the entire banking business placed in the hands of these bondholders to expand and contract at will, and to continue the nefarious leeching processes which they have been practicing successfully so long upon the people. [Cheers.]

We have repeatedly asserted that there are a favored few, some by preconceived action, and a very few by chance or luck—the sharks who sat behind the bombproofs and hid in the commissary or like places, and that class who hired substitutes to take their places in the ranks of the Army. Thesesame men, Mr. Chairman, having grown rich upon the necessities of the Government, now conspire together to bring about such legislation by issuing bonds to take the place of the greenback money that had served their purposes so well, which bonds were sold for greenbacks worth only about 60 cents on the dollar, produced by the effects of the exception clause in the law that prohibited them from being received for import duties, and which caused a great contraction of the currency.

These same bonds were to be redeemed in lawful money. The next step that the gold bugs took was to make these bonds the basis of all banking business, not only of deposit, but of issue. Not being satisfied with this, they go one step further—they get a law enacted making the redemption and the interest thereon payable in coin, and still they were not satisfied; but in 1873 they succeeded in having silver demonetized. This virtually made these lawful-money bonds and interest payable in gold by the construction of the law by the various Secretaries of the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems that these men are fearful that the people are about to rise in their might and recapture the Government and have the laws justly and legally administered. And the "gold bugs" desire, while their devoted friend and ally, "Grover," reigns, to get the matter settled by giving a gold bond issue of enough to enslave the country for the next fifty years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no vote of mine shall ever sanction such a bill when its whole purpose is to crush the people, for—

Princes and lords may flourish or may fade,—
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

[Prolonged cheers.]

Mr. STOCKDALE was recognized for three minutes.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I have not more than three minutes. Would it be in order to offer an amendment to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment be germane it would.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Oh, my amendment is perfectly germane. The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 13, page 5, the following:

"And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetalism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States in the markets and in the payment of debts."

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is germane to the amendment that is pending, but the gentleman can offer it later if he can get the floor.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes a point of order on this amendment, and I want to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think the amendment of the gentleman from California is a good one, for if adopted it would get rid of $6,000 of expenditure which is being frittered away every year without benefit to the Government. But in addition to that I want to call attention to the effect of this whole paragraph, which I will vote to strike out when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HUNTER] shall have offered his amendment for that purpose. I believe that this money is expended uselessly.

Mr. Chairman, the third paragraph of the act of Congress of January 16, 1883, to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States provides—

That appointments to the public service aforesaid in the Departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census.

So that it is plain as language can make it that the civil-service law requires the employees of the Government Departments in Washington to be apportioned among the States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and if the Civil Service Commission would discharge their duties faithfully, they could accomplish that apportionment. The gentleman who spoke awhile ago [Mr. HULL] said that the Commission executes the law. I want to show him that they do not execute the law—a law that they certainly could execute; if they did that I would not complain.

Now, as I said on a previous occasion, this law is openly and notoriously violated daily, and if the Civil Service Commissioners do not know it they are incompetent; and if they do know it and will not or can not remedy the evil, they are useless.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the time of Mr. STOCKDALE was extended five minutes.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I desire to say that I make no complaint of the subordinates of that bureau, but the Commissioners fail to do their duty. Mr. Chairman, I introduced a bill in this House in the first session of the present Congress which read as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States."

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, be, and it is hereby, amended as follows:

After the word "census," in the third paragraph of section 2, insert the following: "And the appointments from each State shall be apportioned equally among the Congressional districts of said State, and each appointee shall be at the time of his or her appointment a bona fide resident and citizen of said State and district."

SEC. 2. That immediately after the passage of this act the head of each Department shall ascertain the number of employees in his Department or in any way under his control, in the city of Washington, under the civil-service rules, from each State and Territory and District of Columbia, and report the same to the President; and if it shall appear that any State or Territory or District of Columbia has less than its quota, under said act, of employees in that Department, it shall be the duty of the President to cause all appointments of such employees made thereafter in said Department to be taken from the States and Territories and District of Columbia showing such deficit until the employees in said Department shall be in proportion to the population of the States and Territories and District of Columbia and equally divided among the Congressional districts therein, and thereafter such proportion shall be preserved.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of each head of a Department to proportion the appointments among the States and Territories and District of Columbia as to the salaries, as nearly as he can, with due care for the interest of the service, and report annually to the President the number of employees from each State and Congressional district and the aggregate of their salaries.

Hon. C. J. ERDMAN, of Pennsylvania, on the 10th of May, 1894, introduced a bill embodying my bill with other features. They were referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform, where, so far as I know, they still repose without action. And it is not improper, as I think, to say that a majority of that committee are from States having more than their just quota of employees under the law, and I believe they have been individually blessed with appointments. I was referred by some learned gentlemen in this House to the Blue Book with an air of confidence. Well, even the Blue Book shows inequalities, but it is not correct, but is made up from reports, many of which are incorrect, and employees are put in the Departments here and accredited to States they never saw. As a matter of fact, sir, there are people employed in the Departments who are credited to the State of Mississippi that never lived in that State and perhaps never saw it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. There are about 50 people credited to California who have always lived here or in some other State than California.

Mr. STOCKDALE. When you go to the Departments they will tell you "your State has its quota," and will show the list, and on that list there are some persons that are not citizens of your State, but charged to it. Now, that is a farce. That is trifling with the law. It is trifling with the rights of the people of these States. It is dishonest. The man who tells you under such circumstances that your State has its quota knows that he is deceiving you, knows that he is covering violations of law. Any head of a Department, knowing that he has put men in as coming from a State of which they are not citizens, who tells the representative of that State that its quota is full, states that which is not true; he practices a deception, and to that extent he clouds the reputation of his high office. Now, sir, if these Commissioners know anything, they know that the civil-service law is being violated daily in the manner I have described. They intend the law to be violated in the interest of their favorites, and the heads of Departments knowingly violate it in the interest of their favorites, and, if I had the time and the disposition, I could point out men who have received appointments in the Government Departments here when the States from which they came had very much more than their quota, men who received such appointments in disregard of the rights of States whose quotas were not full.

The law ought to be as provided in the bill introduced by me, and more fully provided in that of Mr. ERDMAN—that the appointments shall be made from States in proportion to population, and the quota of each State be apportioned among the Congressional districts of that State. The employees have become permanent officers of the Government now, and applicants should be nominated by the members of Congress, or by some board, in each district, and if an applicant fails to pass his examination before the Commission let another be sent from the same district, just as we do in appointing cadets to the Military and Naval academies. The present system as administered is denounced by the gentleman from California as a fraud. It is worse than a fraud as managed; it circumvents the object for which the law was made and the Bureau created; for, instead of securing an open field for the preferment of merit, it is often used as a means of favoritism, both in appointments and promotions.

I do not think the gentleman from Colorado can complain of Republicans being turned out. My complaint is that they are not turned out.

Moreover, the life tenure of any office is in derogation of the principles of our Government. The President and all other officers from him down (except United States judges, and they ought not to be excepted), after serving the Government a number of years have to return to the people for indorsement. All the States pursue that policy, and the employees, instead of having a life tenure and receiving promotions by favoritism, should be appointed and promoted on merit. Anyone might be appointed for a second or third term if necessary on account of peculiar merit. It is a vicious mistake to separate the Government from the people and let them know that there are departments they never can enter until some one resigns or dies, and not then unless by favoritism.

I know it is claimed that this law is intended to secure fair play, and that I concede. My complaint is that it is perverted, and it is our business to correct that practice.

The examinations themselves are sometimes conducted unfairly, sometimes farcically, and sometimes properly.

But the inevitable result of the system will be a civil-service pension roll, and in all conscience the taxes that the American people pay for pensions are large enough already.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment may be again read.

The amendment proposed by Mr. BROSIUS was again read, and it was then adopted.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 13, page 5, the following:

"SEC. 7. All laws or parts of laws by which the tax of 10 per cent was imposed upon the circulation of banks other than national banks is hereby repealed, to take effect January 1, 1897."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire with all emphasis in my power to indorse the expressions from the gentleman from New York, General SICKLES, in commending the distinguished President of the United States for his devotion to what he considers to be the best interests of the country. I also desire to say that there is no member of this body more anxious than myself to secure some legislation which will give relief to the suffering people throughout our land. Every petition which I have heard read in this House seems to have emanated from a few persons composing a board of trade or chamber of commerce of some city; and all these petitions, of course, recommend measures which they deem to be in their interests.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late after the amendment has been debated.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The amendment which I have proposed is in the interest of the great mass of the people of our land. I may say the suffering people of our land, because the industrial people, or the great mass, are to-day in a condition bordering upon distress. It will be observed that this amendment does not go into effect immediately. The other provisions of the bill take immediate effect, and it is hoped that they will relieve the strain and stringency which now exist in our national finance.

This amendment is a bow of promise, an anchor of hope, which tells the people that after January 1, 1897, the relief they have been so long promised will begin to be felt by them.

I can not understand how any friend of the President or Secretary of the Treasury can oppose this measure.

The platform upon which we won the victory in 1892 expressly declared in favor of the immediate repeal of this obnoxious and unconstitutional law; the words of the platform being:

We recommend that the prohibitory 10 per cent tax on State-bank issues be repealed.

One purpose of repealing this law was to give the people of the rural districts adequate circulation for their business needs. The President appreciated this, and in his letter of acceptance said:

The people are entitled to sound and honest money abundantly sufficient in volume to supply their business needs.

In that same letter our honored President also said:

The wants of the people arising from a deficiency, or imperfect distribution of money circulation, ought to be fully and honestly recognized and efficiently remedied.

It has been frequently asserted on this floor and elsewhere, and I have never heard it denied, that the President since that time has been unalterably in favor of the repeal of this prohibitory tax and unalterably opposed to any such gross and unconstitutional legislation and perversion of the taxing power, and we all know that Mr. Carlisle has been most emphatic in his views upon this subject and has but recently forcibly expressed himself in favor of the repeal which the amendment under consideration accomplishes—the repeal of a gross and unwarranted perversion of the taxing power which had its birth when the country was in the throes of war and constitutional questions were given very little consideration.

It is refreshing, however, to look back to those dark days and observe that the noble band of Democrats in Congress then, as now, contended against the unconstitutional measure which greed and avarice sought to engraft upon the statutes of our country.

The first ye-and-nay vote on this question was on April 18, 1864, when the following resolution was adopted by a vote of 62 for it and 46 against it:

Resolved, That the expansion of the bank circulation of the country, producing general and ruinous speculation, should be repressed by taxing the issues of the State banks.

It is hardly necessary to say that every one of these 46 votes against the resolution were Democrats. Their names are as follows:

James C. Allen, Illinois.
William J. Allen, Illinois.
Augustus C. Baldwin, Michigan.
George Bliss, Ohio.
James Brooks, New York.
William G. Brown, West Virginia.
John W. Chanler, New York.
Brutus J. Clay, Kentucky.
James A. Cravens, Indiana.
Charles Denison, Pennsylvania.
John R. Eden, Illinois.
Charles A. Eldridge, Wisconsin.
William E. Finck, Ohio.
John Ganson, New York.
John A. Griswold, New York.
H. W. Harrington, Indiana.
Benjamin G. Harris, Maryland.
Anson Herrick, New York.
Wells E. Hutchins, Ohio.
Francis Kernan, New York.
Austin A. King, Missouri.
John Law, Indiana.
Jesse Lazear, Pennsylvania.

Alex Long, Ohio.
Robert Mallory, Kentucky.
Daniel Marcy, New Hampshire.
James F. McDowell, Indiana.
J. F. McKinney, Ohio.
George Middleton, New Jersey.
Homer A. Nelson, New York.
George H. Pendleton, Ohio.
John V. L. Pruyn, New York.
Samuel J. Randall, Pennsylvania.
James C. Robinson, Illinois.
Andrew J. Rogers, New Jersey.
Lewis W. Ross, Illinois.
John B. Steele, New York.
John D. Stiles, Pennsylvania.
Myer Strouse, Pennsylvania.
L. D. M. Sweet, Maine.
Ezra Wheeler, Wisconsin.
Chilton A. White, Ohio.
Joseph W. White, Ohio.
Charles H. Winfield, New York.
Fernando Wood, New York.
George H. Yeaman, Kentucky.

These 46 Democrats, who included some of the most distinguished statesmen and patriots in our land, were recorded as opposed to the measure which we are now asked to repeal, the repeal to take effect not to-day, but January 1, 1897. Among those distinguished Democrats were Francis Kernan, George H. Pendleton, J. V. L. Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, John Ganson, Fernando Wood, H. A. Nelson, James Brooks; among them were the predecessor of my distinguished friend from Buffalo [Mr. LOCKWOOD], the predecessor of the distinguished gentleman from Brooklyn, who sits before me [Mr. HENDRIX].

Mr. TRACEY. Do not leave me out.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And the distinguished predecessor of the gentleman whom I admire so much, and who so ably represents the city of Albany [Mr. TRACEY]. Eleven representatives from the great Empire State of New York voted against incorporating that provision into our laws.

I do not think there was any general and ruinous speculation prevailing at that time, and I presume that the purpose of incorporating those words was to give some excuse for a resolution which all right-thinking men regarded as inexcusable and unwarranted.

The arguments against this amendment come—

1. From that class of our people who now enjoy almost exclusive privileges as bankers.

The repeal of this 10 per cent tax would open the field to others who would of necessity become their competitors.

2. From the creditor class, who always oppose anything which increases the money circulation of the country, because any increase of money lessens the purchasing power of the money they possess.

The Republican party, legislating as it does always in the interest of the few and against the masses of the people, of course contends against anything which can possibly increase the amount of money in the country.

The last Republican State platform in the great State of New York expressed this in unmistakable terms. It said:

We oppose any effort, whether by the removal of the tax on State-bank issues or the free coinage of silver, to lower our currency standard.

Of course they must mean that they are opposed to anything which will decrease the purchasing power of the money they possess.

3. There is also a class of well-to-do people in every city who conceive they would be subjected to a possible inconvenience if there existed in the country any money which was more local in its character than national-bank money. Take one of these well-to-do gentlemen in a city like Chattanooga. Out of 40,000 people there may probably be 1,000 who do not wish to have any money in circulation that they can not use as well in New York or some other distant city as in Chattanooga. They are unwilling to take the trouble of going to their banks and exchanging any State-bank money they may have for greenbacks or national-bank money, the kind of money which we all know will be as valuable in one part of the United States as it is in another. But how does this affect the 39,000—the laborers, mechanics, artisans, workmen of all kinds, and men with small capital struggling to build up a business to support their families? These are the men whose interest we should consider in framing financial laws, and we should also specially consider the great farming community who live in the country surrounding such a city.

Laws which give an adequate amount of circulating medium, local in its character, will add to the prosperity and happiness of all this class of people, and this can best be done by restoring to the States their constitutional rights and allowing them to exercise their sovereign rights in enacting financial laws which are best adapted to the people.

It has been clearly demonstrated that financial laws suitable to people of New York City are not adapted to people of the South and West.

All we ask is that the people of every State shall have the largest possible liberty upon a question which so largely affects their welfare and happiness.

In our country we have two sovereignties—the sovereign States whose sovereign powers are unlimited except so far as they are restrained by the Constitution, and we also have another distinct and separate sovereignty, the Federal sovereignty, which can exercise only those powers conferred upon it by the instrument to which it owes its existence, the Constitution of the United States.

The States make no attempt to restrain the Federal legislation in enacting Federal laws, and I insist that the Federal Congress should not restrain sovereign States in their desire and efforts to exercise their dearest and most valued sovereign rights. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] can not make a point of order after the amendment has been debated.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I rose—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman when he rose could not take off the floor the gentleman from Alabama, who was then debating the amendment. It was too late to make the point of order after the gentleman from Alabama had begun his argument.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It was not my fault. I certainly addressed the Chair—

The CHAIRMAN. It was not anybody's fault, except that the gentleman did not make his point before the debate began.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The Chair did not hear me or recognize me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was looking right at the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and the gentleman from Alabama had begun his remarks—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But the Chair did not pay any attention to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. However important gentlemen may regard this amendment as a separate proposition, it would be very unfortunate if it were incorporated in this bill. I hope, therefore, every friend of this measure will vote against the amendment without regard to his position on the subject as an abstract proposition.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi (to Mr. SPRINGER). You will lose 50 votes for the bill if you do not adopt this proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. We would not gain one vote if we did adopt it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Why not try the experiment?

[Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "January 1, 1897," and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1896."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the Democrats of this House, on all sides of the House, to consider this question which has been offered in the shape of an amendment by the gentleman from Alabama. The President of the United States is himself in favor of the repeal of the 10 per cent law; the Secretary of the Treasury is in favor of the repeal; and I appeal to Eastern Democrats who are after gold bonds and the single gold standard, and ask if they think that 110 Democrats from the Southern States can stand here, in obedience to the wishes of their constituents, and vote for a measure of this kind that gives no crumb of comfort to them?

Mr. HENDRIX. Will you vote for the bill if that is inserted?
Mr. LIVINGSTON. And I ask these gentlemen if they are in earnest; if they mean to stand by the pledges of the Democratic party, and preserve the credit of the country, why will they consent to legislate here for one section only?

Mr. HENDRIX. The gentleman does not answer the question. I say will he vote for this bill with the amendment?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, you try the experiment and see. I have never exhibited bad faith in any proposition presented here, and I do not propose to do so now. You put the amendment on and try it.

But there is not a Democrat here that ought not to be committed to this repeal. Our platforms have universally favored it. Our President and Secretary of the Treasury have signified their willingness to see such legislation enacted; and why can not a Democrat on this floor support it? Do it, gentlemen, and you have gone the longest stride that has been made here toward a compromise of all these conflicting questions. Adopt this amendment and you will have taken the longest step to success that can be attained by the Democratic party in this House.

Mr. COX. What is your amendment?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. To strike out "January, 1897," and insert "July, 1896."

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a few moments to bring before them some communications from commercial bodies and business associations in my State which have been sent me favoring the adoption of measures within the lines of the recommendations of the President, and accordingly, in substance, those embodied in the present bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I ask the Clerk to read the communication I send to the desk from the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUFFALO MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE.
Buffalo, N. Y., January 31, 1895.

At a special meeting of the members of the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange, held this day at noon, George Sandrock, esq., in the chair, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the members of the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange, representing all the commercial interests of our city, believe that a crisis confronts the national credit not less serious than that which was averted in 1893 by the repeal of the silver-purchase power of the Sherman Act: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the general policy of President Cleveland's recent message; and we earnestly urge Congress, in face of the impending peril and laying aside political considerations, to take prompt and patriotic action along the line of the President's recommendations to save the country from financial degradation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the principal commercial bodies throughout the land.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT R. HEFFORD, President.
WILLIAM THURSTONE, Secretary.

Mr. DANIELS. I also send up a resolution adopted by the Builders' Exchange of Buffalo, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUILDERS' ASSOCIATION EXCHANGE.
CORNER COURT AND PEARL STREETS.
Buffalo, N. Y., February 4, 1895.

DEAR SIR: At a special meeting of this exchange the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, We indorse the general policy of the recent message of President Cleveland, and in the conditions that confront the national credit and for the welfare of the manufacturing and commercial interests, as well as for the good of the people at large, we earnestly request Congress to act upon the line of the President's recommendation without delay; that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senators from this State and the Representatives from this country.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY SCHAEFER, President.
J. C. ALMENDINGER, Secretary.

Hon. CHAS. DANIELS,
Congressional Chambers, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DANIELS. I also add in this connection the request of nearly all the banks in the city of Buffalo.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUFFALO, N. Y., January 31, 1895.

Hon. CHARLES DANIELS,
House of Representatives, Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Buffalo Bankers' Association earnestly and respectfully urge upon Congress prompt and patriotic action along the lines of the President's recommendations to avert the impending peril to national credit.

Buffalo Commercial Bank, Marine Bank, American Exchange Bank, Manufacturers and Traders' Bank, Farmers and Mechanics' Bank, Third National Bank, German Bank, Bank of Buffalo, Bank of Commerce, Merchants' Bank, Buffalo Loan, Trust and Safe Deposit Company, German-American Bank, People's Bank, Queen City Bank, Citizens' Bank, Niagara Bank, Metropolitan Bank, Union Bank, The City Bank.

Mr. DANIELS. I also send up a letter from one of the leading brewers in the State—

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DANIELS. Certainly.

Mr. TERRY. Did not these same people in the summer of 1893 send up recommendations here that if we repealed the bullion-purchasing clause of the Sherman Act it would give immediate relief to the country?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Certainly; they are the same people. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. And does not that remind you a little of the three tailors of Tooley street, who held a meeting for their own benefit and headed their resolution: "Be it resolved that we, the people of England."

Mr. DANIELS. No; I do not think so. I ask the Clerk to read this communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

GERHARD LANG'S PARK BREWERY.
Buffalo, N. Y., January 30, 1895.

MY DEAR JUDGE: The business men in your district are looking to you to support Mr. Cleveland in his efforts to bring about a settlement of the financial question. The recommendations made by Mr. Cleveland in his special message are sound and should receive the support of all members of Congress regardless of political affiliations.

Yours, very truly,

EDWIN G. S. MILLER.

Hon. CHARLES DANIELS,

[Mr. BOATNER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. But three minutes remain for debate on this amendment. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized for that time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that it would be possible for our Democratic friends, for a single moment during the history of this Congress, to waive some of their pet schemes, and to be a little bit patriotic just for once, and see what an astonishing effect it would have upon them. Now, there is not a gentleman on the other side of this House but what knows that if he succeeds in putting this proposition upon this bill the bill will be defeated. The only hope that the Administration has today of any success comes from the expectation of Republican votes.

Now, is it not possible for you to hold in abeyance your little peanut schemes of politics just for once, and try the experiment of rising up to an important consideration? Try the experiment of voting once for patriotism and the hope of saving your country from disgrace, without putting upon every measure your petty schemes of personal preference. There is nobody on this floor knows better than the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] that if his speech can be enacted into a vote here, that will be the death of any hope of the Administration in this behalf. You can not come here and demand Republican votes upon the plea of patriotism, and then expect those votes, after you have enacted schemes like this, to stand by you. We hope to aid the Administration, but we can not do it at so heavy cost.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I should like to say a few words in relation to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule prohibits that. Only thirty minutes are allowed for debate on any one amendment.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Would it be in order to get the floor by moving to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not, because the rule limits debate to thirty minutes on any one amendment. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The amendment of Mr. WHEELER of Alabama was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon this amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama and Mr. LIVINGSTON. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, yeas 115.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Tellers. [Cries of "Oh!"]

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 84, yeas 96.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following language in lines 4, 5, and 6, section 3: "But this provision shall not apply to any bonds now outstanding bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent only."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill provides that hereafter national banking associations may take out circulating notes in the manner now provided by law equal to the par value of the bonds deposited to secure the same, but exempts from that provision the 2 per cent bonds now outstanding. I think it is a poor time, when we are trying to strengthen the credit of the Government, to discriminate against these bonds bearing a low rate of interest. If it is possible to put the proposed bonds on the market and float them at 2 per cent I think that ought to be encouraged.

There can be no loss to the Government if you permit these 2 per cent bonds to be placed on terms of equality with those that bear a higher rate of interest, because the Government reserves for a redemption fund at the time the circulation is taken out 5 per cent of it. Therefore there can be no loss to the Government. My amendment will place these 2 per cent bonds on an equality with bonds drawing a higher rate of interest for the purpose of using them as a basis of circulation, and will aid in creating a market at home for future issues of low-interest-bearing bonds.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Of course your idea is that these 2 per cent bonds are discriminated against by this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. That is just what you think?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, sir; I think they are.

Mr. COX. How do you expect to float 2 per cent bonds when you authorize gold bonds for a higher rate of interest?

Mr. HAUGEN. We authorize bonds to be issued at a maximum rate of 3 per cent, but, if I recollect aright, the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds at a rate of interest "not exceeding" 3 per cent. So that if the Secretary of the Treasury can place bonds upon the market at 2 per cent interest he ought to do so under this bill.

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAUGEN. And this would strengthen the credit of the Government and strengthen the value of the 2 per cent bonds.

Mr. COX. Why by this bill, so far as it refers to the 2 per cent bonds, they are putting them at a discount under the provisions of the banking law.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COX. Let me repeat. You are trying to get away from these 2 per cent bonds, and give the same interest and the same right to those that you do to the others.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, sir; I do. I propose to encourage a lower rate of interest by removing the discrimination.

Mr. COX. And that is what ought to be done.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. I agree with you about that; but your bill undertakes to issue another set of bonds; and of course the bankers are going to take the bonds bearing the higher rate of interest.

Mr. HAUGEN. That depends entirely on the Secretary of the Treasury. He may issue bonds under this bill drawing 2 per cent interest, if my amendment is agreed to, and they are placed on the same footing with the other bonds.

Mr. COX. Why do you not require the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds at 2 per cent?

Mr. DINGLEY. He can under the bill.

Mr. COX. Can he sell them at 2 per cent?

Mr. DINGLEY. That is another matter.

Mr. COX. You have got your 2 per cent bonds outstanding. They are Government obligations, worth dollar for dollar, and yet your bill excludes them from the banking privilege.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not consider myself responsible for this bill, but desire to make it as acceptable as possible. The first section of the bill contains this language, "and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum;" and if the Secretary of the Treasury can place them at 2 per cent per annum and sell them at par, I think that he should be given the power to do that. Under the third section of the bill, if my amendment is adopted, these low-interest-bearing bonds will be taken by the national banks the same as any other bonds as a basis for circulation, and there positively can not be any loss from that, for the reason that 5 per cent of the circulation which they are to get on those bonds is retained in the Treasury, even if they are quoted at a slight discount.

Mr. COX. Give me your attention for a moment.

Mr. LACEY. Is not a number of these bonds held by banks whose charters have been extended; and is this not a discrimination against them?

Mr. HAUGEN. I presume that some of them are held by national banks. I understand some $23,000,000 are so held.

Mr. COX. Do you not know that if a bank can buy bonds at 2 per cent that would cost the bank less than par they will never take one of the bonds provided for under this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Would it not raise them to par if this provision was made?

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand they are quoted at 98½, or something like that. I do not believe it good policy on the part of the Government, at a time when we are proposing to place bonds on the market, to discredit the bonds that we have now outstanding. I believe we have about $25,000,000 of these bonds outstanding to-day.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman who has just addressed the committee and the bill itself as reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency evidently contemplate the selling of bonds in some form and the perpetuation, because of the sale of those bonds, of the national-bank system. Now, sir, under that system not a single dollar can be loaned to any man belonging to the farming class of the community. If the honorable chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. SPRINGER] had a fee simple title to every acre of land in the United States, he could not borrow a dollar from any national bank on that real estate. Therefore, I say, the scheme of the bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency is to keep in perpetual existence a class of banks which never have given and never can give any relief to the farming interests of the country.

I hold in my hand a letter received by the mail this morning from one of the most intelligent bankers in our country, which I would like to have permission to insert in the RECORD, showing that during the whole panic of 1893, when more than 150 national banks failed in the North and in the East, there was but one failure of a bank in the State of Mississippi, and that was a national bank. Of the 89 banks existing in that State only one failed, and that, as I have said, was a national bank. Gentlemen say, in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] to repeal the tax on State banks, that those are "wild-cat" banks. Then why did they not fail in the panic of 1893? Your national banks throughout the country failed to the number of 150, while only one bank in the State of Mississippi failed, and that, I repeat, was a national bank. All the other banks in that State "stood the racket" and maintained their credit during that terrible panic.

Mr. Chairman, when the first of these issues of bonds was made, a year ago last January, I said that this Congress would live to see a proposition brought in from some committee for the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds. You issued fifty millions in January, you issued an additional fifty millions last December, and now the proposition is made, in a time of profound peace, to load the country down with an additional debt of five hundred millions of gold interest-bearing bonds! That is the proposition, and the object is to keep alive the national banks, which, while they give ample security to every dollar issued by them because the Government holds bonds to make their issues good, give no security to their depositors.

If any man takes a note of a national bank he does not look to see whether it was issued in Maine or in California; but where you have a system of local banks making their issues to the people and governed by presidents and directors known to the people, those who take the note of a bank look to the character of the bank and to the character of the men who administer it to determine what the value of the notes is. Therefore, such banks give the same security to their depositors that they give to those who hold their currency.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Does the gentleman consider a bank note, the value of which is determined by the local character of the men who issue it, better than a note that is known to be unquestionably good all over the country?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. No, sir; but I consider a good local bank note equally as good as your national-bank note; and the national-bank notes all go to the great money centers, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and the other great cities, so that you have from $25 to $50 per capita of currency in those communities, while the more sparsely populated portions of the country are suffering for want of adequate currency to transact their business.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that he wants a bank note that will not be good except in the community where it is issued?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. No, sir; our bank notes are good. You can not stigmatize them as unworthy of confidence. You had 150 failures among your national banks during the panic of 1893, and we had only one in Mississippi, a national bank.

I herewith append the letter of the banker to whom I have referred. He is one of the most intelligent and successful bankers in my State, and expresses on the subject of repeal of the 10 per cent tax on issues of State banks my views. While I do not entirely concur in some of the views expressed in this letter, I regard it as so valuable in most of its suggestions that I take the liberty of giving it to the country, though not written for publication.

CAPITAL STATE BANK, Jackson, Miss., February 4, 1895.

DEAR SIR: I am very much obliged to you for your letter soliciting my views on the various plans of national currency proposed; also thank you for public documents relating thereto sent me by you, which were interesting reading.

My views are that the United States Government should go out of the banking business as early as possible and get back to its constitutional pre-negative of coining gold and silver, and restore privileges of free banking to people of the States, under safeguards of legislation adapted to improved methods of banking, such as double liability of stockholders, lien on assets to secure circulating notes of banks, with privilege to banks to issue circulation to 50 per cent of their capital, each bank to have redemption agencies in New York, and other central city correspondents, and each bank issuing notes required to keep a reserve in gold and silver to amount of 25 per cent of their deposits, and no note under $10 allowed to be issued, the 10 per cent tax on State banks of course to be repealed; the present system of national banks to be abolished, as oppressive to agricultural States.

The whole system was submitted to originally because it contributed to the wealth of commercial centers at the expense of remote and agricultural States, causing high rates of interest in latter States and low rates in the former, enriching the former and destroying the credit of the latter.

For instance, the ground we walk on in Mississippi and real estate, our best security, national banks are prohibited from loaning a dollar on; the Comptroller of the United States discourages national banks from depositing with States; no deposits of reserve are allowed to be made except in cities with 50,000 inhabitants, and there are no cities in our State with that population. Our bank has $100,000 of State, city, and county bonds, all above par value, but circulating notes are not allowed to be issued upon them. The whole system of national banks is adverse to the business of our people. Out of eighty banks in Mississippi only ten are national banks, simply because only State banks can serve the business needs of our people. Only one bank failed in Mississippi during the great crisis of 1893, and that was a national bank; all our State banks stood firm. But all the wealth of Mississippi is not considered a basis of credit to our State banks. At the same time we carry this wealth in way of collateral to New York banks and get all the credit we want by paying 6 per cent interest for it and redeem at the very date of maturity these credit obligations, notwithstanding the 6 per cent interest burden. So much for the banking system. As to the financial condition of the nation that is a menacing and disturbing element to all business.

The greenbacks ought to be retired some way, as you know. I would not object to a 3 per cent bond sale and the greenbacks retired with the proceeds. However useful in the past, they are pestilential and piratical of the nation's credit as now operated.

I believe in a high standard of currency. There can be no good credit to any nation unless its standard of money is high, and let all obligations be squared by this standard, and that will do much to restore credit. A standard of money that is variable makes it impossible to base calculations in trade and commerce.

England has less money per capita than any other nation, but its credit is the best in the world. The fact is, where the standard of credit is best there the least money is used oftentimes.

I would be willing to concede the coining of 344,000,000 silver dollars to take the place of the retirement of greenbacks if the coining of that metal should then be stopped. I think if that could be made an established policy these two metals could be sustained on a parity. But I think unlimited coining of silver would not bring relief, as its advocates contend, but great damage.

I would regret to see a great commercial nation like ours be relegated to the plane of the second-rate countries that occupy the silver basis.

A measure of value should be a measure of value wherever our trade relations extend. Then if I own a dollar the world owes me a dollar.

I have thrown these views out hurriedly. Many of them are not your views. But I would beg of you, guard the settlement of this financial question jealously.

Wall street and the commercial centers will fight any settlement that does not lay a foundation to continue the national-bank system. That system has good features, but it ought to be denied those features which deny State banks equal privileges, and which prevent them from doing business with their localities as their needs require. I notice all the literature and all the oracles of banking who get a hearing in Washington are from commercial centers who are interested in perpetuating a system that enriches them, but is death to our agricultural States. No ironclad form of banking can be adopted that can be adapted to the needs of every section; therefore should be opposed.

With the highest regard for you personally and officially, and with thanks, I remain,

Yours, truly,

Hon. C. E. HOOKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

R. W. MILLSAPS.

[Mr. McKEIGHAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HENDRIX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin; and in doing so I desire to give my reasons, which are to the effect that there is now national-bank circulation secured by these 2 per cent bonds amounting, as I recollect, to over $22,000,000. If these bonds are discredited as the basis for national-bank circulation, it means that that circulation will either have to be retired or that new bonds will have to be substituted in their place.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Is it not the policy of this bill to discredit the bonds bearing a low rate of interest and which are payable at the option of the Government, by taking them up and funding them in bonds drawing a higher rate of interest?

Mr. HENDRIX. The very essence of the policy of this bill is to get money for the United States, under the present circumstances, at as cheap a rate as possible. For that reason the bonds proposed under the present bill are payable in gold.

Now, it is no part of the duty of Congress, nor is it right as a matter of public policy, that we should discredit any obligation of the United States Government at this time. There is no man, woman, or child in the United States that does not know that this country is going to pay 100 cents on the dollar on every one of its obligations. These bonds now outstanding which are now held by the people or by the national banks (and they naturally gravitate toward the national banks) amount to $25,634,500. In the market places where there is now no demand for a Government bond payable at the option of the Government, in view of the low condition of the finances of the Government, of course these bonds are below par. But for the purpose of securing a circulation which is based, first, upon the faith of the Government as expressed in its obligations, and, second, on a first lien upon all the assets of the bank taking out the circulation, these bonds certainly stand well and they ought not to be discredited.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Ought we not to encourage and protect the bonds bearing the lowest rate of interest?

Mr. HENDRIX. We certainly ought, and that is the whole policy of the bill. The condition of the money market in this country and the world is such that in order to get gold at 3 per cent it is necessary to go into the market and say that the United States specifically expresses in the obligation the same thing that it has established by precedent and by tradition, that its obligations are to be payable in gold. As a matter of common sense and economy, for the purpose of saving the country from taxation and for reducing the interest budget and getting money at the cheapest possible rate, this bill is brought into the House.

Mr. COX. Allow me a question, if you please. The $25,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds now outstanding, to which the gentleman has referred, are at present below par in the market. Now, if we undertake to issue another class of bonds payable in gold do we not at once discredit those gold bonds which are running at a lower rate of interest than the bonds you propose to issue?

Mr. HENDRIX. There is no discredit attaching to a 2 per cent bond except such as is proposed in this bill; and the gentleman from Wisconsin proposes (and I heartily second his proposition) that this discredit shall be removed. Those 2 per cent bonds are payable at the pleasure or option of the Government. Now, suppose that a bank which has those 2 per cent bonds now on deposit to secure its circulation should, after the passage of this bill, when it has the opportunity to increase its circulation up to par of the bonds, fail so that its circulation would have to be redeemed by the Government of the United States; and suppose there is nothing in the assets of the bank to supplement the security of the bonds, the Government not looking to those assets at all until it has exhausted the resources which it has in the securities in its hands then.

The Government has, in the first place, a 5 per cent deposit in cash in lawful money of the United States to redeem the circulation presented; and then it has these 2 per cent bonds which are payable at its pleasure. All that the Government has then to do in order to redeem every dollar of such bank's circulation is to exercise its own pleasure and option, if it becomes necessary, and cancel its own 2 per cent obligation which it holds. If it does not desire to do that, then the Comptroller of the Currency has full power to go into the market and dispose of the bonds for the price they will bring, and then to have recourse to the assets of the bank for the remainder if the amount received for the bonds is not sufficient.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill, as I understand it, is to attain as low a rate of interest as possible on the securities which shall be issued by the Government. In order to reach that end it is certainly bad policy to discriminate against the lowest rate bonds which are allowed to be issued under the law. These 2 per cent bonds are to-day, all of them, held, I think, by the national banks throughout the country, and upon them they have already issued 90 per cent of their currency, as the law provides. It is proposed, however, by this bill to allow new banks to be organized, and allow the old banks to increase their outstanding currency to the par value of the bonds they hold, excepting only the 2 percents.

Now, why should there be a discrimination against these 2 per cent bonds? For my part, I do not think there ought to be any discrimination against any of the securities of the Government. All should be treated alike. If we were to do so, however, it should be just exactly the other way than as contemplated here; that is to say, that a bank which insists on a 5 per cent bond should be restricted to a lower per cent of the value of the bonds for its issues of currency, whereas a bank which is satisfied with 2 per cent should have the right to issue currency to the full amount of the bonds. I say, therefore, we ought to discriminate just in the opposite way if we should discriminate at all.

The question is, then, one of safety for our currency; and if we are to adopt a policy of increasing the circulation of the national banks, we should not begin that policy by discriminating against the credit of the Government and punishing those who are willing to accept its bonds at a low rate.

But another question has been raised in this discussion, that is not, however, involved in the pending amendment, and that is as to the necessity for issuing these bonds payable in gold. To that provision of the bill I object. I do not believe that at the present time it is good policy on the part of this Government to change the system under which we have been operating for a generation and to discriminate between the different kinds of coin issued by the Government.

The Government long ago adopted the policy in almost every act passed in relation to the currency, of declaring the absolute equality of silver and gold when coined; in other words, that both metals should be maintained on a parity and pledging the faith and wish of the Government to such maintenance. All our bonds are now in terms made payable in coin, and they are worth as much as those of Great Britain which are payable in gold alone.

The faith of the Government pledged to maintain the parity of our coin has been accepted in the markets of the world, and our bonds to-day are the equal in value of those of any other nation on the globe.

Now, why discriminate against the old bonds and cast suspicion on them by issuing the new bonds payable absolutely in gold? If we adopt this proposition, a crusade will be organized against the old bonds by persons seeking to have them paid in silver, because it is provided that they are payable only "in coin."

The obligation of the Government has heretofore been declared to maintain a parity between gold and silver, and there is no necessity, I repeat, for making a discrimination which at this time would cast suspicion and discredit on the obligations of the Government heretofore issued and upon its ability to maintain all of them at par.

The increase of our interest-bearing obligations by the addition of five hundred millions at a time of exceptional stringency involves a grave mistake in financing. To issue these bonds, running fifty years, at a time of difficulty is bad policy.

Wise statesmanship would suggest that if the greenbacks are to be canceled and refunded in bonds running for a period of nearly two generations further, a more convenient and favorable time should be chosen than the hard times now upon us. We are assured by Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Carlisle that the difficulties of the Treasury are only temporary, and that when the income tax, the sugar tax, and whisky tax begin to come in there will then be a surplus instead of a deficiency as at present. If this be true, and for the purpose of considering an Administration bill we should treat it as true, then there should not be legislation running into the future fifty years merely to meet an emergency for the next three months.

No individual or corporation would select the most stringent period for the refunding of obligations.

Let us rather legislate for the present difficulty. The proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is ample for that purpose. It will put the Treasury in funds until the tariff bill shall be more fully tried. The time is a bad one for such a scheme as that proposed by the Administration, and the plan persistently ignores the real difficulty of the Government, and that is that the revenues fall short of the expenditures by from five to ten millions of dollars each month.

But another point has been frequently discussed in the debate on this bill, and that is what is known as the "endless chain," by which the greenback is constantly, as gentlemen claim, draining the Treasury of its gold. I do not believe that the greenback ought to be canceled now, especially in these days of hard times. It will not improve times or business conditions in this country to contract the currency $500,000,000 and issue interest-bearing obligations in its stead payable only in gold. It would only increase the difficulties of the present time.

But they say one hundred millions of greenbacks may be used for the purpose of drawing a thousand millions of gold out of the Treasury. That, Mr. Chairman, would be an impossibility, because when the greenback is redeemed, if it is paid out again on account of the expenditures of the Government, it simply discharges obligations which would have been, but for the greenback, payable in gold; and if so—if the greenback is used for that purpose—it relieves the Treasury of paying out the gold; and therefore when the greenback is again presented and a demand for gold is made it simply draws out that which it prevented from being drawn out when the greenback was paid in its stead.

You might as well say that a national bank with $10,000 of circulation can, by the "endless chain" system, be compelled to pay a million dollars of gold on that amount of circulation. Certainly they may be, but they do not give the $10,000 away. They receive it, they loan it again or pay it out on some obligation that would be otherwise payable in gold; and the "endless chain" applies only to the extent of paying it out for that which the bank gets in return for it. There is no bank that fears to organize because its currency may draw out more than the aggregate amount of the notes it issues. They know that the notes will not be given away. When they are paid out a second or third time they always go for value.

In other words, if you have a revenue equal to the expenditures, the "endless chain" stops business, and that is all there is to it. It is an old story used in this body to frighten us. It has been used in the country to excite the timidity of capitalists. They say if you do not retire the greenbacks all the gold will be drawn out of the Treasury, and yet it is absolutely certain by reference to the Treasurer's reports that every greenback cashed in and paid out has saved the same amount of gold. [Applause.] [Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is now exhausted. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following, commencing in line 4, section 3: "But this provision shall not apply to any bonds now outstanding bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent only."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add after the words "in gold," line 10, page 1, and after the same words in line 16, page 2, the following:

"And silver of the standard value of July 14, 1870, in which said obligations shall be paid, without discrimination against either metal."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How would that read if amended?

Mr. PEARSON. It would read wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let us see how it would read. It may read right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

He is hereby authorized to issue and sell at not less than par, in gold and silver of the standard value of July 14, 1870, in which said obligations shall be paid without discrimination against either metal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me one moment. As this is a very important matter, I ask unanimous consent that debate may be continued on this amendment and amendments to it for one hour.

Mr. TERRY. What is to become of the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois submits a request for unanimous consent. The Chair does not see how the committee can extend the time.

Mr. TERRY. I object, anyhow.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the committee can not extend the time. We are acting under a rule in which the House has prescribed the form of debate and limited the time on each amendment to thirty minutes. But objection is made, and the gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, it makes but little difference whether the Springer bill or the Reed substitute is adopted if we must accept any such legislation. One means gold bonds, the other means gold bonds, and both are intended to increase the interest-bearing debt of the Government at the dictation of bond investors.

It is true the gentleman from Maine is very diplomatic in his substitute. He says bonds payable in "coin," and means and intends that the gold monometallists of the Eastern and Middle States shall know that it means gold and intends that his partisan admirers may argue in the South and West that it means either gold or silver, and that such may be inferred by the unwary. However, when pressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], he confesses that "the construction is well settled" of "coin" in these bonds. The Republican newspapers from all over the Eastern and Middle States insist that "coin" meant July 14, 1870, when the law was passed, and now means "gold coin." To be precise about this I will append the usual construction, given by Henry Clews and approved by the New York Press in the issue of February 2, 1895, viz:

Henry Clews, in discussing certain phases of the bond issue with the Press man, had this to say:

"At the end of the war there were over $3,000,000,000 bonds outstanding. They have all been paid off, principal and interest, in gold, with the exception of $564,960,400. Recently $100,000,000 was added, making the total amount outstanding $664,960,400. The Government now contemplates issuing another $100,000,000 of 4 per cent bonds under the act of 1870. At that time there was no agitation of silver and none could then have been anticipated by anybody. The word 'coin' in the act referred to gold coin, which no one can possibly deny. It is, therefore the spirit of the law that the Government must continue to live up to in recognizing gold as the coin in which to pay the interest and principal of all such bonds."

Every Secretary of the Treasury, from and including Hugh McCulloch, has either construed "coin" to mean "gold coin" or held that the Government should permit, as a stroke of public policy and to maintain the parity between the two metals or to maintain every United States dollar on an equality, the bondholder and large public creditor to choose the kind of money they would receive.

On the legislature of Ohio passing a joint resolution in 1877 declaring that common honesty and justice to the taxpayers required the Government bonds to be paid in gold or silver, at the option of the Government, Senator Matthews took up the matter in the Senate of the United States early in 1878 and had a joint resolution passed in the Senate and in this House declaring that it was not in derogation of the public faith or in violation of the contract to pay the bonded debt of the Government in silver dollars, at the option of the Government.

Senator SHERMAN declared from the floor of the Senate in 1869 that to require the people of this country to pay its obligations in gold or the equivalent of gold would require them to pay 135 pounds of wheat where they only agreed to pay a hundred pounds.

It is not only extremely humiliating to American citizens to see this Government kneeling and begging a lot of foreign and domestic public Treasury looters for breath, but it is a dull and stupid statesman indeed that can hope to break a panic and return money to the developing industries while the Government continues to furnish the best and safest investment known to capitalists in the way of bond investments.

Had the wrecking vampires been driven away from the Treasury, as they were formerly kicked out of the temples of justice, in the very beginning, and if the Secretary had enforced the law by paying the debts of the Government in gold or silver, according to the contract and the law, the panic would have disappeared, the Treasury would have been unmolested, and the idle money hoarded and kept awaiting these forced bond issues would have been reinvested in developing enterprises.

The Government, from the beginning of this Administration, has offered premiums, in the way of bond issues, to foreign and domestic speculators for their withdrawals of gold from its Treasury. The management of the Treasury, if not purposely to force legislation and a gold standard, has been almost criminally insipid and puerile.

Either through gross incompetency, or intentionally, this Government has joined the international money lenders in making it the point of every effort to drag this country to the gold standard and to a perpetual debt system for the benefit of money lenders. Every indication points to its being purposely done.

Nearly two hundred years ago England made just such loans, under such false pretenses, for a short space of time, and they are yet unpaid. The English statesmen boast that it is a cardinal principle of the English Government to "refund the public debt."

In 1836, when the banking power began exerting an undue influence over Congress and the Government, the eternal Jackson laid his iron hand upon it and crushed it out of existence. The masses of a grateful Republic sang to him hosannas as the savior of their temporal liberties and possessions from these icy and merciless vultures.

The power that Jackson throttled has raised to his seat, and unfortunately under the same political name, the present Executive, who, according to the public press, has conjuring around him daily, like a flock of unclean birds around a rapidly disintegrating carcass, foreign and domestic speculators, and he is daily receiving, without regard to party or nationality, encomiums of bankers' organizations of Chicago, St. Louis, Memphis, Knoxville, New York, London, and elsewhere, as a most just, wise, and patriotic President, while the people, the laborers, the farmers, and great middle classes are writhing and groaning unnoticed under the iron heel of their favored creditors while their debts are being doubled. How long must we be made servants to the money lenders by our unjust and pliant rulers?

One of the Rothschilds, when asked to become the formal king of the Jews to assist in fulfilling the prophecies, replied, "No; I would rather be the Jew of the kings."

I submit here a sample of the daily press reports, which photograph a dismal future for the American people, viz:

[New York Press, February 1, 1895.]

The chief topic of interest in Wall street yesterday, however, was the visit of W. E. Curtis, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Although Mr. Curtis disclaimed that he was here on any other business than the most ordinary, he no sooner reached the subtreasury yesterday morning than he began to hold court with all the representative foreign bankers. August Belmont was the first to arrive, and soon afterward J. Pierpont Morgan put in his appearance. Then followed in turn Mr. Crane of Baring, Magoun & Co., Morris Wormser, James Speyer, Ernest Thalmann, Mr. Meyer of Lazard Frères, Mr. Ickelheimer of Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., and Mr. Isaac Seligman. The interesting point in connection with the conference was the fact that none of the home bankers, so far as known, nor any of the members of the syndicate that took up the last bond issue were invited to see the Assistant Secretary.

It developed that Mr. Curtis's visit was as prolific of results as the famous march of the King of France up hill and down again. He had come to New York to virtually get bids for a loan of Government funds to the amount of from one hundred to two hundred millions. As stated in the Press exclusively several days ago, the Rothschilds have been negotiating with the Secretary of the Treasury, through their American house, August Belmont & Co., for some days past, but the trouble seemed to be over the "coin" bonds, instead of gold bonds. Mr. Belmont declined to discuss the matter with the Press reporter, but there is the best reason for saying that nothing will be consummated until Assistant Secretary Curtis gets back to Washington and lays before the Administration the results of his trip here.

NEW YORK FINANCIERS HERE.

[Washington Post, February 6, 1895.]

The Cabinet yesterday was engaged for four and a half hours in discussing the impending bond issue; but if any conclusion was reached it was made known by Secretary Carlisle that the time for giving publicity thereto had not arrived. That a bond issue is likely to occur within a day or two is, however, generally regarded as certain.

Yesterday was one of conflicting rumors and intense interest about the forthcoming issue. Several well-known bankers and capitalists arrived here from New York, and all day yesterday conferences were held between those gentlemen and prominent Government officials. Among the prominent New York bankers now here are August Belmont, representing the Rothschilds; J. Pierpont Morgan, and Messrs. Speyer and Bacon.

Wednesday night the President, Secretary Carlisle, and Mr. Morgan were in conference at the Executive Mansion until a late hour. Mr. Belmont had seen the Secretary earlier in the afternoon. Yesterday morning the conference was resumed with Mr. Morgan. An industriously circulated rumor stated that Mr. Belmont had withdrawn from all participation in the matter of placing the loan abroad, leaving the bonds to be taken by American bankers.

SENSATIONAL REPORTS.

Rumors that there were disagreements in the Cabinet on several matters connected with the bond issue became rife after the Cabinet adjourned, but could be traced to no reliable source. Mr. Belmont called at the Treasury in the afternoon and had a conference with Mr. Curtis, but received no information as to the results of the Cabinet session. The President, Attorney-General Olney, and Secretary Carlisle were together at the Executive Mansion as early as 10 o'clock, and Secretary Carlisle did not return to the Treasury until nearly 5 o'clock in the afternoon. He authorized the statement that rumors of dissensions in the Cabinet were unfounded. One that stated he had resigned it was ascertained was without the shadow of foundation. Secretary Carlisle himself would not dignify this rumor by a denial.

The Treasury yesterday gained $556,000 in gold, increasing the gold reserve at the close of business to $43,304,642.

All of this talk of a bankrupt Treasury, need of legislative aid, and gold necessities are the rantings of those in power to induce this ruinous gold system or the vaporings of incompetents directed by Treasury looters.

The London Status of February 2, the financial organ of the conservative money classes of Europe, lets the cat out of the bag—admits that the President's plan is that desired by the capitalists, but that the silver-coinage plan of the South and West would build up these two countries and would not hurt the productive industries, but would stimulate them, but would hurt the money-lending classes of both hemispheres, viz:

[From the Rocky Mountain News, February 2, 1895.]

LONDON, February 1, 1895.

The Statist will say to-morrow:

"President Cleveland's message appears to be wise and statesmanlike. As the law stands, it is quite clear that a large sum should not be borrowed in Europe, as there is doubt respecting the President's ability to contract to pay gold. This would be fatal to any projected loan. Money can always be had at a price, but the Government of the United States can not act as if it were bankrupt. Its credit would stand as high as that of any country in the world if Congress would only do its duty. If the present Congress does not act, it is greatly feared that it will be too late to appeal to the new Congress, as before it can be called together a crisis will probably have occurred. It is questionable whether under the existing conditions the President can even borrow at home. The banks, in order to avert a panic, may furnish him with gold, but even then it is questionable whether, when a doubt exists respecting payment in gold, enough gold can be got."

WANTS MORE CONTRACTION.

"In any case, mere borrowing will not avail, as the experience of the past year has shown that sooner or later there must be a contraction of the currency or there will be a panic."

The Statist proceeds to discuss the consequences in the event, firstly, of gold being demonetized; secondly, no legislation whatever being arrived at; thirdly, the effect of the free coinage of silver. Then the Statist remarks:

"If gold is demonetized, it is perfectly clear that there will be a great transfer of property from the capitalist and lending classes to the producing and borrowing classes. This would be of immense advantage to the West and South and would prove a serious loss to the Eastern States and to Europe."

INFLUENCE ON THE MARKET.

"Of course a great country like the United States adopting a silver standard would have great influence on the whole of the world, and silver would undoubtedly rise, but it would be long before it reached 60 pence. The great reduction of debts all over the United States by a fall to silver would give the farming and producing classes generally a sense of freedom and prosperity which they have not had for many years, and would probably give a great stimulus to production. If silver did not rise much for a while, American wheat, cotton, pork, etc., would compete with the product of other countries at a very great advantage, and there would probably be a very rapid and great growth of exports and the beginning of an era of great prosperity."

"On the other hand, the lending and creditor classes would suffer and their losses would not affect production to anything like the same extent as the gains of the debtors and producers would. Further, there would be a very serious fall in securities, which would injure capitalists and lenders, both in the United States and Europe."

"If Congress refuses legislation, then gold would go a premium, but probably not high. The tendency would still be to benefit debtors and producers, and would injure capitalists and lenders, while production and exports would be stimulated, though not to a great extent."

WOULD REDUCE.

"Thirdly, if the mints were opened to free coinage, which would tend to make the gold premium higher still, the premium would not be very high, and the reduction of the debt and the losses of capitalists would be small compared with the demonetization of gold."

Summing up this review of the financial possibilities, the Statist represents the West and South as being perfectly right in the view that a change of the present system would benefit their sections of the Union. The effect of the change they advocate would be a tendency to transfer property by wholesale from the East and Europe to the West and South. In fact it would be a form of repudiation, and it would lower the credit of the United States and prevent the free influx of European capital. In the future, probably, European capitalists will always insist upon the gold clause—they will require a clear contract that they will be repaid in gold.

"In the event of gold demonetization, matters will right themselves in the long run, but the run might be very long, and another point is that a great transfer of property would not act uniformly. Debts falling due soon after the change would be immensely reduced, whereas debts falling due later, when silver has risen, would be less reduced, and if silver reached 60 pence there would be no reduction in debts whatever."

The great indebtedness of the country and limited money supply are the chief causes of our present difficulties, and you now propose to increase it. It is mere cant and false pretense to talk about the danger of a silver basis or the danger of a suspension of specie payment, heralded to the world daily. During one of our most prosperous periods we were under a complete suspension,

The Bank of England from time to time, once for a period of twenty-five years, and the Bank of France in 1848 and 1870, sus-pendent specie payment till a convenient time and came out stronger than ever. The banks of New York in the late panic suspended all money payments and came out without discredit, and this Government, if it desired to serve the people instead of the banks, has ample powers to protect the Treasury and the people, but it refuses, and is playing this game of cant and hypocrisy at the dictation of the great creditor classes of the world that seem to have full possession of the Administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I desire to offer a substitute for the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 of page 1 strike out the words "in gold;" also, in line 16, page 2, strike out the word "gold."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some gentleman who is opposed to the amendment, and will recognize the gentleman from Georgia later.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand that there are only fifteen minutes' debate allowed on the amendment and on the amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the order. If no other gentleman desires the floor at this time the gentleman from Georgia will be recognized.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to put upon this country a species of class legislation that is unfair and that the people can not and will not submit to. Here is a class of creditors whom it is proposed to pay in gold, while every other creditor of this Government must accept silver certificates, greenbacks, national-bank notes, or standard silver dollars. The men in your Army and Navy, the poor men and women who work in the Government shops, the men who raise the wheat to feed your soldiers and your sailors, the pensioners of this country to the amount of $150,000,000 annually, are to be forced to accept silver money, or other such money degraded and legislated against until it is not current in the great money markets of the world, while the special class contemplated by this bill are to be paid in gold.

Mr. Chairman, neither the law as it exists to-day, nor our laws for one hundred years past, have made any such discrimination in the currency of our country; yet it is now proposed to inaugurate a species of class legislation that will drive every other creditor of this Government to demand gold—gold for wheat, gold for cotton, gold for silver, gold for pensions, gold for the salaries of your Congressmen, gold for the salary of your President, gold for everything. Are you ready to do that now?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the substitute.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] has offered an amendment providing that the bonds, which we propose in this bill to issue for the relief of the Treasury, shall be made payable half in gold and half in silver. I have asked recognition in order to impress upon the House, as earnestly as I am capable of doing, the importance of not departing from the language of the bill where it provides that they shall be distinctly made payable in gold.

There is probably no gentleman upon this floor who entertains any other idea than that all of the bonds of this Government now in existence, although they are stipulated to be paid in coin, will be paid in anything but gold. Your patriotism and pride of country would rebel against any proposition that looked to a partial or total repudiation of our national obligations.

We have been able to float them at home and abroad upon that distinct understanding. Those who have invested in them have shown their confidence in our spirit of national pride, and you do not intend to disappoint them.

Such being the case, I ask you the simple business question: What is the objection to expressing in plain language what we in fact hold ourselves honorably bound to do? By doing so, we make a broader market for them, and are not confined to drafts upon our own store of gold, but can market them abroad at any financial center, and bring foreign gold to replenish our exhausted store.

We are also relieved from the rather humiliating position of being obliged to virtually secure the indorsement of home and foreign bankers before we can market them abroad. We make them an investment for foreign private holders which will be eagerly sought, thus placing them out of the market for return in large quantities.

Some gentlemen here urge as a reason why we should retain the old word "coin," instead of "gold," that it will be a discrimination against the old bonds.

If this was the case do you not suppose that the holders of those old bonds would have made their voices heard in protest? Yet they are the very ones who have urged it upon us to make these bonds payable in the metal that is recognized throughout the whole world as the standard of value. No protests from banks or savings banks have come to us; on the contrary, all of the financial interests have asked for it.

You will thus see that that objection falls to the ground.

Let me urge you, gentlemen, not to alter this provision, but to pass the bill.

I can not support the substitute of the gentleman from Maine, for it does not afford any permanent relief to the Government.

Neither can I support that of the gentleman from Tennessee, for it is devoted to the organization of a new banking system which we are not at present prepared for. Let us meet the present emergency and relieve the Government. There is one assurance, however, that comes to us in this hour of our trial. We have at the head of our Government, occupying the Executive Chair, a man who commands the confidence of the people and who, having discharged his duty in the way of notifying Congress of what he needs to sustain the credit of the nation, has not hesitated to tell us that, whatever may be the result of our action to-day, he will with every weapon in his hands defend our integrity and our credit. You may desert him in his hour of need, you may turn a deaf ear to his warnings, but the time is not far distant when he will be vindicated and you condemned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the condition of things witnessed in the House of Representatives to-day reminds me of what an eminent physician who was in charge of a large asylum for the insane once said to me upon my inquiry as to why the patients did not overpower the attendants and escape. The doctor said that there were no two of them affected with the same delusion, and therefore it was impossible for them to conspire together and unite upon any concerted plan of action. [Laughter.] Now, it seems to me that there are about as many different opinions here as there are members sitting in this House, and that it will be impossible to agree to the provisions of this bill.

If the Democratic majority can not present a measure for the relief of the people against the pressure of hard times and pass it through Congress, it will simply confirm the charges of incompetency which the Republicans have heretofore made against them. They have been merely a party of platforms and opposition so long that there is not enough wisdom and patriotism in the party to enable them to do any affirmative act of great national benefit. I wish it was not so, for I am sure the Republicans would gladly come to the relief of the Administration if there was no purpose to reverse the principles which are fundamental with our party.

I am frank to say that the bill under consideration could be amended so as to receive my support. If the provision requiring the proposed bonds to be redeemed in gold could be so modified as to require that they shall be redeemed in coin, I should be willing to vote for the proposition. In my opinion it would be better to issue 3 per cent interest-bearing bonds for short times than to issue bonds at a higher rate of interest and for longer periods. The Secretary of the Treasury has issued bonds of the face value of $100,000,000, payable in coin, on which about $117,000,000 were realized within the last year on account of the premium on such bonds.

Why, then, is it not practicable to negotiate a 3 per cent interest bond payable in coin, as those are which have been issued? There can be no reason, unless it is because of a distrust of the Democratic Administration. There never was a time under Republican rule when it was not possible to dispose of United States bonds at par. The first bonds issued during the war period were payable in lawful money. In 1875, under the act providing for the resumption of specie payments, the law was amended so as to require their payment in coin. There was no difficulty in negotiating any such bonds, and they now command a high premium in the money markets.

REVENUES.

It is the misfortune of the country that its public affairs are now controlled by the Democratic party. For the first time since the civil war that party has a majority in both Houses of Congress, and I call the people of the United States as witnesses to prove that the country never before experienced such universal business calamities. The great manufacturing houses were compelled to shut down their machinery and close their doors against working men. The laboring classes in the manufacturing centers were driven to want and suffering for the common necessities of life. The revenues of the Government were reduced far below the expenditures, and the nation's debt increased every day. The creditors of the Government and the holders of all kinds of bonds and securities in this country became alarmed, and there has been a distrust of the Democratic Administration both in this country and abroad.

And how was this condition of affairs brought about? It was caused by intrusting the administration of the executive and legislative branches of the Government to a party distinguished for its platform platitudes and destitute of practical methods. [Applause.]

Who can doubt that if the McKinley law had remained undisturbed in its general scope the country would have continued to have a much greater share of prosperity than it has under Democratic tinkering? I think the people of the United States in November, 1894, clearly reversed their action of November, 1892, when they elected a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress. There can be no argument against such an overwhelming expression of public opinion. The Democratic party have been weighed in the balance of public opinion and found wanting. It is urged by the Secretary of the Treasury that the revenues of the Government will soon equal the expenditures. I certainly hope that such a happy condition of things will soon come, but I regret that to bring about such a condition of the revenues it was considered wise to put sugar on the dutiable list. Sugar is no longer a luxury of life; it is an article of everyday consumption in the most humble families of the land and should be supplied as cheaply as possible.

THE GREENBACKS.

Mr. Chairman, I question the policy provided for in the second section. The United States legal-tender notes now aggregate about $346,000,000, and the Treasury notes amount to about $150,000,000. They are the only paper currency which are legal tender for all debts, public and private. If they are canceled there will be left only gold and silver which can be tendered in lawful payment of debts between individuals. In my opinion it would be well to maintain as large a legal-tender currency as is practicable. Another consideration is that this volume of $496,000,000 does not bear interest, and if they are retired and bonds issued to raise the money with which to retire them, the interest-bearing debt will be increased to that extent. I know it is urged in favor of the cancellation of the legal-tenders that they are demands upon the Treasury, and that it is difficult to maintain the $100,000,000 gold reserve so long as they are outstanding. I grant that there is some force in that position. But, all things considered, is the fact that they are redeemable in coin an unmitigated evil?

If this class of paper currency were not redeemable in coin it is very doubtful if their parity with coin would have been maintained. I think that if the revenues of the Government were equal to or in excess of the expenditures, so that it would not be necessary to draw upon the gold reserve for the expenses of the Government, there would be no occasion for alarm.

If an individual had a reserve in bank, and his yearly expenses exceeded his yearly income, he would be compelled to draw upon his bank account for the difference; and if he was so unfortunate as to have no bank account or other fund on which he could draw it would be necessary for him to procure a loan.

That is substantially the condition of the United States at this time. Our expenses exceed our income, and our Treasury account is being drawn upon for the necessities of the Government. What, then, is the duty of Congress? I think it is clearly to procure a loan with which to pay our debts and maintain our credit, and forthwith see to it that the yearly receipts of the Government shall be ample for the payment of all liabilities and current expenses.

The greenbacks and Treasury notes are popular currency among the people, and I am not disposed to surrender them until I am convinced that the people desire their cancellation. I think the tendency among capitalists is to drive the country to an irresistible single gold standard. I am not prepared to go that far. In my opinion it is possible to maintain a large amount of silver coin on a parity with gold coin. At any rate before I consent to surrender silver coin, I desire that there shall be an honest and heroic effort to save that metal as a part of the redemption money of this country. I am quite convinced that in some quarters there will be a desperate attempt to drive out silver and exclude it from its time-honored place and importance in our financial system. I should be glad if silver coin could be reinstated as a part of our redemption money instead of making its value dependent upon its convertibility with gold coin.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. Chairman, the third section provides that national banks may receive and issue national-bank currency notes to the full value of the United States bonds deposited to secure their circulation. I agree to this proposition. There is no reason why there should be a restriction to 90 per cent of the par value of the bonds when the bonds are now at a large premium and worth much more than their par value. The limit to 90 per cent was made at a time when it was uncertain what would be the value of the bonds.

There are some gentlemen here who seem to have great antipathy to national banks and a great liking for State banks. I can see no good reason for either disliking the one or liking the other. The national banks furnish a most excellent bank currency. The holders of it are always protected by the bonds deposited for their redemption. The objection that the banks get both interest on the bonds deposited and on the bank notes loaned out is not well founded. In the first place, does it make any difference to the people who hold the bonds? Does it make any difference to a man who holds his note, especially if he is prepared to pay it at maturity? It is a matter of indifference to the people whether a bank holds our bonds or some other person's. The interest must be paid at all events.

But experience has demonstrated that there is not much profit in banking under the national banking system of late years. The bonds cost so much above their face or par value that the banks can not afford to hold them or buy them if they do not have them on hand. The interest is paid on the face value only, although the cost may be 15 per cent above the par value. Then every national bank is subject to taxes for the expenses of inspections and otherwise.

During the past year 79 national banks, with an aggregate capital stock of $10,475,000, voluntarily withdrew. There were on the 31st day of October, 1894, 3,756 national banks. The total amount of circulation was $207,472,603, a net decrease of $1,741,563. Thus showing that there is a disposition to withdraw from the system.

We want as much money as possible to accommodate local trade. The general drift of money is to the great cities, and if we have local currency, which can be expanded when there is a great demand for it, I think it will be helpful in many ways. Our State banks do not issue currency notes, but simply handle money or notes issued by the Government and national banks.

The fourth section, which proposes that national-bank notes under $10 shall not be issued, and that silver certificates of a less denomination shall take the place of the small bank notes will have a tendency to enlarge the use of silver and force the circulation of silver notes. I see no objection to trying the experiment, for I believe it would be successful and would add to the volume of our paper currency.

The other provisions of the bill enlarging the authority of the banks to regulate the volume of their currency are not of great importance, and I should not refuse to vote for the bill on account of such amendments to the existing law. Therefore, if the friends of the bill will so amend it as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, bonds payable as specified in the bill, and bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest, payable quarterly, and will strike out the second section, which cancels the legal tenders, I will vote for the bill.

MONEY IN CIRCULATION.

The last statement of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that there has been a large decrease in the amount of money in circulation during the year ending February 1, 1895. I submit the statement, which shows a decrease of $123,125,996..

DEFICIENCIES.

The last report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, the expenditures of the Government largely exceeded the total receipts. The expenditures were $442,605,758.87 and the receipts were $372,802,498.29; excess of expenditures over receipts, $69,803,260.58. The same report also shows that as compared with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, the receipts for 1894 fell off $88,914,063.65, while the ordinary expenditures decreased only $15,952,874.66, and during the last month, January, 1895, there was an increase of expenditures over receipts amounting to $8,734,275.80. And thus it has been during the entire Administration of Mr. Cleveland and this Democratic Congress.

And who ought to be surprised at the result? How could the condition of affairs be otherwise? The threatening attitude of that party in opposition to the protective tariff, which protected American manufactures, producers, and workmen against the cheap competition of foreign countries, created and spread alarm throughout the entire country.

The life was knocked out of business; the machinery ceased to move; great industries were suspended; rich men became penniless, and poor men were driven to want and brought face to face with starvation. Never in the history of this country was there greater suffering than now.

The great masses of workingmen have not found steady employment, and consequently have not had money to buy as freely as before. As proof of this it is ascertained that the consumption of wheat during the year has fallen off about 1 bushel to each individual, and the consumption of corn about 7 bushels to each individual in the United States. Our population is not far from 70,000,000, and the wheat consumption therefore fell off about 70,000,000 bushels, while the consumption of corn fell off about seven times 70,000,000.

The effect of this assault upon the industries of the country are far reaching and I fear will be of long duration. In my opinion the surest way to restore and maintain prosperity is to firmly adhere to the doctrine of protection to American producers, manufacturers, and laborers.

This system furnishes opportunities for investment of capital, secures steady and profitable employment to labor, and creates and sustains a home market for all kinds of products. Under the Democratic theory of free trade our capitalists are afraid to venture upon great enterprises requiring the use of large sums of money. If capital is unemployed labor is unemployed; and if labor is unemployed the demand for farm products is largely decreased.

Therefore I am quite confident that this country will not return to its wonted prosperity until the people are assured that the doctrine of protection is to be upheld. I know that there are some Republicans who are disposed to ridicule the idea that the people of the United States will stand by the principles of the McKinley law. But what interpretation can fairly be given to the overwhelming Republican majority at the last election if it was not an approval of the Republican policy of protection?

The few free-trade Republicans, who occasionally vote with the party, will not be permitted to declare the doctrine of the party. There is no Republican who ever claimed that the McKinley schedules were absolutely faultless; but we do insist that the law was in the main correct, in practice as well as in principle.

When the Republicans come into full control of the Government again, as I am very confident they will after the next Presidential election, they will be able to adjust the tariff on protective lines to the satisfaction of the friends of the protective system. [Applause.]

And now, Mr. Chairman, before I conclude my remarks, I want to call attention to the newspaper reports to the effect that the Secretary of the Treasury will issue more bonds, and at the rate of about 4 per cent interest, unless this bill is passed authorizing the issue of bonds payable in gold. It is suggested that gold bonds can be disposed of at 3 per cent interest, but that bonds payable in coin can not be negotiated for less than 4 per cent interest. If this is a fact, then why is gold not already at a premium? If there is such want of confidence in the financial system of the country as to require the bonds to be paid in gold only, if we are to sell them at a low rate of interest, it is a confession of our instability, and I, for one, am not prepared to admit it.

Our bonds were sold during and soon after the war, when there was some grounds for suspicion that they might not be paid in gold, payable in lawful money or coin, and I think we need not now discredit them or the country which issued them. I understand the bonds are to be sold abroad. I think if the United States would exhibit less dependence upon foreign countries and legislate more for the welfare of our own people we should get along much better. I do not believe it would be wise to make a distinction in the character of our bonds. I have no doubt that our money will continue to be safe, and that silver and gold will be maintained at a parity. But I do not think that the way to do this is by making our obligations payable in gold.

Whatever money is good enough for the people of the United States ought to be good enough for whoever holds any of our obligations. Therefore, while I appreciate the little temporary saving of the difference between 3 and 4 per cent interest upon a small issue of bonds, I can not now give my support to a measure which, in my judgment, will make it more difficult for the people of the United States to have a larger use of silver coin on a parity with gold coin.

If I am mistaken in my views of this question, it is a mistake of the head and not of the heart. I have but one purpose in view, and that is to subserve the best interests of the people of my own country.

I think the effort to carry this country to the single gold standard has already incidentally increased the liabilities of the debtors, and, in a like manner, enhanced the value of all credits of long standing. Although the purchasing power of our currency has been largely appreciated, the usual rates of interest are generally maintained. The products of the farm are greatly depreciated in value, and the ability to pay debts is greatly affected thereby. A large majority of investments in real estate and otherwise were made when prices ruled much higher than now, and, by reason of our approach toward a single gold standard, the values have so depreciated that nothing like the original cost can be realized when the holders desire to dispose of their property.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, if I have made myself understood I am satisfied. I would not oppose this measure from a partisan standpoint. I should be glad to support a proper bill for the present relief of the Treasury. But, sir, I can not yield my convictions for the sake of assisting the Administration out of the mud into which it has stumbled, and at the same time plunge the country into a deeper mire from which it might never be rescued.

I have said, and I repeat, that I am unwilling to join hands with the Administration and the gold monometallists of this House in striking a deathblow to bimetalism. [Great applause.]

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the principal question now disturbing the minds of some of the members of this House is whether the bonds to be issued shall in express terms be payable in gold or shall be made payable in coin. It is conceded that the gold reserve in the Treasury must be maintained at not less than one hundred millions; that the gold reserve is absolutely necessary to the credit of the Government and to secure and maintain the confidence of the financial world, not alone in the ability of the Government to meet and pay all of its obligations in gold, but for the additional reason that all investors in Government securities of every kind and character will receive both principal and interest in the standard money of the civilized world.

The fact is now apparent to all that the foreign owners and holders of American securities have lost confidence in our ability to either meet or pay our obligations in gold. It is no answer to say that our securities ought to be owned by our own people; the fact is, much as we may regret it, that millions upon millions of American stocks and bonds are held abroad. Many of our great railroads have been built by foreign capital; our country has been developed by foreign capital, and this development has been to the great benefit and prosperity of the American people. We received this money on a gold basis; our creditors now—it may be unreasonable, and I believe that it is—fear that they are to be paid in silver. This fear and uncertainty has brought about a lack of confidence, and as a result many holders of American securities are sending them back to this country for sale, and in this way taking the gold out of the country.

This lack of confidence commenced when, on the 14th of July, 1890, the Sherman silver purchasing act became a part of the financial policy of the Government. From that time to the present the conflict between silver and gold for supremacy in this Government has been constantly and prominently before the people. Slowly but surely our securities have depreciated in our own as well as foreign markets; just as surely the rate of interest upon our Government securities has increased. This depreciation in the value of our stocks and securities and the increase in the rate of interest is the natural result arising from the doubt of our intention or ability to, and whether we will, pay in gold or silver coin.

It has been stated on this floor, and in my judgment there is not a reasonable citizen of the United States who does not honestly believe, that every obligation of this Government will be paid in the gold coin of the country. This raises the question, what is the objection at this time to having a gold bond, and for what reason should we make the bond payable in gold? I answer, the principal reason for inserting in bonds proposed to be issued under this bill the words, "Payable in gold," is to give an assurance to the people of the world that the Government of this country recognizes and will carry out its obligations to pay in gold, and thus restore confidence and stop the flow of gold out of the Treasury of this country. The benefit to accrue to the people of the country is twofold: First, a higher price for our bonds, and, second, a lower rate of interest, thus lessening the burden upon the people.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And more taxation?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. No more taxation—less taxation.

It is utterly idle when discussing the principles involved in this bill to condemn and abuse national banks. The banking institutions have been the target for a certain style of oratory for centuries, yet every candid man must admit their necessity and their use and benefit to the public. The bill grants to national banks the right to purchase bonds, and by depositing them with the Comptroller of the Currency have bills issued to them in denominations of not less than $10 to the full amount of the bonds deposited, thus providing for the people of the country an absolutely safe and reliable circulating medium, good in every section of the country and all over the civilized world.

To meet the wants of every community banks are permitted to organize with a capital of $20,000 or upward, according to the requirements and wants of the community. The tax upon circulation has been reduced from 1 per cent annually to one-fourth of 1 per cent annually, thereby securing cheaper money to the people, for it is the people who in the end must pay all taxes that are imposed upon the banking institutions of the country. The banking institutions of the country, whether State or national, have as great an interest in the welfare and prosperity of the country as any of the people or the institutions of the country; they have always been among the first to respond to the wants and demands of the people. The banking institutions have always stood by the people in time of necessity.

Mr. HOLMAN. When?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. They have stood by the Government upon several occasions when the Government required their support.

Mr. HOLMAN. When was that?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. It was the banks in the darkest days of the sixties that held and sustained the financial credit of the country; and, within the last sixty days, they have again responded to the Government's demands and maintained the gold reserve of the Government. The assertion is frequently made upon this floor that national banks are making large and excessive profits, and more than can be made under State banks. The gentlemen making these statements are certainly misinformed as to the facts. In the city of Buffalo, which I have the honor in part to represent, we have but two national banks out of more than thirty banking institutions, and while the State banks do not issue a single dollar of currency, they can realize a greater profit upon their capital than the national banks. This is true of the banks in the State of New York, and I believe the same to be true in every State. State banks can receive a higher rate of interest than national banks, while keeping a very much less reserve.

Every question embraced in this bill is resolved into a practical question whether this Congress will authorize a safe, sound, and cheap system of banking, thus giving to the people an absolutely sure and safe circulating medium, and at the same time put it in reach of every community to establish banks with such capital as their wants may require, and also whether this Congress is willing to insert in its bonds just what every man knows the Government will do and just what it must do to maintain its credit throughout the world and to maintain its gold reserve—that it will pay its obligations in gold coin. We admit and we intend that these bonds shall be paid in gold, therefore after all that can be said we reach the simple question whether we shall insert in the bonds that declaration payable in gold, and thereby obtain a lower rate of interest for the benefit of the Government and for the people of the whole country, or stubbornly refuse and insist upon the word "coin," and thereby pay a higher rate of interest, and thereby tend to retard the business interests of the people and injure the credit of the Government.

Mr. LIVINGSTON and Mr. WILLIAMS of Massachusetts then rose.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I should be glad to answer, if I had time, any question which might be put to me by my effervescent financial friend.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains in opposition to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to be recognized to occupy that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this is the most important subject that will be reached in the consideration of the details of this bill. Gentlemen seem to have a fear that the insertion in our bonds of a promise to pay in gold will injure the credit of other bonds which are now payable in coin. In my judgment there is nothing in that argument. Everybody in this country believes that the Government of the United States will pay all its bonds in gold.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the people pay their debts in the same currency?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Government of the United States can secure the loan of money for about 1 per cent less interest if we promise to pay "in gold," than if we should promise to pay "in coin." Upon $100,000,000 of bonds this would be a saving of $1,000,000 a year, which in twenty years would amount to $20,000,000. If you are going to issue as large an amount of bonds as gentlemen on the other side say, $500,000,000, this saving would amount to $100,000,000 in twenty years. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, the insertion of this clause in our bonds will maintain the credit of this country throughout the world. Gentlemen here do not apprehend that the Government of the United States is to pass to a silver basis; but that feeling prevails throughout the money centers of the world. We can change that sentiment to-day by making the declaration in this bill that the Government will maintain the present standard of values. In order that our creditors everywhere may know that the faith of the Government will be kept, let this bill stand as it has been presented.

What is the purport of the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado? It is to pay in gold and silver without discrimination as to either metal. What does that mean? It changes, so far as this Government is concerned, all the obligations heretofore outstanding. The obligation heretofore was to pay in coin at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. If this amendment be adopted we compel the Secretary of the Treasury to pay these obligations one-half in gold coin and one-half in silver coin. The amendment provides that payment shall be made in gold and silver coin without discrimination; and that must mean, as I understand, that payment shall be made in equal proportions of the two metals. If that is not the meaning, I do not know what the proposition does mean. There are now to-day only 58,000,000 of silver dollars in the United States that are not covered by the silver certificates outstanding. It will be utterly impossible to pay the bonds of the United States one-half in silver. The silver now out is mainly in the shape of silver certificates, and is pledged for the payment of those silver certificates, and only 58,000,000 of other silver dollars are in circulation.

It is utterly impossible, therefore, to comply with the law in that respect, and I hope gentlemen of the committee will take the matter into their very serious consideration, and also the exigencies of the present time and the necessity for maintaining the credit of the country as it can only be maintained, by insisting that its obligations shall be paid in that coin that all the world recognizes as the existing standard of value.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Why is it impossible?

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. CURTIS of Kansas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment under the rule has expired.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BELL of Colorado, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 106.

Mr. BLAND. Has a quorum voted?

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum has voted.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 add:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is instructed and required to pay and discharge all such notes as are named in this section, when presented for redemption, one-half in the gold coin of the United States and one-half in the silver dollars of the coin of the United States."

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Chairman, while the question as to the payment of gold and silver has been propounded and considered in this discussion with reference to the bonds, there has been no proposition presented to the House, so far, similar to the one which is now offered, to redeem the Treasury notes.

On both sides of the House, by Democrats and Republicans, it has been charged that the Secretary of the Treasury has violated the law. He has been criticised for paying the obligations of the Government in gold when presented, and unmercifully criticised. These criticisms have been uttered in the cloakroom and upon the floor of the House; but no person has undertaken to formulate a proposition in the shape of law to instruct the Secretary of the Treasury as to the payment of the obligations which are presented in the current transactions of the Department.

The difficulty, I maintain, is not so much in the bonds which are to be issued, but it lies in the notes which are presented for payment to the Treasury of the United States—notes that are presented every day in the year. The question as to how these notes shall be paid will, if properly determined, be the solution of the question as to whether the run on the Treasury will be continued or averted.

Independently of the question as to whether the notes ought to be paid in gold or in silver, we are confronted to-day with a run upon the Treasury which is not a legitimate run, which is not a business run. It is not a run because of the lack of confidence in the ability of the Government to pay, but it is a run to effect a purpose independent of the settlement of the notes they present. Let me illustrate this by an anecdote. I had once a cow, and also had a man who took care of and milked the cow. A little girl came every day and pretended that she wanted to learn how to milk and interfered with the milking. Her excuse was that she did not want the milk itself, but simply the exercise, in order to learn how to milk, so as to qualify herself to become a milkmaid. The old man indulged her until one day he found that she had a cup under her cloak and that she took away each time that she left a quart of milk. He concluded then that it was not the process of milking that she desired to learn, but that her purpose in coming was to get the milk that she carried away, and so he stopped her. That is exactly the situation here now. It is not to redeem the notes outstanding, but to take the milk from the Treasury day by day in order to supply it to the banks of the country. It is that system which should be stopped, and stopped by legislation, and not by abusing the Secretary of the Treasury.

How many are there here who will vote against this proposition? This is bimetalism applied to existing conditions, made practical, and enacted into law. Let us pass this instruction or hereafter hold our peace in cloakroom criticism of that distinguished official.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some gentleman in opposition to the amendment if he desires to be heard.

Mr. HENDRIX. I simply desire to submit for the consideration of the gentleman from Texas who offers the amendment that it does not remedy the evil of which he complains. If an exporter wants to get gold, and he is paid one-half in gold and one-half in silver, when he goes to the Treasury he will simply exchange the silver which he gets for legal tenders, in the hands of somebody who is going to pay customs, and take them and get all the remainder of the gold that he needs.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, he has the privilege of using the silver to that extent at least.

Mr. HENDRIX. It simply puts a little obstruction in the way that does not accomplish the purpose the gentleman desires. There is no other important objection if this bill passes, that I can see, to the proposition, and I have no strenuous objections to make to it at all, because if the bill passes there will be no such question before the public, and the matter the gentleman has in mind will be of little importance.

[Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I have just asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUTCHESON] whether it is his intent and the effect of this amendment to permit this payment in redemption of greenbacks to be one-half of it in gold coin and the other half in silver coin, or whether he proposes that that redemption shall be in silver certificates as well as silver coin. He informs me that it is his intent to put the silver coin into circulation, and that it is not his intent and will not be the effect of the amendment to permit this payment in redemption of greenbacks, to the extent even of one-half, to be in silver certificates. That being the case, sir, I wish to call the attention of this House and of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the Treasury is absolutely without silver coin to carry out the amendment he proposes.

Several MEMBERS. Let us get more silver, then.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HUTCHESON. When you pay the $180,000,000 of Sherman notes, will not there be the silver, and will you not have in addition to that the seigniorage?

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman and I will agree that, so far as the Sherman certificates are concerned, there is silver now in the Treasury, which, upon the deposit of the certificates for redemption, could be used, and in addition there is the seigniorage, which might be developed. But the gentleman must admit, because he is too well posted a gentleman not to know the facts, that as to the $346,000,000 greenbacks outstanding, of which only about $53,000,000 are owned by the Treasury to-day, there are nearly $300,000,000 greenbacks for which there is no free silver in the Treasury.

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Has not the Secretary of the Treasury the option of coining all the silver he wishes?

Mr. WARNER. He has discretion given only to coin that which is required for the purpose of redeeming the certificates issued and the Sherman notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, and there is no discretion which would permit him to coin a single dollar of that trust so held for the purpose of carrying out the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman will find that his statement is somewhat incorrect. In the main his statement is correct; but there would arise in the coinage the seigniorage, and that could be used for ordinary operations.

Mr. WARNER. Even then we have the gentleman from Texas proposing to put into immediate effect a law or order by which nearly $300,000,000 of greenbacks could be presented and the silver demanded to one-half their amount, when the total amount of possible seigniorage is only about $60,000,000, which it would take three or four years to coin. If that is a businesslike proposition then I am mistaken.

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Another word. The coinage of silver in the Treasury is at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The suspension of it is at his discretion, and he can restore it at his discretion.

Mr. WARNER. There is no right of coinage given to the Secretary of the Treasury, except for the purpose of redeeming the paper outstanding against the bullion; and the only margin that would be left over to meet the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Texas, and supported by the gentleman from Wyoming, is the small amount which might be developed as seigniorage, and that would amount to about $55,000,000 when developed. The proposition, whatever might be its policy, is absolutely incapable of being carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall offer at the proper time an amendment to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I understand that it is not in order just now, but I shall ask for recognition as soon as it is in order. It reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as surrendering the right of the Government of the United States to pay all coin bonds outstanding in gold or silver coin at the option of the Government, as declared by the following joint resolution, adopted in 1874 by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, to wit:

"That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said act of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 42½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor."

This amendment simply reenacts the Matthews resolution, as it is called, or rather expressly declares that the United States still adheres to the doctrine set forth in that resolution. If we are in favor of bimetalism we must sustain the doctrine set forth in the Matthews resolution, for it simply declares, in substance, that the word "coin," when used in Government bonds, means standard gold and silver coin of the United States.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the recent vote taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL]. Our friends on the Republican side of the House have been telling us that they want the bonds payable in coin; that they are willing to authorize the President to issue bonds, but are not willing to vote for gold bonds. I want the RECORD to show—because the vote was not taken by yeas and nays—that when Mr. BELL's proposition came before us—it was simply to strike out the word "gold" and make the bonds payable in gold or silver—there were not 10 Republicans who rose in support of Mr. BELL's proposition, and that all the other members who rose on the Republican side, including the distinguished gentleman from Maine, who proposes the substitute providing for coin bonds, voted against Mr. BELL's proposition.

I also want to call attention to the fact that the ten, or less than ten, Republicans who voted for Mr. Bell's proposition are free-silver Republicans who live in the Northwest; and if the gentlemen on the other side find any satisfaction in looking at the division in the Democratic party on the silver question, I ask them to turn their gaze upon their own party, and remember that in their party they have a few free-silver Republicans who can never indorse the policy of the Republican party in favor of a gold standard. We have been divided upon this side, because the West and the South will not consent to the establishment of a single gold standard.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Which side do you mean?

Mr. BRYAN. Our side. I am speaking of the Democratic side now.

Mr. DINGLEY. You are on the Democratic side, are you?

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman from California is one of the few Republicans who voted for Mr. BELL's proposition, and he has no more sympathy with the Republican party on the financial question than he has with the Eastern Democrats on the financial question.

Mr. Chairman, this question is one which will not be decided by parties. The Democratic party and the Republican party are rent in twain upon the money question; but the Republican party has a larger majority in favor of the gold basis than the Democratic party has ever shown on this floor. I believe the great majority of the Democratic party believe in bimetalism and will not submit to a gold standard. If the Republicans who voted for Mr. BELL's proposition expect to indorse the Republican party in its financial policy they will have to betray the people whom they represent.

I also call attention to the fact that west of the Missouri River not a single gold standard Republican has been elected to the Senate this year.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I want to ask the gentleman if the proposition made by the Republican leader is not better than the proposition made by the Democratic party and its Administration?

Mr. BRYAN. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. BOWERS of California. They go for gold, and the Republican leader will not go for gold. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRYAN. No, sir; his proposition is not better. The only difference is that Mr. Cleveland's proposition comes before us open and aboveboard, while your leader brings his proposition here behind a mask. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOWERS of California. He brings a proposition to prevent the President from issuing gold bonds.

Mr. BRYAN. When the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who offers a pretended "coin" proposition, had a chance to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] and put that provision in the Springer bill, he refused to do it and voted against it. Now, let him stand before the country and convince the people, if he can, that he is sincere in his desire for bimetalism. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I am opposed to it because I do not believe that it is in the interest of silver money. I am, I think, as firm a friend of silver as any man on this floor; but I take the position I do because I believe that is the only way to preserve the parity of the two coins. Gentlemen talk of going to the single gold standard as though we were now on a bimetallic standard. In fact, sir, we are upon the single gold standard and have been for fifty years, and there is not a country to-day where silver coin is at par that it is not maintained at par simply because the governments of those countries maintain the gold standard. There is not a country to-day where silver has full legal-tender value and free coinage, where silver is worth any more coined than it is worth uncoined.

In the commercial world there is no standard except the gold standard. Now, the Government of the United States has undertaken to maintain that standard, and to maintain every character of its currency and coin at that standard, and the only way the Government can do that is to pay and redeem every obligation it issues in gold. So long as it does that the silver coin and the gold coin will go arm in arm at a parity; but the very moment the Government of the United States refuses to make its payments in gold and forces silver upon its creditors that moment there will be separation between the gold and the silver coin of this country, and the silver coin will be worth no more than it is worth in Mexico to-day, where you can buy two silver dollars, each containing a greater quantity of metal than ours, for one American silver dollar.

Gentlemen talk about cotton and other things, but that has nothing to do with this question. If the Government of the United States, the people of the United States, want to maintain a fixed standard of value they must maintain the gold standard. It is the only standard of value in the world to-day. There is no other. There is no such thing as a double standard. There is nothing but the single gold standard. I am in favor of maintaining our silver at that standard and of maintaining our paper currency at that standard, and unless we do maintain it at that standard its legal-tender quality will prove to be of no value so far as its commercial uses and value are concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He says that the silver and gold coins will part company as soon as the Government refuses to pay its obligations in gold. Will they not part company also whenever the Government refuses to receive silver—when it repudiates it?

Mr. BYNUM. That is a question that I would like to enter upon, but I can not do so in five minutes. I do not believe that if we should to-day make the customs dues all payable in gold would go to a premium. The Government of the United States, the United States Treasury, is the basis of our confidence. It supports the entire monetary system of our country, and if that system is to be supported on a gold basis the Government must get the gold and must pay gold. So long as it does that all our money will remain at a parity, but when it fails or refuses to do so we will be confronted with a crisis too serious to contemplate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The time for debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the pending amendment.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Redemption of the Treasury notes issued in pursuance of the act of July 4, 1890, shall be made as provided for in section 3 of said act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined, as fast as possible, the silver bullion purchased by the provisions of said act into legal-tender standard silver dollars in pursuance of section 3 aforesaid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 add the following:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is instructed and required to pay and discharge all such notes as are named in this section when presented for redemption, one-half in gold coin of the United States and one-half in silver dollars of the coin of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury to carry out this bill."

Mr. SPRINGER. As the latter part of the amendment to the amendment is subject to a point of order, the whole proposition is out of order. It is a proposition for the coinage of silver bullion in the Treasury of the United States, and is not germane to a simple proposition that the greenbacks shall be paid one-half in gold and the other half in silver.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, this whole bill proceeds upon the idea that these Treasury notes issued for the purchase of bullion shall be paid in gold, and under the bill bonds are to be sold in order to get the gold for that purpose. My amendment provides that these notes shall be paid, redeemed, and canceled as now provided by law. Inasmuch as the original amendment deals with the same subject-matter, of course the amendment to the amendment is germane. It can not be possible to rule it out because it does not provide for the sale of bonds to accomplish a certain purpose. We are at liberty to provide a different method for the payment of these notes, and in doing so the amendment to the amendment deals with the same subject-matter as the amendment itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct that the amendment to the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Section 7 of the act referred to provides that this bullion shall be coined for the redemption of these notes. My amendment provides simply for the execution of the present law on that subject. It deals with the same subject-matter as the bill itself and the same subject-matter as the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas relates to the redemption of notes only under the first section of the bill under consideration. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, it seems, relates to the redemption of Treasury notes issued pursuant to the act of July 14, 1890.

Mr. BLAND. The first section of the bill refers to Treasury notes and greenbacks—both. In my amendment I leave out the provision for greenbacks, as I have the right to do. My amendment proposes to substitute a different method of redemption. It proposes to require the execution of the existing law in regard to redemption, instead of resorting to a sale of bonds. I repeat that my amendment is germane to the objects and purposes of the bill and of the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman's amendment provides for the coinage of the bullion in the Treasury, a subject entirely foreign to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, which simply provides for the payment of greenbacks, one-half in gold and the other half in silver. The proposition to coin bullion is entirely foreign to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLAND. Why can we not coin bullion for this purpose as well as issue bonds?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas does provide for the coinage of the bullion in the Treasury. It closes with these words: "And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury to carry out this bill."

Mr. BLAND. I offer my amendment as a substitute.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I would like to be heard just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BLAND)—ayes 101, noes 124.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAND and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 114.

So the amendment of Mr. BLAND to the amendment of Mr. HUTCHESON was rejected.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. HUTCHESON; and there were on a division (called for by Mr. HUTCHESON)—ayes 99, noes 124.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. Before it is read I wish to say that it in no sense changes the bill as now before us, except that it enlarges to a certain extent the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read as follows, the words proposed to be inserted by Mr. WALKER being inclosed in brackets:

Be it enacted, etc., That [in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry into effect the provisions of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," and the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereof and to provide for any deficiency in the revenues of the Treasury of the United States to meet the appropriations made by Congress and appropriations made by existing law] and to redeem and retire United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," [the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury conferred in the above-mentioned acts be, and are hereby, enlarged so as to authorize him to issue from time to time, for a period of four years, bonds as described in such acts, in denominations of $20 and $50 and multiples of said sums, respectively, payable at the pleasure of the United States after one year from the date of their issue and upon the expiration of three years, or bonds payable after three years and upon the expiration of seven years, or bonds due on a certain day named therein within three years from the date of their issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may elect, such bonds to bear interest at such rate per annum as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine, and he is hereby authorized to issue and sell, for the period of four years,] at not less than par, in gold, except as provided in section 2 of this act, United States registered or coupon bonds, in denominations of twenty dollars and fifty dollars and multiples of said sums, respectively, payable at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue and due fifty years after date in gold coin of the United States of the present weight and fineness, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, payable quarterly in like coin; and such bonds and the interest thereon shall have like qualities, privileges, and exemptions as the bonds issued under the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt." Such bonds may be sold and delivered in the United States, or elsewhere, as may be deemed most advantageous to the interests of the Government.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, then follows the gold-bond provision of the bill. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that these amendments are printed and can be had by the members on applying to one of the messengers.

What I desire is that we shall pass the very best bill possible, and I most earnestly desire to vote for it. If these amendments are adopted the Secretary of the Treasury has precisely the powers that exist in the bill as it stands before this committee plus the power of issuing three or four different kinds of and additional bonds. Mr. Chairman, my point is that the Treasurer of the United States, in the present exigency, ought to have as large a discretion in exercising his power to issue bonds as it is possible to give him, and fully as large powers as the treasurer of any large corporation of this country would have, under similar circumstances, in order that he may secure money to meet the obligations outstanding at the least possible expense to the people.

I know that there are several—I do not know how many—but I do know that several, including myself, can not vote for the bill if it confines the Secretary of the Treasury to issuing one bond only, and that payable, principal and interest, in gold. My object in the amendment is to enlarge the powers conferred upon him in the bill, so that he may issue any of these different kinds of bonds to meet the exigencies as they may arise and fix the rate of interest himself. Give him abundant powers, and if the Administration finds it to be for the interest of the people, and will take the responsibility of issuing the gold bonds provided for in the bill, let it do so. I am, therefore, for giving the Administration, in the present exigency, all the powers demanded, or that he may have any occasion to exercise.

They have no right to ask me or to ask the members of this House—and I hope that there is not a Republican who will vote that way—to shut up the Secretary of the Treasury to just one bond, and that a gold bond or certificate running for ten years. I do not propose in my amendment to strike one word from the bill, but to add to and improve it.

Mr. Chairman, what is the present condition of affairs in the Treasury? First, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue a 5 per cent ten-year bond. He may issue a 4 per cent thirty-year bond. Now, the Secretary asks us to grant him the right to issue a 3 per cent fifty-year bond that is to be a gold bond. We have reduced it to ten years.

Furthermore, the amendment provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not have the right to exercise the power beyond four years. I want to say to the House that it is contrary to all precedents of the English-speaking race in any government to give the great Secretary of the Treasury the power over the purse strings of the nation and the power of unlimited taxation of the people, for that is practically what it amounts to, for more than twelve months. The power to sell bonds is the power of taxation, and I am unwilling to give any President or any Secretary of the Treasury the power of taxation for a longer period than four years.

Democrats, are you willing to vote that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power forever over the purse strings of the nation and to impose taxes upon the people?

Mr. COOMBS. Will you submit to an amendment—instead of calling them bonds to call the proposed issue here certificates of indebtedness?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly. I have no objection to that. Call them what you will. But I hope no Republican will vote to shut the Secretary up to just these gold ten-year bonds.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I want to bring to the attention of the House that it is far wiser and far more economical to issue a 6 per cent bond payable after two years, due in ten years, taken by the banks or the masses of the people in this country, than a bond even at 2 per cent payable, interest and principal, to foreigners.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALKER. I should like to have a few minutes longer.

[Mr. HOLMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my strong approval of the amendment proposed by my colleague from Massachusetts, although perhaps the wording of it could be judiciously altered. But there are two principles in it which I wish, in continuation of my remarks of yesterday, to impress upon this committee if possible. In the first place, the amendment of my colleague from Massachusetts suggests greater freedom and greater discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury in issuing gold bonds, in issuing bonds in a form that may be popular, and I desire to reiterate the idea with which I started yesterday, and in the expression of which I was cut off, that if you have executive officers in great Departments of the Government, you must allow them discretion, you must allow them to administer the laws, not according to a rigid line drawn by the legislative body, not by what may be laid down in advance, but according as men actually grappling with the executive situation may see necessary.

Why, sir, there is not a Secretary of the Treasury that we ever had that has not learned something by being in his office, and has not found out that the ideas with which he started must be corrected and enlarged. The greatest Secretary of the Treasury we have had since the war, Hugh McCulloch, was carrying on the canceling of the greenbacks in the most judicious manner, and that process was cut off by a hard and fast rule that they should be reissued.

I call upon this committee to recognize what the executive department is; and if we are to have our finances properly managed let the men who have the management of them have something like free swing, and do not, as legislators, usurp the place of the executive.

Moreover, this issue which is suggested is such an issue as the people can take up. These bonds are to be in forms that will be a profitable and favorite investment for small investors all over the country. I remember well, Mr. Chairman, in 1892, when the head of the Rothschilds told me with his own lips that we could not carry on the war because the European bankers would not touch our loan when it was at 48. I replied to him, "Then, Sir Anthony, we will take the loan up ourselves." And we did it, and we carried through that first loan at a time when the European bankers were not willing to take at 48 what they were willing to take afterwards at 104; and I delight to see that my colleague from Massachusetts carries out the idea of executive discretion and a popular loan.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I have very serious question in my mind as to the necessity of the legislation that is proposed here. It seems to me that an issue of bonds such as contemplated by this bill should be resorted to as a last extreme, and only in the last extreme would I vote for it. I am opposed to burdening our people for the next fifty years with an unlimited issue of gold bonds, such as proposed, if that step can possibly be avoided; and when we come to consider the difficulty which presents itself to the Government to-day, and the possible remedies that may be applied to meet that difficulty, I am the more convinced that if this measure had not the prestige arising from the support of the distinguished gentleman who occupies the executive chair of the nation, it would receive no countenance in this House to-day.

As has been said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], the problem is not one of such a serious character that the people of this country should go into hysterics over it. The fact that our gold reserve has been gradually decreased does not imply that the nation is at all bankrupt; and if there is any remedy that can be applied other than the drastic one here proposed—to issue bonds, not merely bonds, but gold bonds, making a discrimination against the other bonds that have been issued—if there is any other remedy, I say, I certainly would vote for it in preference to this.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is an absolute necessity that we should make some provision for the immediate future. In twelve years from to-day we will be called upon to meet the first installment of bonds that have been issued in the past; and to-day we have no provision for that exigency. If I were permitted to have my way I would wipe out all reference in this measure to the issue of bonds, and I would provide that the revenues of this country from customs should be paid in a certain proportion in gold. I would provide that at least one half of the customs revenues should be paid in gold or gold certificates and the other half in silver coin of the United States or silver certificates. But, sir, that would not meet the difficulty entirely as it presents itself to us because of the existence of the greenbacks.

Now, while I appreciate the honor in which the greenback is held by a very large portion of the population of our country, I would have no hesitation whatever in retiring the greenback if it becomes obnoxious to the best interests of the people; and I am convinced that the situation to-day is such that the unqualified influence of the greenback is detrimental to our welfare.

By requiring one-half of our customs dues to be paid in gold, or its equivalent, we would secure a gold supply for the Treasury which would, in a comparatively few months, render assaults upon the reserve abortive, so far as the integrity of that reserve is concerned. The gold so secured could be retained until the sum of the reserve was at a figure that would relieve the most timid of any apprehension of the purpose of the Government to meet fairly and fully its every obligation. This, however, as I have suggested, would not suffice without additional legislation looking to the imposition of a check upon the facile methods that now exist of depleting the Treasury's stock of gold.

We have now no guaranty that the raids upon the gold in the Treasury, which for the past few months have been systematically made through the instrumentality of the greenback, will not be continued indefinitely. So long as the present supply of those legal-tender notes is maintained, and so long as the Treasury adheres to the policy of redeeming them in gold when presented and then reissuing them, just so long will they continue to be a menace to the integrity of our gold reserve. To lessen the volume of their circulation both by destroying them when redeemed, and by imposing new functions upon them, and upon them exclusively, whereby they will be withdrawn from circulation without affecting their value in the hands of the holder, would, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, be the next logical step toward the maintenance of an impregnable gold reserve. The eleventh section of the substitute for the pending bill, which was proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox], provides for the cancellation of all such legal tenders of the denomination of $10 and under, and for the issuance in lieu thereof of silver dollars equal in amount to the canceled notes.

This would secure, Mr. Chairman, a most desirable reduction of the volume of circulating greenbacks, and at the same time would preserve the volume of currency at its present figure, and it surely will not be contended that such an issue of silver coin would be dangerous to the equilibrium or parity of our gold and silver dollars.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if the two points I have referred to were enacted into law, the alleged necessity for the issuance of bonds would no longer exist. I am not wedded to the ideas that I have thus endeavored to outline to the committee, and am ready to admit that a more efficacious plan of meeting the existing emergency without the issue of bonds may be devised; but what I do insist on, and what I would like to impress upon the committee, is that a gold bond issue is not the only corrective in sight for existing financial ills, and that any other which is adequate to the emergency is preferable to such an extraordinary measure.

Were I convinced, Mr. Chairman, that gold bonds, diamond bonds, or any other special kind of bonds were our only recourse against impending national insolvency, I would, despite what I believe to be a just appreciation on my part of the train of evils that must in time develop from such legislation, vote for their issuance. But, sir, I believe that we have within our reach legislative resources which, if put into operation, would promptly and conservatively meet the emergency in the banking department of the national Treasury without jarring our financial system, without imposing any additional burden upon the people of the United States. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, with the assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury that existing revenue legislation will in a short time suffice, and more than suffice, to cover all of our expenditures, and I have no apprehension that an excess of expenditures will long continue to be a disturbing factor in our national financial problem.

For these reasons, necessarily imperfectly outlined in the brief time at my command, I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the pending bill and shall cast my vote against it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I send up and ask to have read a very brief extract from the New York Journal of Commerce of February 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

WHY MUST WE BORROW?

1. Because, while up to 1892 the banks supplied all gold required for export, since July 1, 1892, they have drawn for that purpose from the Treasury two hundred and thirty millions.

2. Because, within the same period, the banks have withheld gold from customs payments which, under their former usage, would have given the Treasury a gold income amounting to two hundred and seventy-three millions.

3. Because, within the last thirty-one months, the Treasury has suffered from this policy of the banks a direct and indirect artificial gold depletion of five hundred and three millions.

Here, in a nutshell, is the explanation of the condition of the Treasury and of the causes compelling its virtually needless loans.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the proposition in this bill, in time of profound peace, is to issue bonds to the amount of $500,000,000, according to the recommendation of the President, and while I would be willing to accord to the present Secretary of the Treasury all the discretion that could be vested in any one man, and while I would be willing to trust the present President of the United States, I am not willing to clothe any man, whether he be President or whether he be Secretary of the Treasury, with the power to issue bonds to an unlimited amount, payable, principal and interest, in gold. Why should we? How will it relieve the present condition of the Treasury Department to do that?

What you want now is to bring into the Treasury a sufficient amount to meet the expenditures that daily and monthly accrue against the Government. You propose in time of profound peace to add to the indebtedness of the country $500,000,000. Surely, Mr. Chairman, no Democrat can insist, and no patriot can insist, that he is willing to load the people with an additional debt of $500,000,000 at such a time of tranquillity. We are about to reach a period when the last of the national debt that was created during the war will be paid. In 1909, with the exception of the $100,000,000 of bonds issued by this Administration, the last dollar of the war debt will have been liquidated and removed as a burden upon the people. Now, the Democratic party, in the majority of this House, propose to add $500,000,000 to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If my colleague will allow me, I will say that it is not the Democratic party, but a minority of the Democratic party.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I accept the amendment of my friend. It is the minority of the party and not the majority; and it is in contravention of the principles we have always declared for.

[Mr. LANE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will distinctly understand that the amendment proposed by me involves only the striking out of the word "that" in the first line of the bill in order that it may read properly. I do not strike anything out of the bill. I simply add to the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury by giving him, for the term of four years, all of the powers that the treasurer of any corporation has that is successfully managed. I leave the Secretary of the Treasury the power to fix his own rate of interest even and do anything else that is necessary to be done to maintain gold payments and to keep all kinds of our money on a parity in order that we may take this loan at home to as great an extent as possible.

Mr. Chairman, if the loans of France were held in any other country, France would be beggared by the interest account, but in fact she is not made poorer by even the smallest fraction by her enormous taxation for her great debt, because it all goes back into the pockets of the French people. I want this loan made so as to be taken at home, if we can possibly take it, but if we can not keep all our money at a parity without doing so, then let the Secretary of the Treasury exercise his discretion and take the responsibility for making a foreign gold loan.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Does not your amendment repeal the power that the Secretary of the Treasury now has to issue bonds at all after the lapse of the four years? Do you not limit his power in that respect?

Mr. WALKER. I limit his power to issue bonds under this bill, but other bonds he may issue as now. My amendment repeals no law whatever, and strikes nothing out of the bill as it now stands.

Mr. HENDRIX. Then, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman, by his amendment, confers plenary borrowing power upon the Secretary of the Treasury to get money at the market rate as he best can for the purposes of the Treasury; the same power that the comptroller of the city of New York has; the power that the treasurer of every State in the Union and the supervisors of every town have now by law.

Mr. WALKER. That is it exactly.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman is mistaken. They do not have that power.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; the gentleman's law is wrong.

Mr. WALKER. We ought to give the Secretary of the Treasury what he asks, and much more, as I propose, and there are scores in this House who will not vote for this bill as it stands, or unless you add amendments like these proposed. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say, unless some gentleman desires to ask me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, in order to have the bill read right it will be necessary to divide the amendment. My first motion is to strike out the word "that" in line 3 and insert the words which I will ask to have read at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry into effect the provisions of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," and the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereof, and to provide for any deficiency in the revenues of the Treasury of the United States to meet the appropriations made by Congress and appropriations made by existing law, and to enable the Secretary, etc.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. WALKER. I ask for a division.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, yeas 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALKER. That is all right, Mr. Chairman. I withdraw the remainder of the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Maine in order that it may be pending.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as surrendering the right of the Government of the United States to pay all coin bonds outstanding in gold or silver coin at the option of the Government, as declared by the following joint resolution, adopted in 1873 by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, to wit:

That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said act of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coin as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditors.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the substitute of the gentleman from Maine, and also that the Committee of the Whole has not completed the original bill, and that amendments to that are first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole not having completed the text of the bill, the question which embarrasses the Chair is whether this amendment can be offered to be considered as pending to a substitute before the original text is completed.

Mr. BRYAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will gladly hear the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] on that question.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, the rule provides that a substitute may be offered and be pending, and it is not necessary that we should wait until we are through with the original bill before the substitute can be offered. Now, the right to offer a substitute at any time and have it pending carries with it the right to offer an amendment (which is allowed under the rule) and to have that amendment pending also, for the purpose of perfecting the substitute. I recognize that we are not allowed to discuss this amendment, but I submit that it stands in the same parliamentary attitude as the substitute and is to be regarded as pending as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This special order changes the ordinary rule and is to be strictly construed. Now, if as conceded by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] we can not discuss this amendment, it can not be offered. The substitute has been offered under an express provision of the rule, that this is the only way in which it gets any parliamentary standing. Clearly the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no provision in the rule for the offering of any amendment except to the original bill. There is a provision for the offering of two substitutes, but no provision for an amendment to a substitute.

Mr. BRYAN. But the rule does not exclude amendments to the substitute.

Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] hold that the substitute may not be amended?

Mr. PAYNE. Not at any rate until the consideration of the bill itself is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been inclined to construe this rule (which is a very rigid and unusual one) as liberally as possible. He has desired so far as he could to give an opportunity for a vote upon every question and every phase of every question, if germane to the main proposition. The Chair thinks that when the substitute was offered any gentleman could have offered an amendment to it, or given notice that he would do so.

Mr. BRYAN. I did give such notice a while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Nebraska having done that, it seems to the Chair that he has taken care of his rights so far as he could in offering the amendment to the substitute. The Chair is inclined to hold that the amendment is in order, and will so hold.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 13, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Sec. 13. That the bonds which may be issued under any existing law shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 3 per cent per annum. They shall be in denominations to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be due and payable at time or times to be fixed by him, not to exceed twenty years. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to confer authority on the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds."

Mr. TERRY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] desires, as the Chair understands, to offer an amendment to the text of the bill. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a point of order against the amendment just read. I do not know where it comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama desires to offer it as an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. One moment. There will be no trouble—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have only three minutes for the further consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole, and I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must hear gentlemen on the point of order. If the point of order is out of the way the Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. COX. I want the House to understand—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair admits the amendment which has been read as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. Which amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB]. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], who offers an amendment to the text, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 11 of the substitute of Mr. Cox—

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order, because there can be no other amendment offered to that substitute.

Mr. TERRY. Then I offer this as an amendment to the text of the bill—to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment to section 1.

Mr. TRACEY. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Arkansas to offer an amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not make a point of order until the amendment is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 1 the following:

"And to more fully carry out the purpose of this act by having in circulation a sufficient amount of the money of ultimate redemption with which it may be possible to redeem the bank notes provided for in this act, and also the United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, the Secretary of the Treasury on the presentation by any State of the United States, or its agent thereunto duly authorized by the legislature or chief executive, of the silver bullion required for that purpose, shall coin the same into silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy, standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837—"

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order.

The Clerk (continuing the reading):

"Provided, That there shall not be coined for any State in any one year a greater number of such dollars than the number—"

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the time has arrived when, under the rule, the committee must rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I wish to submit the additional point of order, if it be necessary to do so, that this amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that the time has arrived when, under the order of the House, the committee must rise. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the committee will rise.

Mr. TRACEY. That was the point of order I sought to make before the reading began.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not pending at all.

Mr. SNODGRASS. It has been read.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; only a part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8705), had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, and also with two pending substitutes for the bill; one offered by Mr. REED of Maine, to which an amendment was offered by Mr. BRYAN of Nebraska, and the other substitute by Mr. COX of Tennessee, to which an amendment had been offered by Mr. COBB of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House heretofore made, the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to its passage.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. I have an amendment pending, offered to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, the reading of which had been commenced and nearly concluded when the committee rose. I wish to ask what becomes of that amendment—whether it is to be voted upon in the House as a pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the amendment had not been read.

Mr. TERRY. The reading of it had been nearly concluded; and if it be held that the reading of it, having been interrupted in that way, is sufficient cause to rule it out altogether, then any amendment might be defeated, when the time is limited, by members jumping up and interrupting the reading.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole did not report to the House the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas as a pending amendment.

Mr. TERRY. But it should have been reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that it had not been read, except in part. It could not, therefore, have been reported, not being before the committee.

Mr. TERRY. It had not been entirely read, although the reading was nearly concluded. I raise the point of order that under the facts stated the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole ought to have reported the amendment to the House.

The SPEAKER. The amendment was not before the committee if it had not been read.

Mr. TERRY. The reading had progressed nearly to the end.

The SPEAKER. But the time had elapsed before the reading was concluded; hence the amendment was not properly before the committee.

Mr. TERRY. If that is the rule any amendment can be defeated by members preventing the Clerk, by various interruptions, from concluding the reading of a paper.

The SPEAKER. If offered so near the time when the vote must be taken, that is probably true.

The vote will be first taken on the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and if there be no desire for a separate vote on the amendments the Chair will submit the vote upon them all in gross.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let us have separate votes.

Mr. BRYAN. I would like a separate vote on the amendment reducing the taxation from 1 per cent to one-fourth of 1 per cent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a separate vote on all of the amendments, which covers that. The Clerk will report the several amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 25, insert the following proviso:
"Provided, That such amount of said bonds, of the denominations of $20, $50, and $100, as can be disposed of in that manner shall be placed for sale at such national banks as the Secretary of the Treasury shall select, the banks so selected to give bond, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the security of the proceeds of said sale."

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not the first amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROSIUS) there were—ayes 152, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 13, after the word "payable," insert "at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue, and due."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2, line 9, section 2, insert:
"Provided, That the amount of such United States notes which may be canceled and retired shall not exceed in the aggregate an amount equal to the additional circulation taken out by the national banks after the passage of this act."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 187, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, as follows:

On page 3, strike out the following language, commencing in line 4 after the word "same":
"But this provision shall not apply to any bonds now outstanding bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent only."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, as follows:

On page 3, line 6, insert the following:
"And in lieu of all existing taxes every association shall pay to the Treasury of the United States in the months of January and July a duty of one-eighth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of the notes issued to it by the Comptroller of the Currency. And banks with a capital of not less than $20,000 may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed 6,000 inhabitants."

Mr. BRYAN. I call for a division of those two propositions.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They were voted upon separately in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. An amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole as a single amendment can not be divided.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 200, noes 41.

Mr. BRYAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 24 members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, what was known as section 4 and stricken out by the committee is left in by the Committee of the Whole, being the following language:

"Sec. 4. That hereafter no national bank notes of a less denomination than $10 shall be issued, and as rapidly as such notes of denominations less than $10 shall be received into the Treasury, otherwise than for redemption and retirement, they shall be canceled, and an equal amount of notes of like character, but in denominations of $10 and multiples thereof, shall be issued in their places. All silver certificates now outstanding, in denominations larger than $10, shall, when received into the Treasury of the United States, be retired and canceled, and silver certificates in denominations less than $10 shall be issued in their stead."

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not changed. The amendment reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency was not agreed to. Consequently this is not an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment that the Committee of the Whole agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 4, strike out the words "in gold coin only" and insert "one-half in gold coin and one-half in silver coin."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 169, noes 35.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, as follows:

On page 4, line 5, after the word "gold," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "coin;" so that it will read:

"Shall be paid in gold coin, silver coin, Treasury notes," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, strike out what is known as section 4 in the Springer bill, in the following language:

"Sec. 4. That from and after July 1, 1895, 10 per cent of the cash reserve required by law shall be kept in coin or coin certificates, and not less than half of such coin or coin certificates shall be in gold coin or gold certificates, and that such cash reserve required by law shall be kept in coin or coin certificates in amounts increased by 10 per cent of the whole cash reserve required to be kept by law on and after the first day of each quarter of the calendar year, until the whole cash reserve shall be in coin or coin certificates; and not less than one-half of such cash reserve shall be at all times in gold coin or gold certificates."

Mr. SPRINGER. An amendment proposing to insert that section was reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but was not agreed to by the Committee of the Whole, and therefore it is not a part of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the next amendment agreed to by the Committee of the Whole.

The clerk read as follows:

On page 4, in section 6, insert the following after the word "that:"

So much of all laws and parts of laws as limit the amount of lawful money which may be deposited during any calendar month for the purpose of withdrawing national bank circulation, or prohibit any national banking association from receiving any increase of its circulation during the period of six months from the time it shall have made any deposit of lawful money for the purpose of withdrawing its circulation, and also so much of.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 149, noes 60.

Mr. BRYAN. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 18 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the motion.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the amendments which were acted upon in the Committee of the Whole. Now, there are two substitutes pending. The Clerk will first report the substitute that was first offered.

Mr. REED. The understanding was that the substitute which I offered was to be voted for second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. REED. The understanding was that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox] was to be voted on first.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order. It is impossible to hear the gentleman on account of the confusion in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that it was agreed that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox] should be voted upon first. Of course the Chair will carry out any agreement.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Which is reported by the Committee of the Whole as having been introduced first?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine states that it was understood that the vote should first be taken on the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there any question about that? The Clerk will report it.

Mr. COX. There was no such understanding made by me with any man upon this floor.

Mr. REED. I do not claim that.

Mr. COX. I declined to do it; and the gentleman from Maine knows that he was working to get his proposition passed over until my substitute was voted on, and that I declined to do it.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Tennessee is perfectly correct in stating that I had no understanding with him. I had no understanding with him. I did not claim that I had.

Mr. COX. I had no understanding—

Mr. REED. That perhaps surpasses the bounds of propriety.

Mr. COX. But it does not pass the bounds of truth.

Mr. REED. I understand at least I may be permitted to say to the House that I had the understanding with the Chair that my amendment was to be put in such fashion as to be voted on second.

Mr. SNODGRASS. What right had the Chair to make any such understanding?

Mr. REED. That is the understanding I had when the proposition was made. It was the understanding that was to be regarded as being made in the proceedings from the first to the last; but I do not know what difference it would make to maneuver in this matter. It is the proposition presented by this side of the House, and would, therefore, be entitled to the superior place, according to the ordinary courtesy, especially when we are engaged in "freeing ourselves from the tyranny of preconceived opinion." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, one word. There was no agreement made. No man on this floor will rise and say that such an agreement was made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Regular order.

Mr. REED. Then, if the gentleman's substitute was offered second, that is all the more reason why it should be voted on first.

Mr. COX. You wanted to get me to offer mine first, and I wanted to get you to offer your proposition first. That I did, and I got you into that hole.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the point of order I desire to call the attention of the Chair to what occurred.

Mr. COX. What side are you on now?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Maine had a right to assume that there was an understanding from the fact that he had stated that. I find in the RECORD he says:

Mr. REED. I desire to know the time when the substitutes shall be put in. I desire to offer a substitute which I had read to the House, to be voted on after the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER (reading):

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought, if there be no objection, the committee amendments should be first disposed of.

And then we proceeded to other business.

Mr. COX. That does not tell it all. I understand you very well.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The Chair asked him if he offered his substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I stated the House proceeded to other business.

Several MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. SPRINGER (reading):

Mr. BLAND. I call for the reading of the first section, so that I may offer an amendment.

Then one whole column comes in there in regard to the amendments to the bill. Mr. BLAND stated he wanted to offer his amendment, and at the bottom of the first column are these words:

Mr. REED. Then my substitute has been printed in the RECORD and is pending; and the gentleman from Tennessee offers his first and it would be voted on, and then mine would be voted on.

Mr. COX. I stated that I would offer a substitute for the bill, which was printed in the RECORD. The gentleman from Maine stated that he would offer a substitute for the bill, which was printed in the RECORD. After that I stated that I would offer a substitute. Now, I desire that the gentleman follow the course of procedure and offer his substitute.

Mr. COX. And he offered his first.

Mr. SPRINGER (continuing reading):

Mr. REED. I have offered it.

Mr. COX. Now, then, as I understand the gentleman's substitute is offered under the rule, I offer an additional substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. COX. That is it. Read on.

Mr. SPRINGER (continuing to read):

Mr. REED. That will be voted on first. [After a pause.] I do not care; there is no use of maneuvering about a thing of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee has been read and published in the RECORD.

Mr. COX. It has been published in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now announce to the committee that under the rule the two substitutes are now pending, one offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and one offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox].

And then comes what Mr. BLAND said.

The SPEAKER. It seems from the statements of gentlemen and from the RECORD that there is some difference as to whether there was an agreement as to which of these propositions should be voted upon first. In the absence of any agreement, the Chair would have to submit them to the House under the rule. Ordinarily but one substitute could be pending, so that there is no precedent or ruling heretofore made as to the order in which the votes shall be taken when two substitutes are pending.

Under the ordinary rule two substitutes can never be pending; but in this special rule there is an express provision that two substitutes may be pending at the same time, not the one a substitute for the other, but both offered as substitutes for the original bill. In the absence of an agreement the Chair will treat them as he would treat ordinary amendments, and will submit first the question on the substitute that was first offered and then on the other. The Clerk will report the substitute first offered, and then the amendment proposed to that substitute.

The Clerk read the substitute offered by Mr. REED, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for and maintain the redemption of United States notes according to the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," he is authorized, in addition to the power he now has under said act, from time to time, at his discretion, to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the description of bonds authorized in said act, or coupon or registered bonds of the United States, to an amount sufficient for the objects herein stated, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, in coin, after five years from their date, with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions provided in said act for the bonds therein authorized. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall use the proceeds thereof for the purposes herein provided for, and none other.

Sec. 2. That to enable the Secretary to pay the current expenses of the Government so long as the current revenues shall be deficient he is authorized and required from time to time, in his discretion, to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, such an amount of certificates of indebtedness of the denomination of twenty-five, fifty, and one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, as may be needed for that purpose, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government, in coin, after two years from their date, with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions provided in the act approved January 14, 1875. The Secretary may at his discretion sell and dispose of the same for not less than an equal amount of lawful money of the United States, at designated depositories of the United States, and at such post-offices as he may select, and the Secretary shall use the proceeds thereof for the purpose provided for in this section, and for none other.

The SPEAKER. Now the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] to the substitute that has just been read, and on that amendment the vote will first be taken.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk did not state by whom the substitute just read was offered.

The SPEAKER. It was offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], and the Clerk will now report the amendment to it that was offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, for I have difficulty in understanding the present status. If this proposition is substituted for the original bill, what will become of the other substitute proposed by the committee?

The SPEAKER. A vote will be taken upon it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was of the opinion that that would be so, but our condition is so anomalous that I preferred to have the statement of the Chair.

The amendment offered by Mr. BRYAN to the substitute proposed by Mr. REED was read, as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as surrendering the right of the Government of the United States to pay all coin bonds outstanding in gold or silver coin at the option of the Government, as declared by the following joint resolution, adopted in 1878 by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, to wit:

"That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said act of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor."

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 119, noes 133.

Mr. BRYAN and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. BRYAN and Mr. BINGHAM to act as tellers at the desk.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken I would ask that the substitute be read, and also the proposed amendment, so that we may understand what we are voting upon.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent; but if there be no objection they can be read.

Mr. DINGLEY and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 168, answered "present" 3, not voting 51; as follows:

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

For this day:

Mr. PRICE with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. BUNN with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. MCDEARMON with Mr. RUSK.

Mr. HARTER with Mr. KILGORE.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. STEVENS with Mr. COGSWELL, on this vote.

Before the result of the vote was announced—

Mr. PENCE. On this roll call I have voted "aye," but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. APSLEY], who has been suddenly called home on account of sickness in his family, requested before leaving that I arrange a pair with him on the main question, which I suppose should be construed as covering this vote. If he were present he would, on this question, vote "no." I withdraw my vote, simply stating that if not paired I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BAILEY (who had voted in the affirmative). The gentlemen from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] is detained from the House by the serious illness of his wife, and I am paired with him. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

The question being taken there were—ayes 93, noes 167.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois and Mr. REED called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania and Mr. TARSNEY were appointed as tellers to act during the call of the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 107, nays 189, answered "present" 4, not voting 49; as follows:

So the substitute was rejected.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. STEVENS with Mr. COGSWELL.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox].

The substitute was read, as follows:

SEC. 1. That so much of all acts and parts of acts as require or authorize the deposit of United States bonds to secure circulating notes issued by national banking associations, or as require such associations to deposit, or keep on deposit, United States bonds for any purpose except as security for public money, be, and the same are hereby, repealed as to associations taking out circulation under this act; and notes issued under this act shall not contain the statement that they are so secured.

SEC. 2. That any national banking association organized as now provided by law, and any national banking association hereafter organized, may take out circulating notes to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital upon depositing with the Treasurer of the United States currency certificates issued under section 5193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States or United States legal-tender notes, including Treasury notes issued under the act approved July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," and other lawful money of the United States, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a guaranty fund equal to 30 per cent of the circulating notes applied for. The association making such deposit shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes in denominations of $10 and multiples thereof in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, and all such notes shall constitute, and are hereby declared to be, a first lien upon all the assets of the association issuing the same. All circulating notes furnished to national banking associations under this act shall be uniform in design; and the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized and directed to have prepared and keep on hand, ready for delivery on application, a reserve of blank notes for each national banking association having circulation; but such reserve for each bank shall at no time be in excess of the difference between the amount of its notes then outstanding and the total amount which it is by this act authorized to receive.

SEC. 3. That in lieu of all existing taxes each national banking association taking out circulation under this act shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July of each year, a duty of one-fourth of 1 per cent for each half year upon the average amount of its notes in circulation; and in computing such average all notes issued by such association and not actually retired from circulation in the manner hereinafter provided shall be included.

SEC. 4. That each national banking association shall redeem its notes at par on presentation at its own office and at such agencies as may be designated for that purpose by the Comptroller of the Currency; and whenever such association desires to retire the whole or any part of its circulation the notes to be retired shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency for cancellation, and thereupon a sum equal to 30 per cent of such canceled notes shall be returned to the association in lawful money of the United States. Defaced and mutilated notes and notes otherwise unfit for circulation which have been redeemed by any association may be returned to the Comptroller of the Currency for destruction and reissue, as now provided by law.

SEC. 5. That in order to provide a safety fund for the prompt redemption of the circulating notes of failed national banking associations each such association now organized, or hereafter organized, and receiving circulation under this act shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July in each year, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent for each half year upon the average amount of its circulating notes outstanding, to be computed as hereinbefore provided, until the said fund amounts to a sum equal to 5 per cent upon the total amount of such national-bank notes outstanding, and thereupon the collection of said tax shall be suspended. Each association hereafter applying for circulating notes shall, before receiving the same, pay its pro rata share into the said fund; but an association retiring or reducing its circulation shall not be entitled to withdraw any part of said fund. When any such national banking association becomes insolvent its guaranty fund held on deposit shall be transferred to the safety fund herein provided for, and applied, together with such part of the safety fund as may be necessary, to the redemption of its outstanding notes; and in case the said last-mentioned fund should at any time be impaired by the redemption of the notes of failed national banks, and the immediately available assets of said banks are not sufficient to reimburse it, the collection of said tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent for each half year shall be resumed and continued until the said fund is restored to an amount equal to 5 per cent upon the total circulation outstanding. All circulating notes of failed national banks taken out under this act not redeemed on presentation to the Treasurer of the United States, or an assistant treasurer of the United States, shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of the suspension of the bank until thirty days after public notice has been given that funds are on hand for their redemption, and such notes shall constitute a first lien upon all moneys thereafter received into the safety fund.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time invest any money belonging to the safety fund in United States bonds, and the bonds so purchased, and the interest accruing thereon, shall be held as part of the said fund. Such bonds may be sold when necessary and the proceeds used for the redemption of the circulating notes of failed national banks.

SEC. 7. That every national banking association heretofore organized and having bonds on deposit to secure circulation may withdraw such bonds upon the deposit of lawful money of the United States, as now provided by law; and thereafter such association may take out circulation under this act and be entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities herein conferred.

SEC. 8. That the whole of section 9 and so much of section 12 of the act approved July 12, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," as directs the Secretary of the Treasury to receive deposits of gold and to issue certificates thereon be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and section 31 of the act approved June 3, 1864, entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," and sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, repealed. Provided, That no banking association taking out circulation under this act shall retire or cancel any of its bank notes without the written consent of the Secretary of the Treasury (if said notes are national-bank notes) or the proper State officer (if said notes are State-bank notes).

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, use from time to time any surplus revenue of the United States in the redemption and retirement of United States legal-tender notes and notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, but the amount of such notes retired shall not in the aggregate exceed an amount equal to 70 per cent of the additional circulation taken out by national banks and State banks under the provisions of this act; and hereafter no United States notes, national-bank notes, or Treasury notes authorized by the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," of a less denomination than $10 shall be issued, and as rapidly as such notes of denominations less than $10 shall be received into the Treasury, otherwise than for redemption and retirement, they shall be canceled, and an equal amount of notes of like character, but in denominations of $10 or multiples thereof, shall be issued in their places; but nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or in any manner affect the second section of the said act of July 14, 1890.

SEC. 10. That section 5191 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to require national banking associations to keep not less than one-half of their reserve (provided for in said section) in legal-tender notes or Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act to direct the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," if required to do so by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 11. That whenever there shall be received into the Treasury of the United States any legal-tender notes or Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, of less denomination than $10 the same shall be canceled and silver dollars or silver certificates of like denominations shall be issued in amounts equal to such notes so canceled; and in order to put the provisions of this act into effect the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury as rapidly as practicable, and he is hereby directed to issue silver certificates upon the silver bullion now in the Treasury for the purposes hereinabove stated, and he is authorized to coin so much of said bullion as he may deem proper into subsidiary coin, to be used for the purposes set forth in this section.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered and authorized to require any part of the customs dues, or duties on imports, to be paid in United States legal-tender notes, including Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes."

SEC. 13. That the bonds which may hereafter be issued under the act of January 14, 1873, and the act of July 14, 1870, shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 4 per cent per annum. And full authority is hereby given the Secretary of the Treasury to issue said bonds for the purposes named in said acts without limit as to the time they shall become due and payable, and for the redemption of the notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890.

SEC. 14. That the use of circulating notes of and above the denomination of $10 issued by a banking corporation duly organized under the laws of any State, and which transacts no other than a banking business, shall be exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States when it is shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency—

First. That such bank has at no time had outstanding its circulating notes in excess of 75 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital;

Second. That its stockholders are individually liable for the redemption of its circulating notes to an amount equal to the par value of the stock owned by them, but this shall not be required in the case of persons holding stock as executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees, if the assets and funds in their hands are liable in like manner and to the same extent as the testator, intestate, ward, or person interested in such funds would be if living and competent to act and hold the stock in his own name;

Third. That the circulating notes constitute by law a first lien upon all the assets of the bank;

Fourth. That the bank has at all times kept on deposit with an officer of the State, authorized by law to receive and hold the same, a guaranty fund in currency certificates issued under section 5193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or United States legal-tender notes, including Treasury notes of 1890, equal to 30 per cent of its outstanding circulating notes; and Fifth. That it has promptly redeemed its notes at par on demand at its principal office, or at one or more of its branch offices, if it has branches.

Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be satisfied that any banking corporation duly organized under the laws of any State, and which transacts no other than a banking business as provided in this section, has been incorporated under the laws of the State in which it is located and that such laws require—

First. That its stockholders shall be individually liable for the redemption of its circulating notes to an amount equal to the par value of the capital stock owned by them;

Second. That the circulating notes thereof shall constitute a first lien upon all the assets of the bank; and Third. That such bank shall keep on deposit at all times, with an official of the State authorized by law to receive and hold the same, a guaranty fund as required in the fourth paragraph of this section.

They shall thereupon issue to said bank a certificate to that effect. Said bank may then issue its notes of and above the denomination of $10, as provided in this act, and thereafter the tax of 10 per cent heretofore imposed by law upon the circulation of the notes of State banks shall not be assessed or collected upon the notes of such bank unless it appears that said bank has issued circulating notes in excess of 75 per cent of its paid-up and unimpaired capital, or that its capital is impaired and has remained so for thirty days, or that the bank has not kept on deposit with the State official authorized by law to receive and hold the same a guaranty fund as required in the fourth paragraph of this section, or that said bank has not promptly redeemed its notes in lawful money at par on demand at its principal office, or at one or more of its branch offices, if it has branch offices, or that such State has repealed any of such laws; and no person or corporation, other than the bank issuing such notes in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be liable to pay the said tax of 10 per cent for any use of the circulating notes of such bank after such bank has taken out circulation under this act.

SEC. 15. That any national banking association and any banking association organized under the laws of any State may deposit with the Treasurer of the United States legal-tender notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, and receive certificates therefor, in the manner provided in section 5193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury may, under proper rules and regulations to be established by him, permit the State banks to procure and use in the preparation of their notes the distinctive paper used in printing United States securities; but no State bank shall print or engrave its notes in similitude of a United States note, or certificate, or national-bank note.

During the reading of the foregoing,

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask to dispense with the reading of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The substitute has been printed, and if there is no desire to have it again read the Chair will direct the vote to be taken.

Several members demanded the reading.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask to dispense with the further reading of the substitute.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I object. Let us have it read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading, as above.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] offers an amendment to the substitute, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out section 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Sec. 13. That the bonds which may be issued under any existing law shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 3 per cent per annum. They shall be in denominations to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be due and payable at time or times to be fixed by him, not to exceed twenty years. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to confer authority on the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds."

The question being taken on the amendment to the substitute, it was rejected.

The question recurred on the substitute of Mr. Cox.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 184.

Mr. COX. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being 26 members in support of the demand and 185 in opposition—the affirmative vote not being one-fifth of the whole.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 159.

[The result of the vote was received with applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HOOKER of New York and Mr. TRACEY as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 102, answered "present" 4, not voting 48; as follows:

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, when the name of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN] was called I answered to his name. I think he is recorded as voting by mistake. I understand he is not in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin states that he voted when the name of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN] was called.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. APSLEY] and have regarded that pair. Now it is suggested that that pair can be transferred so that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. APSLEY] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] may be paired, and if I can be recognized to do so I will be glad to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only ask if the gentleman was in the Hall.

Mr. PENCE. I have been in the Hall all the while. I was paying no attention to the calling of my name, but observing my pair. If that is the inquiry, I did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman.

The name of Mr. PENCE was called, and he voted "yea."

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If by this vote it should be determined to reconsider the vote, would it be in order under the rules to have this bill recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER. After it is ordered to a third reading under the rules a motion may be made to recommit either before or after the previous question on the passage of the bill, but not prior to the third reading.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The previous question is already ordered by the special order. Really, what I desire to know is if the motion to reconsider is not laid on the table would the parliamentary attitude be such that this bill could be recommitted without instructions to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it is ordered to a third reading it could be.

The SPEAKER. If it is ordered to a third reading it could be; otherwise not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will make that motion then. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The vote disposes of the bill anyway.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. APSLEY with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, on this vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I withdraw that.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 135, the nays are 124, present and not voting 1. The yeas have it, and the motion to reconsider is laid on the table. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8638) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maryland and Washington Railway Company," approved August 1, 1892, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the bill (S. 2361) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maryland and Washington Railway Company," approved August 1, 1892, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed, as it is a Senate bill on the same subject-matter as the bill just reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8631) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6956) to grant to railroad companies in the Indian Territory additional powers to secure right of way, depot grounds, etc., reported it with amendments.

METROPOLITAN STREET RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2521) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask that it may be considered at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and require the said company to lay down from the intersection of Four-and-a-half and L streets southwest, along Four-and-a-half street to P street south, a single track of underground electric road for the propulsion of its cars, thence west along P street with said single track to Water street, thence northwesterly along Water street with said single track to L street, thence east along L street with said single track to its double tracks at the intersection of Four-and-a-half and L streets southwest, and thence north by said company's double tracks as now located into its depot on Seventh street extended.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall locate the said track on Four-and-a-half, P, Water, and L streets so as best to subserve the public convenience, and may in their discretion locate the same on Water street for such distance as they may deem best on the east track of the Belt Line Railway Company, so that the two companies may mutually and profitably use the space of street occupied by the said east track. The said Belt Line Railway Company and the Metropolitan Railroad Company shall each have the right to apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia to fix a just and equitable compensation for any rights which may be affected by this law, and said court shall have power to issue execution to enforce its judgment.

SEC. 3. That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized and required to lay down and continue its underground electric construction of single track from the intersection of P and Thirty-fifth streets northwest, thence running west along P street to Thirty-sixth street, thence south on Thirty-sixth street to Prospect avenue, thence east on Prospect avenue to Thirty-fifth street, thence north on Thirty-fifth street to O street, thence east, continuing its route as now located.

SEC. 4. That the number of directors of said company shall be increased from seven to nine members.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will explain the object of this amendment. At the last session of Congress the company was obliged to put down the underground electric street-railway system, the Budapest, so called. The terminus of the Metropolitan road down at Water street is such that it would leave the cars just as the cars of the Washington and Georgetown road are now in Georgetown, in the middle of the street. The intention is to allow them to run around a loop to get to their car house. It is only a short distance, and away down in that part of the city near the river.

Mr. HALE. Where is the point?

Mr. McMILLAN. On Water street, near the wharf.

Mr. HALE. On the lower side?

Mr. McMILLAN. On the lower side. As it is now, the cars stop and switch in the street. The object is to give them a loop into their new car house and around one block.

Mr. HALE. And the substitute is a narration of different streets down there, not streets up in the main part of the city?

Mr. McMILLAN. Entirely. The second provision of the amendment is to extend the present loop in Georgetown near the Georgetown University. That is all there is of it.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask if the amendment has been printed and whether it is lying on our desks?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been printed, the Chair is advised.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to have the bill go over until I can look at the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I appeal to the Senator from South Dakota. It is in a section of the city where this change can not affect anything in the world. The new system is being put down by the railroad company, which is very expensive, and it is only proposed to allow a loop around two or three squares to get to the power house in one place, and around two squares to get to the union station, as asked by the faculty of Georgetown University.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask what portion of L street is to be covered?

Mr. FAULKNER. It does not touch any line at all in the center of the city. It does run over the present Metropolitan line, but extends from the Georgetown University two squares in order to reach the new union station. Then down here at the river, where the excursion boats land, it allows the road to go to its power house, in order to reach the excursion steamers so as to carry people over the city without a double transfer.

Mr. KYLE. Is it proposed to extend the line on L street at all?

Mr. FAULKNER. Not in the center of the city.

Mr. McMILLAN. It does not come up here. It is away down on the river. There are two L streets, L street south and L street north.

Mr. KYLE. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HILL. When was the bill reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been just reported.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will state to the Senator from New York that the Metropolitan Railway Company is about commencing the building of their electric line.

Mr. SHERMAN. And they want a loop at either end.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; and the bill is intended to enable them to commence work right away.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. VILAS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes, to report the same back with a recommendation that the amendments to the bill made by the House of Representatives be nonconcurrent in, and that a conference be asked with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon. I ask that the vote may be now taken on nonconcurring in the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments of the House of Representatives will be regarded as nonconcurrent in. The Chair hears no objection, and they are nonconcurrent in.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VILAS, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. PLATT were appointed.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. HILL on the 1st instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $100 to Herman Fehim for reporting and transcribing the statements of W. G. McAdoo, J. H. Barr, David McClure, Robert Pritchard, Foster V. Brown, and Tully R. Cornick before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in the matter of the confirmation of Charles D. Clark, nominated by the President to be United States district judge for the middle and eastern districts of Tennessee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill (S. 2737) granting a pension to Isaac V. Mossman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a bill simply on behalf of a constituent. It is not my bill. I introduce it by request.

The bill (S. 2738) to provide for the issue of bonds and the regulation of the national banks was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VILAS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 129) authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning deep waterways between the ocean and Great Lakes, and providing commissioners therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RELIEF OF POOR IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2736) for the immediate relief of the suffering poor of the District of Columbia; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the immediate passage of the bill. Let it be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the immediate relief of the suffering poor of the District of Columbia, to be disbursed under the direction of the Commissioners of said District, by the organized charities of said District, one-half of said sum to be charged to said District.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the bill is to be passed at all it should be passed immediately. I am advised that the conditions are urgent and that the sum proposed to be appropriated is really necessary at this time for immediate relief. I hope by common consent the bill will be passed by the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BATE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 2297) to provide for the restatement, readjustment, settlement, and payment of dues to army officers in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate all examinations and tests that have been made within twelve months past of coals taken from any coal mines in the United States, showing the constituents of such coals and their value for steaming purposes in vessels of the Navy and in stationary engines in the gun factories, armories, and yards under the control of the Department of the Navy; and any other information on this subject that will show the economic value of such coals for steaming purposes and the places in which they can be more advantageously shipped aboard the vessels employed in the naval and coast survey service, in the Atlantic Ocean, the Gulf of Mexico, the Caribbean Sea, and the Pacific Ocean.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what the resolution is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. MORGAN. It is a resolution, I will explain to the Senator, merely calling for information as to the tests that have been recently made of the value of coals for steaming purposes in all parts of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Does it include only the coals which are the product of our own mines?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. No others?

Mr. MORGAN. No others.

Mr. HOAR. Is it a request for the results of tests already made or to be made hereafter?

Mr. MORGAN. Tests that have been made within twelve months.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then I shall not interpose an objection. If it were tests to be hereafter made I should like to include a few other coals than those which are the product of our own mines.

The resolution was agreed to.

COLUMBIA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all reports on file in his Department from the local engineer in charge of the work as to surveys and other steps taken, if any, in pursuance of the appropriation contained in the last river and harbor bill of $100,000 for improving Columbia River, Oregon and Washington, at Three-Mile Rapids, and the construction and equipment of a boat railway from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls; also, copies of any reports transmitted to the Department by the local engineer in charge of the proposed improvement of the Yamhill River, in the State of Oregon.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, as now constituted, either by full committee or such subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee, to continue during the coming recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolutions of May 13, 1890, and February 27, 1891, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolutions, and in the pursuance of such investigations to visit the several Indian reservations, Indian schools supported in whole or in part by the Government, and the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, or any reservation where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

Second. That said committee or subcommittee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses under oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at such place or places as they may determine; and the necessary and proper expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—BOND ISSUE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read.

[For message see House proceedings.]

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa, was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill may lie upon the table.

Mr. VEST. Let it go to the Committee on Commerce. It had better go to that committee, as the other bill is before the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I have no objection to the reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RETURN OF MICHIGAN REGIMENTAL FLAGS.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 113) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the flags of certain regiments of Michigan volunteer infantry. I will state that the joint resolution is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, and it has received the approval of the War Department.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It instructs the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the regimental flags of the Seventeenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth regiments of Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH MOORE ENGLISH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida kindly consents to allow me to ask consideration for a bill which will take but a moment.

Mr. CALL. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire if the resolution introduced by me does not lose its place.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will not. The bill for which I ask consideration will take but a moment. It is the bill (H. R. 6585) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the bill will provoke any debate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not a moment of debate. I simply want to make a statement, in about ten words; that is all.

Mr. CALL. I understand that my resolution is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CALL. I do if it displaces the resolution which was laid before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will not displace the resolution of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Florida to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CALL. I did yield, with the understanding, however, that the bill should not displace the resolution before the Senate. If there be any doubt about that, I do not yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire on the assurance that his bill will not occupy any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth Moore English, widow of Rear-Admiral Earl English, at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. A similar bill passed the Senate granting a pension of $100 a month to the beneficiary named in this bill, and was sent to the House of Representatives. The committee of the House reported to make the rate $50, but when the bill was considered in the House it was reduced to $30. When this bill came to the Senate the Senate committee supposed the bill had been passed at $50, and so reported it favorably. I move an amendment striking out the word "thirty," in line 7, before the word "dollars," and inserting the word "fifty," so as to read: "At the rate of $50 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. HAWLEY were appointed.

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is now before the Senate, and will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the State of Florida and is engaged in business there and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States and of the State of Florida. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents, have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections and the legislature and the members of Congress and the executive officers of the State of Florida; and whether they own, either directly or indirectly, any interests in newspapers published in the State, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, were expended in the late elections by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, or in persons connected with it, and in what way and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I was asked on yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] as to my own opinion and conviction in regard to the operation of the Honduras lottery. I replied to the Senator that I had no personal knowledge in regard to it, but it is a subject of notoriety in the State of Florida, and believed by many persons, that the Louisiana, now the Honduras, Lottery Company is in full operation in that State and that all the practices which were obnoxious to the people of Louisiana are being pursued in Florida. That is the general opinion. I share that opinion, and I therefore introduced this resolution in conformity, as I believe, with the wishes of a great majority of the people of both political parties in the State of Florida. I ask that the resolution may be adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Florida, the author of this resolution, and the Senate to its extraordinary terms. I am perfectly well aware that any inquiry in regard to gambling operations of any kind or description meets with public approval; but this resolution requires a committee of this body to ascertain not only whether this lottery company is in existence in the State of Florida but whether it has entered into any combination with any person or corporation for the control of elections in that State for members of the legislature, or for members of Congress from that State, or for the executive officers of that State.

This resolution, so far as I know, is the first seriously introduced into Congress at any time to inquire whether a member of the legislature of a State has been corrupted by anybody, or whether by corrupt means the governor of a sovereign State of this Union is under the control of a lottery company or any other company or person or corporation.

I suggest, Mr. President, that this is entering upon a field of inquiry which no Senator or Member of the House of Representatives of either party has ever suggested, unless it was a question as to the election of a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives. Then I think this body has gone so far as to hold that it was impossible to go back and inquire into the morals of the men constituting a State legislature which elected a Senator to this body. It does seem to me that this is a most remarkable proposition, and one which, if it is followed out, will entirely wipe out the States and absorb in Congress the entire control over the morals and everything else connected with the government of the States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry of him?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the Senator has no doubt about the competency of the Senate to make the inquiry contained in the first part of the resolution, as to whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company is using the mails in Florida and violating the laws of the United States in that connection. I suppose the Senator does not object to that.

Mr. GORMAN. No, I am not referring to that part of the resolution at all, and I understand that Congress has the unquestionable right to ascertain that fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. Possibly the Senator from Maryland is correct in supposing that the additional features of the resolution are only incidental to the main inquiry. As such I can not conceive of any harm in it; but certainly if the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company is getting a foothold in Florida and using the mails there unlawfully and contrary to the existing statutes of the United States, there ought to be an investigation. Whether such an inquiry is made or not, I think the Senator will admit that.

Mr. GORMAN. I am not at all astonished that the Senator from New Hampshire, with his well-known views, should favor a resolution somewhat similar in some respects to one suggested, if not introduced. The Senator from New Hampshire has been running along on this line and inquiring very particularly as to the conduct of members of the legislatures of the States and of State officials. This resolution goes into the matter of elections, which I know the Senator has had heretofore in his mind, and I think from what I have heard him say on this floor he has it still in his mind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg the Senator not to introduce politics into this discussion; if he does this resolution will be carried beyond 1 o'clock and can not be disposed of. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to the passage of the first clause of the resolution, leaving the remainder out? I do not know that the Senator from Florida will agree to that; but I do not see that the constitutional argument which the Senator from Maryland has been making so well can possibly apply to the first clause of the resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. In what I have had to say upon this resolution I was treating it in my own way, and did not comment upon the first clause of the resolution; but I do comment upon the second clause, which I shall read so that it may appear by itself. I prefer to read the part which strikes me as a most extraordinary proposition.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. CALL. I desire the Senator from Maryland to read the part of the resolution which asks an inquiry into the morals of any of the officials of the State of Florida—

Mr. GORMAN. I will do so.

Mr. CALL. Or that asks an inquiry into anything which concerns the State of Florida exclusively. I affirm that the Senator's representation of the resolution is entirely without foundation.

Mr. GORMAN. I will read it, and let the resolution speak for itself. It is as follows:

The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents, have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections and the legislature and the members of Congress and the executive officers of the State of Florida; and whether they own, either directly or indirectly, any interests in newspapers published in the State, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, were expended in the late elections by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, or in persons connected with it, and in what way and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

I submit to the Senator from Florida that if the resolution does not mean to inquire whether the voters of Florida have been corrupted by this company, whether the newspapers have not been corrupted by it, whether the legislature has not been corrupted by it, and whether the governor has not been corrupted or controlled by it, I confess I do not understand the meaning of language.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to answer?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Maryland knows without asking me the question that the language imports an effort, an attempt to corrupt, and not the actual corruption of anybody. It refers to a great foreign corporation, seeking and attempting by corrupt means to do certain things; and the Senator knows there is nothing in the resolution that can justify the criticism he has made upon it.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether he asserts here as a Senator that he has reasonable ground to believe that this company or any other company has corrupted the voters of his State or the members of the legislature or its governor?

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Maryland ought to know that I am not a child to be misled by such idle and absurd propositions. It is not for me to say that I know that anybody has been corrupted. Every Senator knows that these are the pretended defenses of a corrupt combination. I have reason to believe that not only in the State of Louisiana but in the State of Florida and elsewhere there have been attempts to corrupt elections and public officers, and everybody else knows it to be so.

The resolution plainly refers to the corrupt efforts of a foreign corporation which have been constantly exhibited here in connection with the history of this corporation in Louisiana, and have been subjects of discussion for a long period of time. This is an attempt to defend this corrupt combination by imputing to me what the resolution does not in any way whatever intend or propose.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida another question.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator, as he states, believes that the attempt has been made by the company to corrupt those people in his State, what power or right has the Senate of the United States to inquire into it?

Mr. CALL. The power is plain and unquestionable. What power had the Senate of the United States to consider and prohibit the use by the Louisiana Lottery Company of the instrumentalities of the Government in the interstate commerce? Why is the Senator from Maryland so anxious to defend these corrupt combinations that are seeking to oppress the people of this country? Mr. President, it is competent for the Senate, and it is its duty, to know whether foreign corporations are here with money seeking, whether they can accomplish it or not, to influence the legislation of the American people. It is plainly and palpably the duty of Congress, of every patriotic Senator, of every Democrat, Republican, and Populist, and of every man who believes in State rights, if there be combinations of powerful influences brought into this country to affect our Federal legislation and Federal Government, to investigate the subject and ascertain whether it is true or not.

But, more than that, it is enough for the resolution that the condition should be dangerous, threatening to this country. Here is this corporation, domiciled in Honduras, a foreign corporation, prohibited the use of the mails of this country, with money enough to offer to pay the entire debt of the State of Louisiana for a provision in the constitution of that State which would give it a secure lodgment there; and will the Senator from Maryland deny that if the company is located in the State of Florida or the State of Maryland with its millions of dollars drawn every month from the people of the world, it will be able to endanger at least the liberties of the people of that State or of any other State? I deny that under any possible construction of language the resolution can have the meaning asserted by the Senator from Maryland or in any way touches the question of the State's exclusive right to legislate for and control her own elections and the morals of her people.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I represent in part one of the oldest States in the Union, a State which looks after the morals and conduct of its citizens as well as any State in the Union. We have had an old-fashioned notion in the State of Maryland that under our form of government it was the duty of the State, through its laws and its officers, to take care of the morals of the people and suppress any corrupt combination or corporation that attempted to control its elections. We have always believed—for it is a Democratic State—that whenever the General Government stepped in to control and examine into the elections and the affairs of the State it was a usurpation of power, which we have always resented. I say to the Senator from Florida that if there is a State in the Union, and I do not believe there is, whose people or representatives are so weak or so corrupt that they can be managed, controlled, or influenced by the Louisiana Lottery Company or any other, they ought to remain under the domination of such control and not come to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I can understand that gentlemen on the other side, like the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. CHANDLER, and others of that school of thought, should believe that this great Government ought to throw its paternalism over every locality, and that the rights and the power of the States should be wiped out. That has been the cause of struggle here between great parties. Even in that case, however, so far as I know, they have never gone beyond the point of ascertaining whether the elections of members of the other House and Senators were in form. Even that we have resented. The resolution goes a step beyond the most radical I have ever known. It is not a question as to a corrupt combination, or its exclusion from the use of the mails, driving it out of this country and preventing it from using the facilities offered by the Government for plying their trade. The record of the Senator from Florida is no better than mine or that of other Senators. He can not be more anxious to suppress vice than I am. But under the guise of suppressing vice the resolution goes to the extent of destroying the power of the States and giving the Senate of the United States a jurisdiction that it has not and which, if it had, it ought never to exercise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Maryland yield the floor to me?

Mr. GORMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course, I must give way for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make that motion.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky that he ought not to make that motion at this time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to be lacking—

Mr. CHANDLER. I also appeal to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] not to introduce partisanship into the discussion and call me by name in connection with the resolution about the Louisiana Lottery Company, and then not give me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw any such allusion.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I submit that the Senator from Maryland has made an attack upon me here in relation to the resolution—

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. CALL. And it is not fair that I should not be allowed to reply to it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to be lacking in the fullest measure of courtesy and consideration to the Senator from Florida or any other Senator, but we must remember that the pending appropriation bill is the diplomatic and consular bill. Behind it, untouched by the Senate, are the Post-Office appropriation bill, the Indian appropriation bill, the sundry civil appropriation bill, the agricultural appropriation bill, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the general deficiency appropriation bill, and the naval appropriation bill; and this is the 8th day of February. Disclaiming any purpose of intentional disrespect or lack of courtesy to anybody, I insist upon my motion.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may retain its place.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I must object, because we have this discussion every morning.

Mr. CALL. I believe it has a right to do so, being interrupted before the conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That I deny. Under Rule VII I have a right to make this motion, and I insist upon it.

Mr. CALL. Then I give notice that I shall again introduce the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must entertain the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. The question raised by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] will be determined at the proper time. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ICE IN POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. HARRIS. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky to yield to me for a single moment in order that I may report a joint resolution from the District Committee, proposing to appropriate $5,000 to be used by the Commissioners in clearing the ice that is being gorged against our bridges, and have it put on its passage. The Commissioners are in great apprehension of an ice gorge and the consequent flooding of the lower parts of the District.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is an appropriation bill, and I yield to the Senator from Tennessee for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I report by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia a joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 198), making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to meet expenses that may be necessary for the purpose of clearing the Potomac River of ice within the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the letter of the District Commissioners, with the accompanying letter from the harbor master, be printed in the RECORD, so that they may be used elsewhere.

The letters referred to are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. Washington, February 7, 1895.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to submit herewith a draft of a "joint resolution making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice," and recommend its immediate enactment. This proposed resolution is substantially the same as the resolution which was approved January 25, 1893, (U. S. Stats., volume 27, page 753). The conditions which that resolution was designed to meet again confront the interests along the river front and elsewhere which would be jeopardized by an overflow of the Potomac. The obstruction of the river by ice and the extraordinary fall of snow near its watershed, and those of its tributary streams, make the Commissioners and the community in general apprehensive that a decided moderation in the weather with rain, or a general thaw, would result in the jamming of the ice in front of and immediately below the city, thereby impeding the discharge of the freshet, and involving a flooding of the lower portions of the city and injury to the bridges and other public works, as well as to private property.

The Commissioners believe that the danger may, to a large extent, be obviated if they should have at their disposal the means of hiring tug boats and other appliances for breaking up the ice and opening the gorges for the passage of the ice and flood. While the Commissioners are not prepared to give assurance of their ability to secure complete immunity from damage even with the facilities which such a fund would supply, they feel assured that they could avert much destruction of public and private property, and probably life, if the amount asked for should be placed at their disposal.

Ordinarily they could resort to the emergency fund, but that fund for the current year has been so depleted by demands upon it to provide and maintain the hospital and inspection service connected with the suppression of smallpox and the hospital for the treatment of persons suffering with that disease that only about $4,000 remains of that appropriation. From present appearances the same service will require much more than that amount. The Commissioners have already recommended that an additional appropriation of $5,000 for that purpose be made. Even if all of those two amounts should not be required in the smallpox service, any balance thereof should be kept available for general exigencies, but the uncertainty as to the amount that will be needed for that service renders it extremely unwise to depend upon any balance thereof to meet the emergency for which the proposed resolution is intended to provide. The ice in the river is now more than 4 inches thick and rapidly increasing. A copy of a report of the harbor master as to the condition of the river is herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS,

President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Senator ISHAM G. HARRIS,

Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, February 6, 1895.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that the present cold weather has produced a large amount of ice in the Potomac River; all traffic, with the exception of the Washington and Norfolk boats, being suspended by reason of the large accumulations of ice. In case of a sudden thaw or heavy rain, the result would be very disastrous and steps should at once be taken to maintain an open channel, in order to prevent an ice gorge. I have, therefore, to recommend that the Commissioners ask for an appropriation of $5,000 to be immediately available, so that the necessary measures may be taken without delay.

Very respectfully,

J. R. SUTTON, Harbor Master.

To the COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 9, after line 8, to insert:

CONSTRUCTION OF TELEGRAPH CABLE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the remarks of Senators upon the Hawaiian question, which, by the way, has taken a wide range; and whatever be the particular branch of it under consideration we do not seem to get far away from the revolution of 1893, and the causes which led up to it.

Fortunately, the threatening danger to this new Government has been averted, and the present form of government is practically assured. The papers of yesterday state that the revolution has not only proven a failure but that Mrs. Dominis has abdicated the throne. This ends the disturbance, we may hope, for all time to come.

Whatever Senators may think or say as to the downfall of the Royalist Government, one thing is clear, that the ex-Queen and her royalist supporters are themselves responsible for their overthrow.

For fifty years the foreign residents of the islands were content to support and encourage royalist rule, because each succeeding ruler of the dynasty was an improvement upon his predecessor. The missionary population at least took pride in seeing barbarism disappear and the old chiefs give place to a humane king governing by a wise constitution and laws. But with the death of the old dynasty the people in large measure lost their interest in native domination, but on the election of Kalakaua gracefully submitted, inasmuch as a more liberal government was assured. But nevertheless it was apparent to all Americans that the days of native rule had ended. For twenty years the monarchy had been rotten, and the assumption of control by themselves or some foreign power was a foregone conclusion. The foremost natives recognized this. Our naval officers and our national envoys upon the islands knew it and frequently spoke of it; and when Liliuokalani, violating her oath to her people and the constitution, attempted her "coup d'état" in January, 1893, by common consent and sympathy the American element refused to submit, a revolution occurred, and a Provisional Government was established.

It is folly to say that our Government was responsible for the downfall of the Royalist Government.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] yesterday and upon a previous occasion made a most bitter attack upon the Provisional Government and upon Minister Stevens. He calls the new Government a "bastard government," and thinks we are guilty of robbing the natives of their lands and their Government. The argument of the Senator is based entirely upon the report of Commissioner Blount; and if the report were reliable this conclusion would probably in a measure be correct. But, Mr. President, from a careful investigation of the means adopted by Mr. Blount in securing evidence, I say candidly that I believe he went there with his case made up and bolstered it up with "ex parte" evidence almost entirely. He not only did not seek for information which was opposed to his preconceived theory, but he refused to summon witnesses of the Provisional Government who were entirely trustworthy.

Mr. President, there was no conspiracy between Mr. Stevens and the provisional leaders. I have here a letter from one of the leading men of the Republic, Mr. James B. Castle, which I will read. This gentleman I know to be an absolutely trustworthy witness, and he was cognizant of every move made from the beginning to the end. He acted with the executive board and the advisory council from the first day. He says:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CUSTOMS,
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, December 24, 1893.

MY DEAR KYLE: The argument that the Administration seem to lay stress on to justify the idea of restoration, and the truth of which I suppose Mr. Cleveland will endeavor to convince Congress, is that of the downfall of Liliuokalani being the direct result of a conspiracy between Stevens and some of us. It would be foolish for me to claim any special knowledge on this point not shared by dozens of others. I was in a position to know pretty well what was going on last year while the legislature was in session, and the idea of such a conspiracy is preposterous. It is the literal truth that when the ex-Queen sprung the Constitution that eventful Saturday in January it came for the most part like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. Some of our people got an inkling of such intention the day before, but for the most part the subject had dropped out of the public mind to some extent after the failure some months before in the legislature of an evident attempt on the part of some of her people to introduce it by the creation of a constitutional convention, which failed.

Henry had told me when he came home to lunch at noon that it was evidently a fact that she meant to promulgate one arbitrarily that afternoon. I was incredulous even when he told me that Thurston was his informant, but I said, "Well, I will get my gun into shape, but I will not believe it till I see it." So little impression did it make upon me that I went on with some work I had to do in the afternoon, and started down to the office to do a little writing about 2 p. m. or a little later. I was so incredulous because, as I told Henry, "If she is crazy, her ministers can't be gone clean out of their wits, and will not let her commit suicide." I was at the meeting at Mr. Smith's office that formed the committee of safety a few hours afterward. My brother, W. R., was one of that committee, and the following Monday evening I acted for him on the committee and till the reading of the proclamation Tuesday afternoon (as he was completely prostrated by one of his attacks of asthma). I am in a position to speak of the proceedings from the meeting at Mr. Waterhouse's (Monday evening) till the end, positively, as I was in the whole of it.

The entire extent of our communication with the American minister was as individuals (whatever communication there was). I do not know how much he may have been asked for counsel or who went to him. I do know that it was distinctly understood that we had got to capture and maintain the headquarters of Government before we could secure from him recognition of ourselves as such Government. Immediately upon our taking possession of the Government building (the entire absence of resistance being our first surprise) I turned to the commander (Soper) and reported for military duty (my duty as a member of the committee of safety having terminated with possession of the Government building). I took the word to Fisher at our rendezvous, a few minutes' walk distant, for the guard to come down immediately. Went on to another party in waiting for the orders, on to the house for my own equipment, and was back on duty in ten or fifteen minutes' time from the time I left. I took up my position in line on the lawn in front of the building about a quarter before 3, where there were already about 20 men. These rapidly increased until at about 4 o'clock we (Henry and I) estimated that there were from 100 to 120 men. Although I was partially prepared to see ourselves remain in undisturbed possession of the place, by the absence of resistance when we first came in, I did not breathe freely till after an hour or two showed that we should not have to fight for it.

I do not need to enlarge on all that transpired between Saturday and Tuesday, as you are already doubtless perfectly familiar with it from Thurston and W. R. Castle, both of whom were in the committee of safety from Saturday night till Monday night, when Thurston, as well as W. R., was compelled to take to his bed completely used up. I can say that the talk of conspiracy, if I know the meaning of the word, from everything that I know of the events transpiring those days, is utter rot. And I was in a position that makes me inevitably one of the conspirators if such existed. As to the nature of Mr. Blount's inquiry into matters here, I do not think it worth while to go into it very much just now, and I am only just becoming acquainted with the full details of his data from a copy belonging to Mr. Thurston and which he brought by the Alameda.

So far as I have looked at it the ridiculously ex parte nature of the examination is apparent to anyone acquainted with all the facts. I see that I figure a little in an interview, or rather conversation, that is made part of Mr. W. O. Smith's statement to Mr. Blount. I did not know of this until I just saw it in the copy of the report above alluded to. The explanation of the matter is this: Before I had dropped out of the secretaryship of the executive and advisory councils to assume this office I was greatly desirous of collating the facts of all the events of the 14th to 17th of January, simply for the sake of historical data to be available for the future use of Alexander or some similar historical student. My sole interest in this was to insure, so far as I could, authentic history. I was prevented from going on with it by the pressure of the duties of this position.

Now, I must say that in comparison with the manner of Blount's examination my work does not suffer. It is a conspicuous fact that his testimony is drawn in a large majority of instances from royalist sources, and whenever he drew forth a long and valuable statement from the annexation advocates, as in the case of Alexander, for instance, it would only be upon such subject-matter as he knew would not interfere with the successful completion of a strong case against Stevens, the palpable objective point of his mission to all here who read his mass of statements and affidavits. It is the testimony of all whom I have talked with whom he questioned, that he distinctly shut off any signs of gratuitous statement beyond the simplest replies to his direct and leading questions. For myself, I never attached any importance to his not interviewing me, as I supposed he was doing so with all of our men who knew anything of the events of January by actual participation. As I look over the list of his interviews and statements I see the class above referred to, royalists, in a very large majority. I did not have the time very well to call on him soon after his arrival, and when I did so it was a month after. I happened to find him alone that evening, and for an hour and a half he plied me with questions, but not one upon the events of January.

The nature of our talk was such, however, that he could not but recognize that I had lived in the place with such environment and association as to specially qualify me, by familiarity at least, to express an intelligent opinion upon Hawaiian affairs. When I read his report and many of the affidavits the matter is perfectly clear to me. He did not want what I might be able to testify. It will be of interest to you to know that C. B. Wilson, the Queen's marshal, stated to Commissioner Carter months since most emphatically that the landing of the troops did not cause the deposition of the ex-Queen. He charges the ministers over him at that time with treachery and cowardice in strong terms. Furthermore he claims that Blount interviewed particularly S. M. Damon, F. Wundenberg, and Henry Waterhouse, at his suggestion that a careful examination of these men with questions carefully prepared to "corner" them would elicit the truth. He stated at the same time that his statement to Mr. Blount was "doctored," so to speak, by Mr. A. P. Peterson before it went to Blount.

Mr. President, this is but one of scores of letters that could be obtained from credible witnesses; and they convince me, as they do many others, that the so-called report of Mr. Blount is based on "ex parte" evidence, much of which is unreliable.

According to the first information received as to the downfall of the Royalist Government, which was freshest and most accurate, the Provisional leaders had not even contemplated a revolution. Minister Stevens, who is perfectly trustworthy and reliable, himself said that he had no part in any conspiracy, and that he gave no encouragement whatever of support in case of revolution. Based upon the complete reports to the State Department, Mr. Foster makes the following statement with reference to the action of the United States troops:

During the 14th, 15th, and most of the 16th, the two parties confronted each other in angry hostility, with every indication of an armed conflict at any moment. It was not until late in the afternoon of Monday, the 16th, after request for protection had been made by many citizens of the United States residing in Honolulu, that a force of marines was landed from the Boston, by direction of the minister, and in conformity with the standing instructions which for many years have authorized the naval forces of the United States to cooperate with the minister for the protection of the lives and property of American citizens in case of imminent disorder. The marines, when landed, took no part whatever toward influencing the course of events. Their presence was wholly precautionary, and only such disposition was made of them as was calculated to subvert the particular end in view. They were distributed that night between the legation and the consulate, where they occupied inner courts and a private hall rented for their accommodation. Beyond a sentry at the door of each post, and the occasional appearance of an officer passing from one post to another, no demonstration whatever was made by the landed forces, nor was the uniform of the United States visible upon the streets. They thus remained, isolated and inconspicuous, until after the success of the Provisional Government and the organization of an adequate protective force thereunder.

There is not the slightest indication that at any time prior to such formal recognition, in full accord with the long-established rule and invariable precedents of this Government, did the United States minister take any part in promoting the change, either by intimidating the Queen or by giving assurance of support to the organizers of the Provisional Government.

The immediate cause of the change is clearly seen to have been the unconstitutional and intemperate acts of the Queen herself in attempting to coerce her responsible ministers and to annul the existing constitution and replace it arbitrarily by another of her own choice.

President Harrison also, after a thorough examination of the evidence, makes the following statement:

It has been the policy of the Administration not only to respect, but to encourage the continuance of an independent government in the Hawaiian Islands so long as it afforded suitable guaranties for the protection of life and property and maintained a stability and strength that gave adequate security against the domination of any other power. The moral support of this Government has continually manifested itself in the most friendly diplomatic relations.

The overthrow of the monarchy was not in any way promoted by this Government, but had its origin in what seems to have been a reactionary and revolutionary policy on the part of Queen Liliuokalani, which put in serious peril not only the large and preponderating interests of the United States in the islands, but all foreign interests, and indeed the decent administration of civil affairs and the peace of the islands.

From the evidence taken before the Committee on Foreign Affairs I find the statement of the committee of safety, all of whom were present at the meeting of January 16, 1893. All these men upon oath testify that Mr. Stevens gave no promise of support, and that they expected none.

STATEMENT OF PERSONS PRESENT AT MEETING OF COMMITTEE OF SAFETY JANUARY 16.

We, the undersigned, hereby depose and say that we were present at the meeting of safety at the residence of Henry Waterhouse on the night of Monday, January 16, last.

That at such meeting no suggestion was made nor expectation expressed that the United States troops would assist in the overthrow of the Queen or the establishment of the Provisional Government.

That at no time during such meeting did Mr. Soper or any other member thereof go to Mr. Stevens's house, nor did Mr. Soper or any other member of such meeting report that they had seen Mr. Stevens and that he had assured them of the support of the Boston's men.

That the statement of F. Wundenberg upon this subject and others, as published in connection with Mr. Blount's report, are misleading and untrue.

[SEAL.]

THOS. W. HOBSON, Notary Public.

The downfall of the Royalist Government would have occurred, Mr. President, and the American element would have been victorious had the American minister and Admiral Walker been at the other side of the globe. In fact our war ship, the Boston had sailed for a two weeks' cruise on the 4th day of January, with Minister Stevens as a guest on board, and they were entirely ignorant that a revolution had occurred or was likely to occur. It was one of these natural occurrences which come of themselves when the time is ripe for them; and there is no denying the fact that the time was ripe for Anglo-Saxon supremacy in the Hawaiian Islands. It is folly to talk about the republic being set up against the will of the great mass of the people.

Mr. President, the great mass of the people there never had a will. A large class of the natives are dissolute and thriftless. The Asiatic population constitute a large part of the population, but they occupy the same relation to the Hawaiian Government that they maintain in the United States. They are there for what they can make, and when they are through they expect to return to their native land. They care not what form of Government exists, so long as they get their money, and they, like the large mass of the native population, are not anxious to fight for the Royalist cause. A single regiment of American troops would capture a hundred thousand of them; and it is safe to say that two years ago they were very willing to see the new Government succeed the old one. The more intelligent and enterprising natives were then and are now sympathizers with the Republic. They see in the future a more liberal Government, more general prosperity, and a brighter future. The only mistake made by this Administration was in trying to undo what had been done by the people of the islands. One of the commissioners told me here that he held a long conversation with Paul Neuman, the ex-Queen's counsel, on the day of their departure for the States, in which Neuman himself stated that monarchy was dead in the islands. They had recognized that for some time, and they knew that annexation must come; but he was going to Washington to see that in the transfer the Queen's interests would be looked after. He would have been entirely satisfied with a pension for her of $20,000 per year. It is folly for us to contend for what the white population and the intelligent natives do not want.

The Republic, Mr. President, is established. In a preamble to a resolution introduced a few days since, I stated that the people on the islands had established a Republic "with institutions substantially similar to our own." This seems to have worried the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who took occasion in an elaborate speech to compare in all minute particulars the constitution of the two countries. It is not necessary, Mr. President, to strain the meaning of the word substantial. No republic was ever formed upon the downfall of a monarchy with a perfect constitution, or which allowed unrestricted franchise. Not even France. And never has our Government before refused to extend her sympathy to a young Republic, attempting to keep in touch with the spirit of the age. We shall yet extend our sympathy to Hawaii; but I presume the Republic will live if the Senate fails to do anything.

Mr. President, those people may be restricted in their franchise now. They were restricted under the monarchy also. They are as well satisfied with their privileges under the new as under the old. As time goes on greater privileges will be granted them. They are, as a Republic, substantially like us. They have a President, which is a long step in advance of the old-time heathen King. They have a constitution and humane laws for the protection of the people. They have their Congress, and their judicial system, with higher and lower courts, with magistrates, and trial by jury. They have good land laws, public charities, and an excellent system of public schools. All these things, Mr. President, in a general way, are pointing in the direction not only of a Republic, but of a Republic like our own. And the knowledge of such progress should command the sympathy and encouragement of the American people, and they do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota will suspend, that the Chair may lay before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I am strongly in favor of the annexation of Hawaii. It is to be regretted that a question of so great interest and concern to the people of the United States should be invested with the feeling of animosity or partisanship, so that men are blinded to the real merits of the case under consideration. To my mind there is no reason whatever why Senators should not join in the universal and enthusiastic demand for annexation expressed by the people. Every philanthropic and humanitarian organization in city or village throughout this broad land has spoken in unmistakable terms for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands; for the Republic and against the obsolete and effete monarchy; for freedom and against tyranny; for the triumph of Christian civilization and against the heathen orgies of barbarism. We are part of the American people and are supposed to partake of something of the "esprit de corps," having inherited the love of freedom from the cradle of our own national liberty. Our sympathy and fellow-feeling are with our own flesh and blood of the Anglo-Saxon race who have marched only to victory during two thousand years, and whose victories have universally ushered in the dawn of higher civilization. The conquering is a guaranty of progress in the improvement of man and in the establishment of good government; and it is, therefore, but natural that American citizens should express themselves so sympathetically in a contest wherein our kindred are participants.

I can not but feel that the strongest American supporters of the Queen's restoration are in heart secretly rejoicing that the Queen and her Government belong to the past and that a sister Republic is to replace them. This is not a question for partisan politics and the attempt to make it such will very soon reveal the fact that the people are on one side, regardless of party, and a few Government officials on the other.

This discussion, Mr. President, was thrust upon our consideration in February, 1893, by the appearance in Washington of five commissioners from Hawaii, who had come to negotiate a treaty of annexation with the United States. The nation was astir as these men approached Washington, and the national heart beat in sympathy with them. A revolution in Hawaii was nothing new or strange. Revolutions had occurred before, and annexation had been publicly discussed for more than a quarter of a century. But now, at last, it was thought, the union would be consummated. There was little objection upon the part of Democrats then, except as in connection with the tariff question. But when it began to be whispered abroad that the President would withdraw the treaty and oppose annexation, the party fell into line and have since been quite united. Be it to the credit, however, of the party papers that they have come out boldly in defense of liberty and popular American sentiment.

There is good ground, Mr. President, for the interest Americans have manifested in the Hawaiian Islands. They are ours—not by right of discovery, but for the stronger reason that we have made them what they are—a civilized nation, similar to other well-ordered Governments of the earth. The history of Hawaii can not be written without American sacrifice and enterprise appearing upon every page. In 1819 four clergymen, one carpenter, one printer, and one physician, with their wives and children, left Boston for the islands. After a long voyage, by way of the Horn, they reached their destination in safety in the spring of 1820. Beyond the few ships which had stopped for trade purposes, they were the first to make the acquaintance of the natives. They found them a race of blacks, living in a state of barbarism, blood-thirsty, naked, ignorant, and homeless.

King Kamehameha I had just completed a conquest of the islands, so that all were subject to one chief. Had anyone then told them that in thirty years they would behold a nation Christianized and enjoying the blessings of good government they would have considered it incredible. And yet such a change took place. This change is not the work of England or of France, but American wholly. Self-sacrificing people gave a million and a half of their money for Christian churches and schools. Our enterprise established her business and commerce. American brain furnished her educational institutions and her laws. Her Government, though under the native rulers, was supported by the advice and wisdom of American missionaries. This the world knows, and by common consent has accorded us privileges in the domestic affairs of the islands, which would be granted to no other nation. For more than forty years the people have enjoyed the blessings of an enlightened government. In Hawaii tropical fruits and other products under a genial clime are produced in abundance. Cities, substantial and beautiful, adorn her valleys and hills, while her people enjoy churches, schools, colleges, and the blessings of culture the same as in America. Certainly a phenomenal change has taken place.

At a public celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the Christian workers who came to the islands in 1837, in response to the gift of a Bible by one of the prominent citizens, the King paid this tribute to the blessings of Christian civilization:

The volume you present me in behalf of the American Bible Society, and the letter with which it is accompanied, I receive with a mingled feeling of pleasure and reverence. When I remember the moral illumination and the sense of social propriety which have spread throughout these islands, in proportion as the Holy Scriptures have been circulated, I can not but admire and respect the human agency through which Providence has effected this benign purpose. But of all the members of the institution, there is none with whom I would more gladly find myself in communication than the secretary, whose labors have won for him a name among Christian philanthropists which might excite a world to emulation.

I will not attempt to echo the tone of fervent admiration and gratitude with which you allude to the happy changes effected by the dissemination of God's holy Word; but from the position I occupy the facts meet me whichever way I turn my eyes. I see them every day and every hour. I see the principles taking root among my people that were unknown and unintelligible to them at that dark period of our religious history to which you have referred. They have now a standard by which to judge of themselves and of each other as members of society.

Without that standard no law but the law of autocratic power could have ruled them. Its absence would have rendered the gift of free institutions such as they now enjoy a worse than useless act of magnanimity on the part of my predecessors. The commerce and intercourse with other countries to which we owe our present prosperity would have been checked by numberless difficulties. In one word, we see through all our relations the effects of those operations and principles inculcated by this sacred volume. I should be wanting to myself did I not express the gratification I feel in seeing here some of those who were first to labor in the vineyard. Although they look for their reward elsewhere, they will not reject my passing tribute of respect. Their labor has been long and their anxiety great, but their constancy and patience have equaled the emergency.

The result of their life's work may disappoint them if they judge it by the anticipation of their more sanguine years. Yet in their decline of life they see some of the fruits they prayed for, and they will not complain when they remember that the measure of their success is from above. Allow me to thank you for your present, and through you to express my kindest acknowledgment to the American Bible Society.

What better or more glowing tribute, Mr. President, can be paid to the 174 missionaries who represent our Christian Government and who gave their lives to Christianize Hawaii?

Such are the noble words of a heathen king who had witnessed with his own eyes the marvelous transformation among his own people. Such a generous declaration is in striking contrast to some very remarkable statements made by my colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW] in a speech published in the RECORD of the 5th instant, but which was delivered on July 2 last. I have looked long and anxiously for this speech to appear in print, Mr. President, and I had finally concluded its author was ashamed of it and had consigned it to oblivion. With remarkable sagacity and foresight it was suppressed until after the political campaign of last fall and the legislative contest of the winter had passed by. I am glad to say to the Senate that the speech does not represent the sentiment of the people of our State or that of his own party.

He speaks, Mr. President, of missionary efforts as follows:

The representatives of Christian nations who entered the Sandwich Islands with Captain Cook and his followers have taught some of the natives to read, write, and cipher, and to wear a good deal of unnecessary clothing, which has diminished their power of resistance to disease by relaxing their systems, and have introduced their special and insidious diseases, corrupting the blood and transmitting corruption to the progeny.

And again he says:

The missionaries have not only looked out for their morals but for their property. They long ago succeeded in gaining title to nearly all the land, and now they have captured the Government, and set up a government of their own which has no resemblance whatever to what we call a republic.

A little further on he says:

So the Europeans and Americans who went to that paradise of indolence for the purpose of converting its people to Christianity have secured a solid title to 1,062,000 acres, while the poor, miserable natives have the remnant, 257,000 acres. Let us hope that the dominant invaders have attended to the souls of the Kanakas, which was the main business of the crusade, for they have certainly paid strict attention to the incidental business of getting possession of three-quarters of the fertile lands.

This is enough, Mr. President, to mark the spirit of the speech, and probably the Senator himself. While the missionaries and Christianity are responsible for the refined and civilizing influences infused into the Kanaka race, which means pure lives, education, Christian culture, the home, the sanctity of marriage, the best society, the school, and the church, they are in no way responsible for the introduction of rum and the countless vices which a certain kind of civilization insists upon introducing into every heathen nation. Nor are they responsible for the introduction of that class of citizens who invariably follow in the wake of missionary efforts, who seek only wealth, and who in the case of the Sandwich Islands have succeeded in appropriating lands and enriching themselves at the expense of the natives. Neither the missionaries nor their sons, with very few exceptions, have become men of great wealth.

Such reflections, Mr. President, upon the sacrificing efforts of Hawaiian pioneers can well be met by this heathen King and many of his associates, who seem very capable of instructing this Senator in the principles of ethics. There is ample opportunity, and the subject is sufficiently broad for the Senator to meet and discuss the arguments for annexation without indulging in a tirade against the work of pioneer missionaries.

Very few Senators, Mr. President, seemed to be worried over the annexation of Alaska to the United States. It is almost as far away, fully as difficult to defend in time of war, of no great commercial advantage, and almost of no value as compared with the Hawaiian Islands. There is every reason why these islands should be ours. We gave them civilization; our nation colonized them, and gave them their Government. American wealth and enterprise are to-day the backbone of the islands, and nearly nine-tenths of the invested capital is American. The following table shows the amount of capital invested by different nations in the islands:

Next to Great Britain the islands get more of the Pacific Coast trade than any other nation; the islands are midway on the ocean route from our coast to Australia; are valuable as a coaling station, and are the key to military control of the Pacific; they are of more benefit commercially to the United States in one year than Alaska will be in a lifetime; they give us more than we receive; they are and have been practically under the protection of the United States for a half century.

It has been our policy, Mr. President, to brook no interference with the islands by other nations. In a North American Review article by the Hawaiian minister, Mr. Thurston, I notice some very pointed quotations from the Presidents of the United States and others with reference to our policy, which I will read. The first is by President Tyler in his address to Congress in 1842:

It can not but be in conformity with the wishes of the Government and people of the United States that this community . . . should be respected, and all its rights strictly and conscientiously regarded; . . . while its nearer approach to this continent, and the intercourse which American vessels have with it . . . could not but create dissatisfaction on the part of the United States at any attempt by another power to take possession of the islands. . . . Considering, therefore, that the United States possesses so very large a share of the intercourse with those islands, it is deemed not unfit to make the declaration that their Government seeks, nevertheless, no exclusive control over the Hawaiian Government, but is content with its independent existence, and anxiously wishes for its security and prosperity. Its forbearance in this respect, under the circumstances of the very large intercourse of their citizens with the islands, would justify this Government . . . in making a decided remonstrance against the adoption of an opposite policy by any other power.

President Taylor, in his message in 1849, said:

The position of the Sandwich Islands with reference to the territory of the United States on the Pacific . . . renders their destiny peculiarly interesting to us. It is our duty to encourage the authorities of these islands in their efforts to improve and elevate the moral and political conditions of the inhabitants. . . . We could in no event be indifferent to their passing under the dominion of any other power. . . . And it is to be hoped that no one of them will attempt to interpose obstacles to the entire independence of the islands.

President Fillmore, in his message of 1851, uses these words:

Long before the events which have of late imparted so much importance to the possessions of the United States on the Pacific we acknowledged the independence of the Hawaiian Government. This Government was first in taking that step, and several of the leading powers of Europe immediately followed. We were influenced in this measure by the existing and prospective importance of the islands as a place of refuge and refreshment for our vessels, and by the consideration that they lie in the course of the great trade which must at no distant day be carried on between the western coast of North America and eastern Asia.

President Andrew Johnson, in 1868, said:

It is known and felt by the Hawaiian Government and people that their Government and institutions are feeble and precarious, and that the United States, being so near a neighbor, would be unwilling to see the islands pass under foreign control. Their prosperity is continually disturbed by expectations and alarms of unfriendly political proceedings. . . . A reciprocity treaty, while it could not materially diminish the revenues of the United States, would be a guaranty of the good will and forbearance of all nations until the people of the islands shall of themselves, at no distant day, voluntarily apply for admission into the Union.

These views, Mr. President, were shared and expressed even more vigorously by Mr. Blaine as Secretary of State in 1891 and 1892, and also in 1892. In a dispatch of 1892 he uses these words:

. . . This Government has on previous occasions been brought face to face with the question of a protectorate over the Hawaiian group. It has, as often as it arose, been set aside in the interests of such commercial union as would give Hawaii the highest advantages and at the same time strengthen its independent existence as a sovereign State.

The United States was one of the first among the great nations to take active interest in upbuilding Hawaiian independence and the creation of political life for its people. It has consistently endeavored, and with success, to enlarge the material prosperity of Hawaii. On such an independent basis it proposes to be equally unremitting in its efforts hereafter to maintain and develop the advantages that have accrued to Hawaii, and draw closer the ties which imperatively unite her to the great body of the American Commonwealth.

In this line of action the United States does its simple duty both to Hawaii and itself, and it can not permit such obvious neglect of national interest as would be involved by silent acquiescence in any movement looking to a lessening of those amenities, and the substitution of alien and hostile interests.

It firmly believes the position of the Hawaiian Islands, as a key to the dominion of the American Pacific, demands neutrality, to which end it will earnestly cooperate with the native Government; and if, through any cause, neutrality should be found by Hawaii impracticable, this Government would then unhesitatingly meet the altered situation by seeking a vowedly an American solution of the grave issues presented.

All these men, Mr. President, express the views of the American people, and hint strongly at the advisability of annexation. There seemed to be then and there is now a clear perception of the commercial importance of those islands. In order that there shall be no doubt as to this matter I will give from the Hawaiian Annual, a publication of the Hawaiian Government, some important facts as to our commerce.

From these tables it will be seen that nearly 83 per cent of the island imports for 1892 were from the United States. Only 8 per cent came from Great Britain, the nation which is always casting a covetous eye upon Hawaii. No wonder that the Pacific Coast realize the necessity of maintaining fair trade relations with the islands.

There has been considerable discussion, Mr. President, about the reciprocity treaty with the islands, especially since they were by the late revenue act exempt from paying the revenue duty on sugar. It is stated that we are losers to the amount of $5,000,000 per year. In view of the cession of Pearl Harbor the granting of such a concession was nothing more than just and fair. But aside from this, the reciprocity treaty has redounded tenfold to the interest of our own country. I recently received a letter from Mr. Frank P. Hastings, Hawaiian chargé d'affaires in this city, a part of which I shall quote. He says:

[Personal.]

HAWAIIAN LEGATION, Washington, D. C., July 10, 1894.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As a United States consular officer residing at the islands continuously from July, 1877, less than one year after the treaty went into effect, until 1890, when I resigned from the service, I kept careful watch over the trade between the two countries. Until 1890, when the McKinley bill went into effect, it was mutually beneficial to both countries. Since then it is a well-known fact that Hawaii has been the loser though she has kept inviolate her treaty obligations.

In return for the sugar and rice, the principal products of the islands sent to the United States, we have bought the lumber from their forests, the coal from their mines, the flour and grain from their farmers and mills, the butter and cheese from their dairies, the fruits from their orchards and canneries, the grapes and wines from their vineyards and presses, the cloths from their looms, and manufactures of all and every kind from their factories. Even the sugars on our tables came back to us from the refineries of the United States. We produce nothing for home consumption excepting a few fruits and vegetables, have no factories or manufactures except those for making raw sugars or hulling rice, but import almost everything from the United States.

We are not, and never have been, commercial competitors and will not be until the Pacific Coast of the United States shall raise sugars sufficient for home consumption. The fruits we raise for export, principally bananas and pineapples, in no way enter into competition in your markets with the fruits raised on the Pacific Coast. On the contrary, they furnish the consumer there with a better and cheaper article than can be obtained from Mexico or Central America. The same may be said of coffee, which is a growing industry.

As the representative in the United States Senate of one of those great States which is destined to form a part of that great empire that is fast building up in the West, in the commercial system of which Hawaii already forms an outlying part, I desire to call your special attention to the great contrast in the conditions existing in Hawaii to-day and those in Cuba, a much nearer foreign neighbor in the south. I quote from pages 772 and 773 of the Morgan report in relation to the Hawaiian Islands:

"While Hawaii has, under the fostering influences of the United States, developed from a state of barbarism in the beginning of this century to a condition of universal education unknown in any other part of the world, Cuba has been four hundred years demonstrating the problem of how not to advance. Within less than 100 miles of the United States, and receiving from this country nearly its entire revenue, amounting to, say, $100,000,000 per annum, there is not the first trace of Americanism to be found in the whole island.

"If you ask my opinion as to why this is so, I answer because of the 'Americanism' which has been instilled into Hawaii, even to its lowest strata. And if that Americanism shall be allowed to grow and increase under the fostering influences of a close commercial and political union or relationship with the United States, Hawaii will make another star in the galaxy not less bright, and repay tenfold the favors that have been lavished upon her."

The author of the above opinion has lived in Hawaii since 1897, and spent three months of last year in Cuba.

Trusting that you will pardon so lengthy an epistle, believe me, my dear Senator,

Yours, very truly,

FRANK P. HASTINGS.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

In the article of Mr. Thurston referred to I find the following interesting résumé of the advantage accruing to the United States under the reciprocal trade arrangements:

RÉSUMÉ OF UNITED STATES GAINS UNDER THE TREATY.

First—Duties remitted by Hawaii	$3,500,990
Second—Profits made and property acquired by Americans
1. From increase of sugar production:
(1) Increase of sugar property owned by Americans	23,235,510
(2) Profits made by Americans out of sugar	14,830,858
(3) Commissions paid American agents	3,000,000
2. From increase of exports from the United States to Hawaii, profits on $32,447,510	$3,244,751
3. From increase in shipbuilding for Hawaiian trade:
(1) Profit on building vessels for the interisland trade	100,350
(2) Profit on building vessels for Hawaiian foreign trade	218,000
(3) Value of American shipping engaged in Hawaiian trade	2,636,000
4. From freights earned by American ships:
(1) Foreign freights	7,825,441
(2) Interisland freights	1,152,000
5. Property in Hawaii acquired by Americans:
(1) Incorporated property (other than sugar and ships), which are enumerated above	3,973,506
(2) Unincorporated property (other than sugar and ships)	5,000,000
6. Premiums collected by American insurance companies	2,189,350
Total American gains under treaty	70,973,464
Deduct American losses under treaty	42,680,798
American net profit under treaty	28,292,666

This does not include the profits to thousands of American merchants who are indirectly benefited by reason of exports to the islands, nor the enormous sum received by American vessels in carrying passengers. Nearly all vessels employed in the carrying trade of the islands are American. The total American vessels given is 195, English 42, and all others 30.

But, Mr. President, in conclusion, waiving for the time being the question of annexation, we are asked by the provision of the bill before us to appropriate $500,000 toward a cable to the islands. In view of the foregoing figures as to our commerce there seems to me to be but one side to the question. For a quarter of a century our commerce has been crippled for want of speedy communication, not to speak of the advantage to the Government and citizens generally of such a convenience. Whatever views Senators may entertain as to the Monroe doctrine, or any other doctrine, we should not hesitate to act in such an important matter as this. Great Britain has already been negotiating with the islands regarding the cable, and will probably get a concession on some terms if we do not take steps very soon. Her possessions now encircle the globe. With a well-defined policy and a steady determination she has planted her flag on continent and island until we to-day are almost surrounded by a cordon of English possessions. Hawaii alone remains to complete her circle. And it is more than probable that we shall allow this prize to fall into British hands. I have one hope and that is the patriotism and energy of the people.

With the construction of a canal across the Isthmus, which will soon be done, the importance of commercial control of the Hawaiian Islands will be greatly augmented. Now is the time to move, and the progressive spirit of the American people commands that we go forward. This is not a party question, but an American question; a question whether we shall lie supinely down and dream out our future, letting England complete her mastery of commerce, or whether we rise to the occasion and control the western seas.

I append an epitome of a very strong argument for annexation by Dr. Corwin, of Honolulu, as part of my remarks.

APPENDIX.

ELEVEN GOOD REASONS—DR. CORWIN'S ANNEXATION ARGUMENT—A FORMER PASTOR OF THE PORT STREET CHURCH ADDRESSES A CHICAGO MINISTERS' MEETING.

The Rev. Eli Corwin, D. D., pastor of the foreign residents' church (the Port Street Congregational) in Honolulu between the years 1868 and 1888, when Commissioner Thurston, Carter, and Castle, and Gen. S. C. Armstrong were boys in his parish, read a paper on "The Annexation of the Hawaiian Islands" before the Congregational ministers' meeting yesterday, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. He gave as among the more manifest reasons for the annexation of the islands to the United States the following:

1. These islands have been developed physically, financially, intellectually, socially, and spiritually chiefly by the American residents. A nation which our countrymen have created most naturally gravitates in this direction.

2. The Hawaiian people were, in the lifetime of a single generation, from 1830 to 1880, lifted up from abject barbarism to take their place among the civilized and Christianized nations of the earth almost solely through the labors and beneficent influence of the American religious community on the islands.

3. The American foreign residents and their children born on the islands have been the champions of civil as well as religious liberty for the native Hawaiians, and have been most influential in securing all the civil rights enjoyed by those who, little more than half a century ago, were degraded serfs, having no title to the lands they tilled or to the fruit of their toil, extorted from them by their kings and chiefs, who ruled them with a heartless tyranny.

4. Fully two-thirds of the property on the islands belong to the American residents, who have come into possession of it by intelligent and honest industry, and by developing the agricultural and commercial resources of that wonderful land; so that while they have been enriched the natives have not been impoverished, but have partaken of the general prosperity.

5. While the Americans, the Germans, the better class of progressive British, and some of the other foreign residents have been the staunchest advocates of civil and religious liberty, as they are now the most earnest advocates of annexation, another small class of British residents have been the leaders of a party of obstruction, jealous of American influence, advocating a retrogression toward absolutism in politics, and a lowering of the standards of morality which the missionaries and their children approved and illustrated. Notably during our civil war the English who sought to maintain the dominance of British influence favored the blotting out of American ideas from the Hawaiian constitution and the curtailing of the liberties of the people, as they now bitterly oppose annexation and plot to restore a justly deposed and detested monarchy.

6. The future of the islands as to political stability, financial prosperity, security of life and property, educational advancement, social culture, and spiritual progress depends very largely upon the supplanting of a thoroughly corrupt and untrustworthy monarchy, which has repeatedly broken the most positive promises and violated solemn oaths; has attempted to license the death-dealing opium traffic and to establish a demoralizing lottery among a people too easily led into the vice of gambling, and has patronized a retrogression toward the morally loathsome old heathen customs and a restoration of the horrid orgies of the ancient heathen worship.

7. The United States should promptly and heartily welcome the generous offer of the islands by the Government, not only because annexation is every way desirable for the islands, but because duty demands and parental instincts dictate that we throw our protecting arms about our own children, whose filial voice we recognize, and who, with a heroic loyalty alike to Hawaii and their fatherland, have staked everything upon this issue.

8. A clear prevision of this as the ultimate destiny of the islands has prompted all our great statesmen, without distinction of party, to guard the independence of this group till it should be ripe for an annexation. Now that the long-cherished and eagerly coveted fruit is ripe and ready to fall, it would indicate a paralysis of statesmanship not to reach out our hands to take it.

9. The contiguity of these islands to our western coast, the intimacy and growing importance of our commercial relations, their position as the halfway house at the grand crossing of our Pacific commerce, the extent of which but a few years hence no man can estimate; our need of them as a coaling station, which we can not afford to have under the control of a maritime rival; our need of them as a base of operations in conducting a war, whether with a South American, a European, or an Asiatic power, and our need of them as a central position from which to do our share of policing the Pacific in times of peace, guarding our growing trade from the piracy which already watches for such a prize; these all urge us in the imperative mood and the present tense to risk no further delay for which a too-late repentance can make no amends.

10. As a business transaction, it can not be bad policy to accept the generous offer, if by the outlay of three or four millions we may secure assets richly worth $12,000,000, with all the collateral advantages thrown in. Promptly to seize this opportunity is to secure a fortune. What folly, then, to delay when simply for the taking we may possess these priceless gems of the Pacific seas, these matchless emeralds in a coral setting. These jewels which the Old World monarchs are coveting are worth more than all the patronage our President has to dispense. Why spend one's time in hunting ducks and lading out political pap when it is time westward to let the old eagle fly? Oh, for one hour of a vigorous foreign policy! "Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand" in our weak diplomacy.

11. In the dark days of our nation's peril the American community on the Hawaiian Islands lavished of its treasures hundreds of thousands of dollars and gave the best and bravest of its young men that our flag might not be trailed in the dust. Coldly to repel them when they seek an alliance with their fatherland and lay the richest treasures at their feet is but poorly to repay them for their patriotism.

"At the strategic point where we pass from the limits of Occidental civilization to the borders of the semibarbarous Orient," continued the speaker, "there is a clashing of forces in which American and Asiatic ideas are contending for the mastery. Can Christian America be indifferent to the issue? The restoration of a rotten royalty and a maggot-infested monarchy that fairly smells to heaven, if not in the other direction, with its political putrescence, is a calamity to be resisted by every liberty-loving Hawaiian, though it should involve the expenditure of the last dollar of his money and the last drop of his blood. There come occasions when forcible resistance to tyrants is the first of Christian duties, and this is one of them."

The Inter-Ocean makes editorial comment on the above as follows:

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PREACHERS.

Among "the more manifest reasons for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States" yesterday assigned by the Rev. Dr. Corwin before the meeting of the Congregationalist ministers of Chicago, and approved by them, are those of kindred, of morals, and of justice.

It has been mainly by American missionaries and by the American traders and planters that the condition of the natives of Hawaii has been raised from that of serfs to that of freemen. The monarchy of Hawaii prior to 1830 was absolute, despotic, savage, and tyrannous. Neither life nor property was safe from the anger or the greed of the native kings. Between 1830 and 1860 the natives had been reclaimed from barbarism, imbued with ideas of freedom, taught the meanings of wages and of contracts, and inducted into the philosophy and practice of civilized trade and civilized agriculture, and this almost wholly by American influence.

Most of the Germans, British, and other foreigners who have become residents of the islands since 1850 have acted in concert with the Americans and with the more enlightened natives toward further limitations of the powers of the native monarchs and further extensions of the commercial, political, and religious liberties of the people. But there has been and still is a coterie of foreign residents, mainly of British origin, who are hostile to all political and moral progress, and specially hostile to progress in the direction of republicanism. These have sought to strengthen the powers of the native monarchs, to encourage the native population in its old-time habits of vice, and to obstruct alike the evangelical work of the churches and the political work of the party of progress. These British residents sought to enlist the Hawaiian monarchy in aid of the Confederacy during the time of our civil war. They now are rejoicing in the aid that President Cleveland's "my representative" is giving to the party of reaction and of hatred to Americanism.

So much for the morality of the situation. Kinship also pleads. Most of the men who conduct the business of Hawaii and make it a place fit for civilized people to dwell in are of American descent. They have converted lands that but a few decades ago were as valueless as those of Ashantee and Dahomey into flourishing plantations, or into populous villages or cities. While enriching themselves they have enriched the natives. They have been benefactors of the race.

Return to the rule of the native monarchs means depreciation of the property of our kinsmen in Hawaii, abridgements of their liberties; perhaps loss of all that they now possess. The monarchs of Hawaii have been swayed by all the vices of monarchy. Always vicious, they never have been intelligent. They have been as stupid as the Bourbons and as treacherous as the Stuarts. It is somewhat strange to find a President of the Republic of the United States of America using his personal influence in behalf of the perpetuation of such a dynasty.

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

Mr. CALL. I ask permission at this time to submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table, in the absence of objection.

Mr. CALL. Is it not necessary to read the resolution at the present time?

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the resolution read, so that we may know what we are to act upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the State of Florida and is engaged in business there and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress, and whether it owns, either directly or indirectly, any interest in newspapers published in the State, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, have been expended by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company to influence the legislation of Congress, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over and be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Kentucky consent to the introduction of a resolution of that character at this time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Kentucky was not in possession of the floor, but he would have no objection to the Senator from Florida introducing his resolution as often as he pleased. It seems to be a part of the hippodrome.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea;" agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ROBBINS, Mr. PIGOTT, and Mr. WHITE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 828) granting a pension to Julia E. Lock, formerly widow of the late Gen. Daniel McCook;

A bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Henry Halteman; and

A bill (S. 2736) for the immediate relief of the suffering poor of the District of Columbia.

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to make a request that one-half hour be devoted to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported at the close of the consideration of the bill now under consideration this afternoon, if there be time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am asked by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to yield to a request he intends to make with reference to the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the permission of the Senator from California, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate, in view of getting on with the work of the appropriation bills, that, without further debate, the vote may be taken upon the amendments then pending and upon the bill, say, at 2 o'clock to-morrow. At 3 o'clock to-morrow, by order of the Senate, resolutions relative to the death of the late Senator Stockbridge are to be presented; to-morrow will be Saturday, and I trust there will be no objection to the Senate coming to a vote without further debate upon the amendments to the bill and the bill itself at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; that is all I can do, Mr. President.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I have the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I beg pardon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from California yielded to me to submit a request.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Oregon desires to make a motion, or something of that kind, I have no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to make a few remarks on the pending bill for about five minutes.

Mr. WHITE. I simply desire to make a few remarks upon this matter. I shall not occupy the floor for any extended period of time, but I desire to submit some informal considerations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the question pending before the Senate has reference exclusively, as I understand it, to the propriety of appropriating $500,000 toward the laying of a cable to Honolulu, to whatever point upon those islands may be found desirable. Yet the discussion has broadened until there has been included not only the cable issue, not only the Hawaiian revolution, but also a variety of topics pertaining to annexation. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], who has just taken his seat, has even elaborately discussed the effect of missionary expeditions to the Hawaiian group, and has presented a far more delightful narration of the good that he asserts has been done than that which was afforded by his colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. President, if we trace the numerous controversies which have thus been tendered for investigation throughout their entire length and breadth, it is safe to say that this discussion will not terminate until the life of the present Congress expires. I shall briefly allude to two or three matters which have been debated rather fully, though not directly involved, and then shall say a word regarding the cable.

In the beginning permit me to observe that I see no reason to confound the submarine cable with other subjects. I see no reason for the conclusion that it is essential for us to favor the annexation of the Sandwich Islands, and to uphold Mr. Stevens and the missionaries in order to justify an inclination toward the construction of a cable. The propositions appear to me to be entirely dissimilar, and one does not at all depend upon the other.

In the first place, Mr. President, I will mention and comment upon the instructions which have been criticised by several Senators, and which were given by the Secretary of the Navy to Admiral Beardslee. Those instructions, so far as they are at all pertinent to this discussion, are worded thus:

Proceed with the United States ship Philadelphia with dispatch to Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands.

Your purpose as commander of the naval forces of the United States will be the protection of the lives and property of American citizens. In case of civil war in the islands you will extend no aid or support, moral or physical, to any of the parties engaged therein, but you will keep steadily in view that it is your duty to protect the lives and property of all such citizens of the United States as shall not by their participation in such civil commotions subject themselves to local laws, and thus forfeit their right in that regard to the protection of the American flag. An American citizen who during a revolution or insurrection in a foreign country participates in an attempt by force of arms or violence to maintain or overthrow the existing Government, or who aids in setting on foot a revolution or insurrection in such country, can not claim as matter of right that the Government of the United States shall protect him against the consequences of such act.

The attack upon these instructions was inaugurated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who, I am glad to see, is in his seat at this time. After prolonged discussion it now seems that there is not as much difference between Senators as was at first manifested. It is disclosed that the real contention now is what was meant by the instructions. I presume that no one will say that if an American citizen participates in an attempt to overthrow or maintain the Government in the Hawaiian Islands, and that long thereafter and as a consequence of his act some absurd and unprecedented penalty is sought to be visited upon him, he would forfeit his privilege as an American citizen to proper interference in his behalf. I apprehend that when Mr. Herbert used the language he employed he used it in the light of events which had taken place, and with which the whole country was then as now familiar. He was correct in assuming that strained interpretation would not be made by those whose conduct it was designed to influence.

I am not able to admit that any of the authorities which were cited by the Senator from Colorado to the slightest extent conflict with the obvious meaning of the rule laid down by the Secretary of the Navy. I find in a letter from Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, to Mr. Lowell, dated April 25, 1893, cited in 2 Wharton's International Law, page 453, the following:

Its [American citizenship] assumption implies the promise and the obligation to observe our laws at home, and peaceably as good citizens to assist in maintaining our faith abroad, without efforts to entangle us in internal troubles or civil discord with which we have not, and do not wish to have, anything to do. When an American citizen thus conducts himself, whether at home or abroad, he is entitled to the confidence of his Government and active support of all its officials.

It will be noted that the Secretary at that time, in defining that conduct of the American citizen which entitles the person pursuing it to the protection of this Government, stated that it was that which induced him to abstain from participating in internal troubles or civil discord. He drew no distinction between those who seek to maintain and those who endeavor to overthrow. We have a treaty with the Hawaiian Republic, that is, a treaty entered into with the preceding Government, and which is still in full force and effect, whereby our people are exempted from all kinds and descriptions of military duty. Hence, if an American citizen aids by force or violence either party to a Hawaiian revolution he does so without compulsion and at his own risk. Such is the rational reading and plain meaning of the instructions referred to.

Mr. President, I am free to concede that if the Government now in power in Hawaii chose to seize an American citizen and force him to render military service—to bear arms against his will—he would in such event forfeit nothing; but I do contend that if an American citizen sees fit to enlist under a foreign flag and to engage in war he is not protected from the consequences of that war—the reasonable, natural, ordinary consequences. I do not include remote consequence, cruelties, for instance, which a party successful in the conflict might attempt to impose, but I refer to the consequences commonly anticipated.

With this in view, I asked the Senator from Colorado, while engaged in making his remarks, whether he intended to maintain that if the Government of the United States found one of its citizens enlisted under the banner of Hawaii it was the duty of that Government to maintain and assist such citizen to the end that he might not be harmed in the progress of his military engagement. The Senator very promptly replied that he did not so contend. Thereupon it seemed to me that all the attacks upon these instructions necessarily fail, unless we are to give them the absurd reading that Mr. Herbert intended to advise that when an American citizen enters into the service of a foreign power any danger menacing him afterwards which might be but dimly traced to, or might find as its distant cause, his first engagement or the animosities thereby engendered, can not be averted by act of our Government. I do not understand that any such instruction was given, and under the circumstances of the case Admiral Beardslee can not so construe the language. Senators who do not view this matter as I do concede that an American joining the Dole forces may be slain in battle by revolutionists without the occurrence of any obligation on our part to save him. He may be shot down, they say, but must not be imprisoned. Revolutionists may kill him in conflict, but they can not capture him; or if they do capture him he must be released at once, to rejoin, no doubt, the army of the Government he is endeavoring to maintain. It results that the revolutionist must avoid taking American prisoners. I fail to detect the logic of this argument.

Mr. President, all instructions, as well as court opinions, are given in view of the facts of the particular case. In the present instance this Administration had, as I consider upon ample proof, come to the conclusion that United States officers under the inspiration of Mr. Stevens had not abstained from mingling in internal contention as they should have abstained, and as matters were somewhat disturbed, the Government having been but recently threatened by revolution, it was not unnatural that the Administration should caution its officers against a renewal of antecedent interference and should enjoin upon Admiral Beardslee the propriety of preventing any service by the marines of the United States in the interest of either party to a civil conflict. History shows that timely warnings are necessary. Some military men go abroad anxious for excitement and not thoroughly versed in international obligations. The instructions are all right. When the present Government was in the formative process those who are now condemning Mr. Cleveland did not find it advisable to insist that it was wrong to support a revolution and a matter of duty to sustain the existing condition.

Mr. President, my friends upon the other side of this question have urged upon us during this debate, as they urged at an earlier date, the propriety of the annexation of Hawaii. I do not propose to run over this matter in detail. In an address which I delivered here upon the 21st of February last I stated my views quite fully. However, in the light of the position which I am about to take with reference to the cable appropriation, I deem it well to anticipate any misunderstanding as to my position concerning annexation, and I shall very briefly reiterate what I have heretofore advanced against the carrying out of such a plan.

First, I am opposed to such annexation, because I believe that we are not in a condition to bring within our confines the elements which there exist. There are Europeans in Hawaii who would undoubtedly make valuable citizens if they saw fit to assume the obligations of that condition. The statistics furnished us vary somewhat; but I am willing to assume, and such must indeed be the fact, that a large majority of the Europeans upon the islands could qualify for citizenship. Much has been said in reference to the Portuguese who reside there. If these Portuguese belong to the class to which Portuguese citizens in California belong then I can assert with certainty that they would make valuable citizens and would contribute their proper share toward the maintenance and support of any Government and the advancement of the people. But when we put aside the European element, what do we encounter? What races constitute the preponderating population in these islands?

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] who spoke this morning stated—and I suppose he must know about it—that the native population has no will—the islander has no will of his own. The Senator gave this conclusion as a reason showing that we should not demand as a condition precedent to annexation the acquiescence of all the people, that the people were of such a kind and character that they had no judgment, no discretion, could not be charged with willfulness, and yet, singularly enough, he followed this with the statement that, as the net result of the visits and teachings of the early missionary, the natives had been elevated (?) to their present happy state. I think that the missionaries have done far more good than the Senator seems to imply by this declaration. I will perhaps concede that if the people of the islands are reduced to a condition where they have no wish, no will—they are incapable of voluntary act—that they are happy; they certainly can not appreciate unhappiness. But will anyone contend that a population of that sort, whether it be a happy population or not, could be otherwise than detrimental to this Republic? Who desires fellow-citizens or neighbors thus constituted and disqualified?

Then we have the Japanese. It is said that there are now nearly 20,000 Japanese in Hawaii—though, according to the statistics furnished by Mr. Blount, there were, when the census upon which he relied was taken, but a little over half that number—but there are some 20,000 in the islands at this hour. There are likewise on hand almost as many Chinese. Mr. President, we have passed most drastic legislation against Mongolian immigration. We have endeavored to keep Chinamen away from the United States; we have affirmed that their presence is not only hostile to the best interests of this Government but may be positively destructive of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from California please suspend for a moment, to enable the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the message is read I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that at the hour of half past 2 o'clock to-morrow the Senate will, without further debate, proceed to vote upon the then pending amendments to the pending appropriation bill and upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that at half past 2 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed to vote on the amendments to the pending bill and on the bill? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The message from the President of the United States will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a copy of a telegraphic dispatch just received from Mr. Willis, our minister to Hawaii, with a copy of the reply thereto which was immediately sent by the Secretary of State.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1895.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. Let the dispatches be read, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. Yes, let everything that accompanies the message of the President be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The dispatches will be read.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

COOPER.

United States Dispatch Agent,
Post-Office Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Forward following by first steamer to A. S. Willis, United States minister, Honolulu:

If American citizens were condemned to death by a military tribunal, not for actual participation in reported revolution, but for complicity only, or if condemned to death by such a tribunal for actual participation but not after open fair trial with opportunity for defense, demand delay of execution, and in either case report to your Government evidence relied on to support death sentence.

Mr. Willis to Mr. Gresham.

[Telegram.]

HONOLULU, January 30, 1895 (San Francisco, February 6, 1895).

Revolt over 9th. Casualties: Government one, royalist two. Court-martial convened 17th; has tried 38 cases; 200 more to be tried, and daily arrests. Gullick, former minister, and Seward, minister, major in Federal Army, both Americans, and Rickard, Englishman, sentenced to death; all heretofore prominent in politics. T. B. Walker, formerly in the United States Army, imprisonment for life and $5,000 fine. Other sentences not disclosed, but will probably be death. Requested copies of record for our Government to determine its duty before final sentence, but no answer yet. Bitter feeling and threats of mob violence which arrival of Philadelphia yesterday may prevent. Liliuokalani made prisoner on 16th; on 24th relinquished all claims and swore allegiance Republic, imploring clemency for Hawaiians. Government replies to Liliuokalani, "This document can not be taken to exempt you in the slightest degree from personal and individual liability" for complicity in late conspiracy. Denies that she had any rights since January 14, 1893, when she attempted new constitution. "Fully appreciates her call to disaffected to recognize Republic, and will give full consideration to her unselfish appeal for clemency" for participants.

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from California allow me?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, nothing can so strongly emphasize the need of the most direct and swiftest communication between this country and the Sandwich Islands as the documents which have just been presented to the Senate. What events, tragic and melancholy, may occur before the dispatches which have been sent from the State Department to our minister reach him no man can tell. I should say that every Senator here, whatever may have been his feeling heretofore about the situation in the Hawaiian Islands and the controversies which have arisen, must now feel the deepest regret that the Government there, under whatever emergencies it may be, is subjected to any temptation to a line of ultra severity such as might not be sustained by the humane sentiment of the world. I only wish that the agitation of this cable project had come earlier, in order that the message sent by the Secretary of State to our minister might be communicated to the authorities of the Sandwich Islands, so that extreme measures, such as will not be justified by American sentiment, will not be resorted to.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from California allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from Maine, as I did to his colleague.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague did not mention the fact that the date of this dispatch from Mr. Willis is nine or ten days ago or a little more, and that the dispatch has just reached here; and my colleague did not state, what is true, that the steamer for the Sandwich Islands sailed last Tuesday morning, I think, and that another will not sail for a week after, and that it will be ten days at least before that direction of the President of the United States to his minister will reach him, making about twenty or thirty days to get any notice, no matter how important the event, to his minister and from his minister. I think that emphasizes very distinctly the importance of a cable.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wish to interfere with the speech of the Senator from California, but I hope he will allow me to say a word about the President's message.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly. I have yielded to other Senators, and will not discriminate.

Mr. TELLER. I notice in the report of our minister that two of those people are spoken of as Americans. They are not said to be American citizens, and I should presume they are citizens of the Hawaiian Republic. I observe that in the dispatch which the Government sends to the minister they speak of the protection of American citizens. I know we have no right, treating those people as a nation, to say that they may not proceed against their own citizens, if their own citizens have committed crimes against their law, but I think it would be well, and I should like to make that suggestion, for the Government of the United States to go to the extent of asking the Hawaiian Government to suspend all harsh operations, such as inflicting the death penalty even upon their own citizens, until the Government of the United States can confer with them with reference thereto.

Mr. President, we went through a great civil war, the greatest known to history, and we did not find it necessary to execute anybody when we got through.

Mr. HALE. Not a single man.

Mr. TELLER. Not a single person. I do not think the émeute, or whatever it is called, which has occurred in Hawaii will justify those people in the harsh methods on which they seem to have started. I hope the Government of the United States will take prompt steps to see that those people, although they may be citizens of Hawaii, are not executed in a manner that will shock the civilized world.

I do not know that we could afford to give any direction to the State Department, but if there are any members of the Committee on Foreign Relations present, and I see one before me, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], I should like to suggest that the committee consult the Department, and see if some suggestions can not be made by our Government in a friendly way, and in a proper way, to the Government of Hawaii to the effect that they do not proceed to the extreme measure which it is indicated in the dispatch from the minister that they may take.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WHITE. I give notice that even unanimous consent on the part of the Senate will not get the floor again. I yield to the Senator from Washington, however. I shall be brief in what I have to say.

Mr. SQUIRE. With the permission and by the courtesy of the Senator from California I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] whether he is in favor of allowing the people who have been interfering with the existence of the Government in Hawaii to go absolutely untouched, free, or whether his distinction is that he wishes them to be tried by a civil tribunal and not by a military tribunal.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care how the Government there shall proceed. That has nothing to do with the question. When the Mexican people had obtained control of affairs in Mexico, and we supposed they were about to execute Maximilian, the Government of the United States intervened in a friendly way, and said "we do not think you ought to inflict the death penalty." That is all I propose that our Government shall say now. We can not say that the Hawaiian Government shall not punish those people; we can not say they shall not execute them if they see fit; but a suggestion from the Government of the United States will be followed. There is no danger of its not being heeded.

Mr. FRYE. But they can hang every American citizen in the Hawaiian Islands before we can get any suggestions to them.

Mr. TELLER. I am afraid that is true.

Mr. HALE. That we can not help.

Mr. TELLER. We can not help that until we get a cable.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is one feature of the Hawaiian controversy which should commend itself to those who desire protracted discussion, namely, that when a particular branch of the subject becomes threadbare we are invariably furnished with something new. I will say a word with reference to the dispatches which have just been read as soon as I conclude my summary of the annexation question.

When interrupted I was attempting to show the Senate that the population of Hawaii is not fitted for our affiliation. We have endeavored to exclude Chinese, and there are but a hundred and six or a hundred and seven thousand Chinese now in the United States. Yet it is proposed to acquire territory which contains a Chinese and Japanese population amounting to over 40,000 souls. It would not be beyond the truth to say that the Chinese and Japanese population which would thus be added to that of the United States equals two-fifths of the Mongolians within our borders. The people whom I in part represent have for years been striving to exclude this competition, and a few misguided individuals in different parts of our country have, because of the prevalence of a determined sentiment antagonistic to Chinese attempted to drive them away by violence. So dangerous to society had their presence become that both nations reached the conclusion that it was essential that Chinese immigration should be prohibited. When we reflect that such has been our legislation and such our history, without a break in the continuity of the story, it is manifest that it would be utterly inconsistent and even iniquitous to absorb the very elements against whose presence we have so long and so earnestly contended.

Why should we invite those whom we have driven away? Will the Chinamen from Hawaii be any better than the Chinamen who have come from Hongkong? The Japanese population of the islands is not of an exalted character. It is a coolie population. It is a population formed of the very lowest class of Japanese subjects, and yet Senators tell me that they are willing to bring within this Republic a ~~sex~~ contribution wholly incapacitated for intelligent government. The claim made by the present Republic of Hawaii, if it is such, is that all save the selected few are not fit to vote, and the argument of Mr. Stevens, when defending his course in a speech made in Boston, is based upon the assumption that the vast majority of the island inhabitants are grossly ignorant.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] reiterates that statement to-day. He tells us that the natives have no will. They are perhaps human, made in the image and likeness of their Maker, but according to my friend the infusion of missionary principles has left the convert without the ability to think or to act pursuant to desire. Hence, it is urged they need not be consulted.

Are we, then, anxious for a population of that kind, even though it be true that the island soil is productive, even though it be true, as stated by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], that all one has to do in the Hawaiian group to make a living is to plant a banana and steal a fish line?

Is it wise to annex territory thus inhabited? Have we not problems pressing upon us every day, appealing to us every hour with reference to the incapacity of many who are now in the United States? Do we not know that our immigration laws are being daily made stronger, so that we may be able to exclude those who are not fitted by disposition, education, or surroundings to appreciably share in the blessings of that equal liberty which can be safely exercised only by men of sound mind and honest heart? Does anyone pretend to me that the presence of these people will add to our strength or our glory? Grant that the few who set up and maintain, and who in my opinion will maintain, that Republic are educated gentlemen, persons guided by the best of motives and possessing all of the qualifications for American citizenship; still the limited number can not be included without the presence also of the vast horde of incompetents. Mr. President, the undesirable element now here can not be augmented without increased peril.

Someone has suggested that the islands be annexed to the State of California. Mr. President, think of it! Islands as remote from the Pacific coast as Ireland is from New York. Annexed to dominate our politics, to control our elections, to dictate who shall sit in our executive chair, who shall compose our legislature, who shall go to Congress! Where is the guaranty that none but qualified citizens shall vote? I am opposed to the annexation of any country within which the preponderating element of the population is ignorant, or criminal, or corrupt. I do not wish to see as a part of this Republic any land whatever where the vast majority are unlettered and unable to accurately and carefully weigh and truly decide the questions presented for their political adjudication!

These to me are determinative arguments. I can not avoid them. You may say that the Chinese and Japanese can not vote; you may, however unjustly, exclude the natives, but even then you do not meet the objection that I have urged against the incorporation of a community but a small portion of which knows anything of governmental affairs. Nor is it accurate to say, as stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], that the doctrines of the Democratic party have always been in favor of foreign acquisitions. It is not true, either, that Mr. Jefferson ever advocated the annexation of territory circumstanced as is Hawaii. Mr. Jefferson, in a letter to President Madison, dated April 27, 1809, which can be found in the fifth volume of Jefferson's Works, page 443, in speaking of Cuba, said:

It will be objected to our receiving Cuba that no limit can then be drawn to our future acquisitions. Cuba can be defended by us without a navy, and this develops the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should ever be accepted which would require a navy to defend it.

And so Mr. Frelinghuysen, at a later day, in stating the policy which had controlled our Government in this direction, said:

The policy of this Government, as declared on many occasions in the past, has tended toward avoidance of possessions disconnected from the main continent. Had the tendency of the United States been to extend territorial dominion beyond intervening seas, opportunities have not been wanting to effect such a purpose, whether on the coast of Africa, in the West Indies, or in the South Pacific. No such opportunity has been hitherto embraced, and but little hope could be offered that Congress, which must in the ultimate resort be brought to decide the question of such transmarine jurisdiction, would favorably regard such an acquisition as His Excellency proposes. At any rate, in its political aspect merely, this Government is unprepared to accept the proposition without subjection to such wishes as Congress and the people of the United States through Congress may see fit to express.

Thus has it been ever declared by our Department of State that it is contrary of our views of good policy to incorporate any section which can not be well defended without a navy. As I have stated, Mr. Jefferson placed his adhesion to the Cuban proposition distinctly upon the ground that no navy would ever be demanded for its protection because of its proximity to the mainland. Yet, sir, it is sought now to acquire dominion over islands more than 2,000 miles from our shores—lands whose defense would necessitate the employment of an independent and powerful navy.

This is an issue of policy. There is no analogy, as supposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], in the Alaskan acquisition. Alaska is a part of the mainland, separated from us, it is true, by the British possessions, but I imagine there never will be a race inhabiting that land which will care to contend in arms with our nation, or with which any foreign nation will ever care to engage. Alaska is by nature equipped for self-defense and even exclusion. It is valuable to us, perhaps, because of the minerals yet unmined and the many other productions useful to man which were so well and specifically described by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] in an elaborate and able presentation made here some days ago. But, however this may be, however difficult (and I recognize the difficulty of announcing any absolute rule upon a subject which after all is but a matter of policy), it is plain to me that it will add nothing to our dignity, our efficiency, our grandeur as a nation, or the liberties of our people to annex such a population as that which is contained within the Sandwich Islands.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from California a question. I have listened to what he has read and what he has stated so earnestly and forcibly to-day with great interest, and I believe the subject is one deserving of very serious consideration. I ask the Senator whether the doctrine laid down by him and toward which he has brought the support of the great names he has adduced would have prevailed had the conditions existing at the present day in regard to vessels of the Navy, both the commercial and military marine, existed in those earlier days of the Republic. It is well known and understood now that vessels of war can not proceed upon long voyages without frequent coaling. The rate of speed required for such vessels in order to give them efficiency, and the distances they must traverse require that they shall have coaling stations. Now, this is a condition of things that did not exist when the Navy was composed largely of sailing vessels. The same is true in regard to the commercial marine in a great degree.

I ask the Senator from California whether the present conditions are not such as to tend largely to modify the doctrine he has laid down in regard to the acquisition of territory that can only be defended by means of an American Navy? Does he not conceive it essential to the very existence and efficiency of the Navy that we shall have coaling stations for the Navy, and is it not just as necessary to provide the means for the transportation of those vessels, the fuel necessary, as it is to provide the ammunition for the cannon they bear? Is it not just as essential that there shall be a requisite coaling station for the supplies of the vessels of our Navy as to have the ammunition that is carried to supply the guns that they bear for the purpose of action? Could we not in this respect profitably imitate the policy of the British nation, that great maritime power whose navy dominates the globe and whose policy in some other and less desirable respects receives such servile imitation by some of our people—who can see nothing in the line of progress and development that should shape our policy, especially as to the tariff question, unless it be on the line of English ideas—yet those very people will not accept the example of England as to the necessary coaling stations for its Navy and for commerce. If we can not have our own coaling stations why expend millions of dollars per annum to build and equip a navy? I venture to maintain that the situation to-day is vastly different as to our Navy from what it was in the days of Jefferson, from whose works the extract has been quoted by the Senator from California.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator from Washington through?

Mr. SQUIRE. I am.

Mr. WHITE. The question addressed to me by the Senator from Washington would be a very pertinent one were I speaking of coaling stations, and under our very liberal rules I presume I might discuss on the pending amendment coaling stations, or whaling stations, or any other stations. I will simply say incidentally, however, in response to the Senator's remark, that I presume there will be no difficulty in establishing coaling stations even if we do not own the places where such stations are located. In our partnership entered into with two monarchical governments we have managed to secure a station in Samoa, and I believe we have arrangements in Hayti to the same purport. We have also Pearl Harbor in Hawaii. However, if my friend from Washington will read the very able remarks of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] upon this subject he will find that the coaling station which has been described so glowingly in the debates here does not amount to very much; that it is rather superfluous, and not even ornamental.

Concerning the remark of the Senator from Washington to the effect that the policy of Great Britain should be imitated in the matter of acquiring territory and not as to tariff legislation, I do not hesitate to affirm that I am not disposed to send our Navy upon a career of conquest or to do anything else opposed to our ideas of free government and to our notions of human rights. A study of the Declaration of Independence and the Farewell Address of Washington might be read with advantage. We are not discussing England's tariff laws, but I might say that we find much difficulty under our system in our efforts to divert from England the profitable commerce of the world.

I might, in further response to the Senator from Washington, urge that if the very distinguished men whose views I have read had had before them the prevailing Hawaiian conditions they would have strenuously protested against annexation. Moreover, in Jefferson's and even in Marcy's time little was known of the embarrassments of Chinese immigration; the sharp and ruinous competition in labor lines which has resulted from the presence of Mongolians. The numerous questions now before us concerning which labor and capital play so prominent a part were then but casually considered. Many economic problems most difficult to solve have come to the front within a recent period.

To conclude this branch of the subject and to summarize: I am antagonistic to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands because of their remoteness and more particularly because of their undesirable population. I am unwilling to introduce a political factor of that sort within the United States. I do not intend to aid in permitting Hawaiian precincts to control California elections.

Now, Mr. President, the cable issue is not necessarily dependent for its solution upon our ideas of annexation, or upon our views of coaling stations; but whether we should have a cable connecting this country with the Hawaiian Islands is a matter that should be determined upon commercial considerations and in view of commercial developments, and also because of the desirability of speedy and independent communication with the Orient. I know that the people of California are in favor of this project. It is the general desire in that part of the Union that there should be telegraphic connection with Hawaii now, which will lead, I believe, to an extension ultimately to Yokohama. The city of San Francisco is very nearly on the same parallel with the city of Tokio. The most direct route from San Francisco to Japan lies, of course, north of Honolulu. It is some 2,080 miles from one port to the other. But a cable laid to the Hawaiian Islands and thence to Asia would be of vast utility. It is true that such a scheme involves the expenditure of much money. If the Committee on Appropriations considers that at this time we can afford to inaugurate such an enterprise—and such is the effect of that committee's amendment—I shall not object. I do not consider, as I have said, that the cable and annexation plans are at all interdependent.

We have now no telegraphic communication with Asia except such as we are able to enjoy at the option of other nations. If we owned an Asiatic cable profitable arrangements could be made with Russia and Great Britain with reference to European and Australian business.

A short time back our friends of the other side, who always criticize the President, informed us that the proposition contained in the recent message with reference to the landing of Great Britain's cable at Necker Island should not be countenanced; that it was another diplomatic blunder, etc. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] read the remarks of the President of the United States upon a former occasion with reference to cable communication with Honolulu and there was nothing therein at all antagonistic to the present programme. I desire to call attention to the fact that when Mr. Cleveland has recommended the adoption of a policy differing from that desired by the Government at Honolulu he has been attacked for so doing; and in the present instance, when he asked the Senate to acquiesce in the request of that infant Republic, to do that which the Dole cabinet has requested, he is again made the subject of animadversions. Let us be consistent.

I think that the message of the President in that connection speaks for and justifies itself. Congress had made no effort to lay an American cable. Congress has heretofore done nothing indicating any disposition to connect with the islands. Under these conditions we are asked to waive our right to object to the granting of England's request.

Mr. President, I do not imagine that the Government of the United States will go to pieces if the additional commercial facilities tendered by Great Britain are furnished. I do not believe that any vast advantage will accrue to England if she is allowed to land her cable as designed, so far as any trade competition between that Government and ours is concerned. I think it is absolutely certain, because of the location of the Hawaiian group with reference to the United States, that their commerce must come to the western coast of this country. Self-interest on the part of the islanders requires it. Certainly, while our present treaty with reference to sugar matters exist it is plain that, cable or no cable, we will continue to dominate commerce there. But I agree that the cable will be beneficial. I am confident that with the extension to which I have referred we will profit by the work. The illustration given to-day is very significant. If such a line existed we would be able to determine in short order whether it is our duty to interfere in the cases of those reported to have been condemned by an autocratic military tribunal.

While such reasoning might be invoked with reference to any country in which an exigency has suddenly arisen, that fact would not lessen our satisfaction were we able to enjoy telegraphic intercourse at this moment.

However, the commercial advantages which will ultimately attend the construction and extension of a cable system to Honolulu are such that I do not feel justified in opposing the appropriation, and I intend to vote for it. I concede that it will require a great outlay to complete the project, but I rely upon a corresponding benefit.

I have not overlooked the constitutional objections which were so fully urged here with regard to Nicaragua and have been repeated in this debate. I do not wish to add to the argument I used in consideration of the canal bill. I do not believe that there is any justification for the theory that we have not the power to thus guard our commercial and governmental interests. We can extend our commercial relations, we can lay a cable wherever we find it essential to do so. The legislative department has the jurisdiction to do whatever will extend, advance, and regulate our commerce and increase our capabilities for common defense.

I concur with Senators who have stated that this is a nation vested with full power as such. It is not half a nation or two-thirds of a nation. We can not afford to place the Republic in an inferior position as contrasted with the great powers of this world. Every American citizen would shrink from such an attempt, and would warmly repudiate such a conclusion. To concede otherwise would be to say that there is somewhere another Government which is more powerful, self-respecting, and enlightened than ours; and more nearly competent to so administer public affairs as to promote the permanent happiness of the people. No such doctrine can ever have my support. Nor do I find any justification for such a theory either in the language of the Constitution or in the interpretations of Chief Justice Marshall, which have become crystallized into permanency by the passage of time and the experience of intelligent patriots.

Mr. President, the message which has just reached us, and which recites the sentences of a military tribunal in Honolulu, discloses a deplorable condition.

I know that my humane friend from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], who addressed us this morning, and spoke of the soothing influence of missionary contact, will be somewhat horrified when he discovers that the characteristics of barbarism have been thus early disclosed in the first struggle for power by the newly constituted Republic. Undoubtedly any Government making any claim to be such, assumes the right to enforce law, and may visit extreme penalty upon those who by violent overt act dispute its nationality and seek to possess themselves of dominion and supremacy.

But, Mr. President, as was well stated by the Senator from Colorado, the United States passed through an unexampled civil war, and did not find it necessary in a single instance to resort to the imposition of the death penalty for traitorous conduct. I can not believe that the sentences which have been thus announced have been imposed with intent that they shall be carried out. The letter of the law has been probably adopted and commutations will no doubt follow. I do not think that these sentences mean any more than the expression upon the part of those in authority that they have the power to do those things which nationality implies whether represented by a king, a president, or what not. I will not tolerate the thought that anyone who has the slightest conception of free government would under such surroundings convict and execute by wholesale. Mr. Dole's position is such that he can not afford to be otherwise than merciful. When the Queen was deposed, and when she made a threat which the country construed into an intimation that she would execute those who had risen against her if she became once more possessed of the throne, all denounced her as bloodthirsty. There is not a Senator in this Chamber and no one connected with this Government who would not, had she made such an attempt, have used all proper effort to prevent the carrying out of her resolve.

Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that I would most cheerfully vote for a resolution expressive of the opinion of the Senate that those who have been taken into custody by the Hawaiian Government and who have been thus sentenced should be dealt with leniently. In view of the unsettled conditions prevailing, in view of the infirmities of human passion, having regard to the future of the Republic, the authorities of Hawaii should not be hasty. An enduring republic must be built upon something more solid than a foundation laid in blood, even though it be the blood of the revolutionist who but a few months past was the representative of a Government overthrown by the men who now render judgment.

Mr. President, these occurrences are regrettable. It is to be hoped that in the midst of this disturbance wise counsels will prevail, that the abdication of the Queen, her written and formal renunciation, will prevent further disorder. The Dole Government must be aware that resistance is over and that ultimate punishments are not required. Caution is ever to be observed in matters affecting human life, and an error now would have serious consequences. While we have no authority to affirm that a foreign government shall not enforce its laws, still, under the peculiar circumstances environing this subject, an intimation to Mr. Dole may not be amiss.

But, Mr. President, if those who have been sentenced are American citizens, if it be true that they were not actually participants in an attempt to overthrow the Government, or even then, if they have been tried and found guilty by a summarily organized revolutionary or military tribunal, trying them and passing upon their cases in the shadow of dangerous conflict—under either of those conditions I would certainly conceive it to be our duty to intervene and to investigate most closely before we withdraw our interfering hand.

The communication from the Executive to-day informs us that in accordance with the long-settled practice of this country a request has been made for information and notice given to withhold the consummation and carrying out of the sentence imposed. In any event this precaution is timely.

Mr. President, this occurrence has tended to increase interest in the cable proposition. I am persuaded that our commerce will be advanced by this expenditure. I appreciate that the large number of American vessels which call at Honolulu do not represent vast trade and that our commerce there is small as compared with that which we share with many other nations.

I repeat that we must in the end go further than Honolulu to find our justification for this disbursement as a business venture. But a commencement must be made, and I shall vote to begin now. Without Government aid a cable will not be laid from the United States. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] accurately remarked that private parties can not be found who will make such an investment, as quick and large direct returns are not to be expected.

Mr. President, I trust that we will maintain the doctrine of noninterference in the internal affairs of Hawaii declared by a formal resolution of the Senate; that we will prevent foreign intervention. And I am convinced that the Administration will continue to take such action as may secure our citizens from persecution and maintain the foreign policy which wise precedents and good faith justify and require.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate a very few minutes.

The proposition before the Senate is not one of annexation. The precise question under discussion just now is as to whether the Congress of the United States will authorize the President to contract for the laying of a telegraphic submarine cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands. I believe that the commercial, naval, and political necessities of the United States require not only that a submarine telegraph cable shall be laid between the western coast of the United States and the Sandwich Islands, but I believe that such a cable should be extended by way of Samoa to New Zealand, Australia, and on to Japan. I have long believed this to be true, and I took action in the Senate looking to the construction of such a cable nearly five years ago.

I desire to attract attention (and it is for that purpose I rose) to the foundation which has been laid heretofore as a basis for the legislation proposed by the pending amendment. On the 2d day of December, 1890, I had the honor of submitting to the Senate a resolution which was on the same day unanimously adopted, and which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the advisability of the passage of a law authorizing a survey for a transpacific submarine cable route from some suitable point on the Pacific Coast to the Hawaiian Islands, thence via Samoa and New Zealand to Australia, and of legislation encouraging the formation of a company for such purpose, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GRAY. May I interrupt the Senator from Oregon there?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Do I understand that the Senator was then advocating the proposition that the Government should become the builder and owner of transpacific telegraph lines?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was then desirous, so far as my purpose was concerned at that particular time, to bring the question before the Congress for its consideration. I did not intimate, as the Senator will observe, in the resolution I presented and which was adopted by the Senate, as to how it should be done, whether it should be done by the incorporation of a private company for this purpose and a subvention to such company, or whether it should be done by a direct appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States. The resolution simply called upon the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate and report to the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Then may I make a further inquiry, with the Senator's indulgence?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Is his advocacy of the present proposition merely as a link in a longer cable communication to the Eastern world?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Of course I would look forward to the time when the cable would be extended to Samoa, New Zealand, Australia, and Japan.

Mr. GRAY. Or, to finish my question, does the Senator think that the relations between that group of islands in the Pacific Ocean and the United States are sufficient of itself to justify the expenditure of $3,000,000 by the United States Government?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I certainly do think so. I think the line in itself would be of immense commercial and political advantage to the people of the United States, even if it were not extended any further.

In pursuance of that resolution, adopted on the 2d day of December, 1890, a provision was inserted in the naval appropriation bill of that year, which became a law March 2, 1891. That provision is as follows:

Telegraphic cable surveys: To enable the President to cause careful soundings to be made between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, in the Kingdom of the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of determining the practicability of the laying of a telegraphic cable between those points, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the President is hereby authorized to direct the use of any vessel or vessels belonging to the United States in making such survey.

That then became the law. A short time prior to that I introduced a bill into the Senate, a copy of which I have in my hand, entitled "A bill to incorporate the Pacific Cable Company, and for other purposes," which proposed to incorporate certain gentlemen named as a body corporate, and authorized them to construct a cable to Honolulu. That bill never received the sanction of Congress. It died in committee.

Later on the survey was entered upon in pursuance of the provision of law in the naval appropriation bill, and on January 25, 1892, I submitted to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to advise the Senate as to what action, if any, has been taken, and with what result, in pursuance of the clause contained in the act approved March 2, 1891, making appropriations for the naval service, appropriating $25,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to enable the President to cause careful soundings to be made between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu, in the Kingdom of the Hawaiian Islands, for the purpose of determining the practicability of laying a telegraphic cable between those two points.

That resulted in bringing a message from the President of the United States, dated July 27, 1892, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, accompanied by a report from the chief of the bureau, and of Lieutenant-Commander Richardson Clover, United States Navy, of the survey which had been made. That is a public document. It shows that a complete survey, looking to the construction of a submarine cable between Honolulu and the United States, had been made, and that the project is entirely practicable and in all respects feasible. A wide lane 300 miles in width clear across the ocean between the two termini was carefully developed and sounded; temperatures taken at the surface, at the bottom, in the middle, and the vertical distribution of temperature throughout the whole depth; the depth ascertained, and the character of the soil determined and reported upon; soundings were taken at alternate intervals of 10 and 2 miles along the whole route, and, as I have said, the report shows that in all respects the route is entirely practicable and the project is a feasible one.

The total length of lines sounded was 4,511 miles; 502 soundings were made with wire and 54 with lead, and a distance of 8,735 miles were steamed by the Government vessels Albatross and Thetis in making the survey.

I have called attention to these facts for the purpose of showing that all the necessary preliminary steps have been taken looking to the construction of this cable. I shall not stop to discuss its merits further. The proposition is, to my mind, a self-evident one. It requires no argument to demonstrate the immense advantages in a commercial and political sense of the construction of a submarine telegraph cable connecting our Pacific shores with Hawaii. I know of but one more important proposition pending in the present Congress; that is the one relating to the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal. I sincerely hope the amendment of the committee will be agreed to by a decisive vote of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very few minutes.

As I understand it, the bill now under consideration is a bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896. The bill has been favorably reported back to the Senate with an amendment appropriating $500,000 for the construction of a cable from the west coast of the United States—from San Francisco, in California, to the group of Hawaiian Islands, consisting of a cluster of about thirteen islands, containing an area of 6,672 square miles, and a population of about 90,000.

To a casual listener during the past three days, it would have been impossible to determine, unless he had carefully followed the line of argument, whether there was being discussed a question of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, whether it was a question of the rights of an American citizen in a foreign country, whether Minister Stevens had exceeded his instructions from this Government while representing it at the Hawaiian capital, whether Queen Liliuokalani had been deposed by the authorities of this Government, represented by a man-of-war, or whether it was the character and the morals of the people of those islands. I certainly, while listening to these arguments, have been led into strange paths, and wondered what the object was that we had in view.

When I read the pending amendment offered by the committee, it suggests itself to me as a simple business proposition. Is it to the commercial interests of this country to appropriate $500,000 at this time toward the construction and laying of this cable? Is it expedient for us to do so? Is it wise business economy? That seems to me the only proposition that there is before us for consideration at this time.

Various commercial organizations throughout this country have petitioned for a cable to the Sandwich Islands during the past ten years. From all the principal commercial cities of our country, notably from California, which I have the honor in part to represent, from the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade of our principal cities, and various other commercial organizations petitions have come to Congress asking the Government to aid in the construction of this cable, because there was not sufficient financial inducement for private capital to construct it; but up to the present time we have talked and talked, referred it to committees, where it has slept "the sleep that knows no waking." To-day, however, we are confronted by the proposition that our neighbor on the north, the English Government, through her representatives in British Columbia, are about to construct and lay a new cable from Vancouver to New Zealand, Australia, and perhaps touching at one of the islands of this group of Hawaii. As has been stated here time and time again, and it is as true as any other commercial law, trade follows the flag.

England is our commercial rival; England has taken from us to-day the trade of India, of China, and of Japan, and by her subsidy to the English line of steamers plying from Vancouver to Australia, she has crippled the line of American steamships which ply between San Francisco and Australia. Our Government has done nothing toward supporting this line of steamers during the past six years. New Zealand, who gave her subsidy for mail service to this American line of steamers, has withdrawn a part of it and given it to the English line of steamers, which is largely subsidized by the British Government to-day. Her ships are built upon specifications and lines required by the English Government, and being so built they receive a large subsidy from that Government. In addition to that they are paid a liberal subsidy to run their line of steamers between Vancouver, New Zealand, and Australia. The result is that the American line of steamers plying between San Francisco and Australia must withdraw from the business. I speak advisedly when I say that they have not earned their operating expenses during the past twelve months.

But it is said, "What has this to do with the construction of a cable to the Hawaiian Islands?" It means everything to the United States. As was stated by the Senator from Maine yesterday, it is the only place on this globe where we have maintained and sustained our commercial supremacy. We are allied to the Hawaiian Islands not only by social, but by the strongest commercial ties; and if we were patriotic Americans we should be allied to them to-day by the warmest ties of political sympathy, for they are the youngest Republic in the world, struggling for individual, civil, and religious liberty, and are trying to solve the problem on these islands of whether our descendants are capable of governing themselves.

It was stated by my friend from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] yesterday that we imported into the United States $12,000,000 worth of imports and exported only about $4,000,000 in value during the year 1893, and he asked, "Will you give away in the construction of the cable the full value of what you export to those islands?" I want to say to the Senator, and I speak knowingly on this fact, it is American industry, it is American enterprise, that went down to those islands of the Pacific, that helped develop their resources and made their soil, which was barren, fruitful, by bringing streams from the mountains and irrigating the soil on the slopes of those mountains, which has become so rich that it is producing to-day 5, 6, and as high as 7 tons of sugar to the acre. Seventy-seven per cent of the property in the islands belongs to American citizens—citizens, many of them, perhaps, of the Sandwich Islands, but yet Americans, and that $12,000,000 which has been brought into this country is not sent back to the islands, but 50, 60, or 70 per cent of it is kept here among our people. It is paid out for machinery, paid out to the farmer for live stock, which he sends to the islands to do the work, for there they can not raise mules and horses and cattle to advantage in sufficient numbers to supply their wants. Every week one, two, or a half dozen vessels leave San Francisco, laden with the product of the farm, with live stock, with cereals, for the people in those islands. We build their vessels for them. Ninety-eight per cent of the vessels in the Sandwich Islands have been built in the United States. Six or eight have been built in the Atlantic States, and the others have been built in California, in Oregon, and in Washington.

We are allied to the people of those islands by the strongest commercial ties. Their interest is our interest, and our interest is their interest. So far as making that soil productive, we have built thousands of miles of large iron and steel pipes to convey water over deep chasms, over great gulches, and over barren lava beds to irrigate and make fruitful a soil that never produced before. Our commercial interest is therefore with them, for the money which they earn comes to and is expended in this country, instead of, as we are doing to-day, sending to Great Britain and France and Germany $75,000,000 a year dividends which come from banks, insurance companies, and other foreign corporations who do business here. The money that we receive from the Hawaiian Islands is kept in this country. I could cite to you hundreds and thousands of instances where such money has built up towns in our own country.

The Government of the United States has heretofore looked with favor upon the laying of a cable to the Hawaiian Islands. It sent a man-of-war to survey and sound the route from here to Honolulu.

The Sandwich Islands are the halfway station in the great Pacific Ocean between India, China, Japan, and Australia. When the American line of steamers to which I have alluded are withdrawn, as they will be in the next few months, from plying between San Francisco and Australia, there will not be running south of the equator another line of American steamships.

England has fostered her shipbuilding and fostered her steamships by mail subsidies and other subsidies, so that they have driven American commerce from the seas.

It is business policy for this Government to assist in the construction of this cable, for we have already made a treaty whereby we are to have possession of Pearl Harbor as a harbor of refuge, as a coaling station. It does not do for Senators to whisk it away with a smile of derision, and say that it is not a safe harbor, that it is not of any value to us as a port of refuge or as a coaling station. We have the calm, deliberate report of officers of our Navy who have surveyed that harbor, who have sounded every foot of it, and I, among others on this floor, am a living witness that nature has made it a harbor of refuge—we have made some improvements there—second to none in either the North or the South Pacific.

While it may not be much of an argument to say that our great whaling fleet, which goes every year into the Arctic Ocean to bring to our market two or three million dollars' worth of oil and bone, rendezvous at Honolulu before making their final departure, yet if our Government would imitate the example of Great Britain, of France, aye, of Italy, it would construct the cable for that purpose alone. All parties in the Senate and in the House of Representatives have favored it heretofore, and both parties, the Royalists and the Republicans, of the Hawaiian Islands have favored the construction of this cable.

I wish to say here one word in commendation of the Hawaiian Government—not only the present republican government, but that which preceded it. The Hawaiian Government have been liberal, have been generous in their aid and support of the marine service of their country, and to-day they are paying to the United States what is equal to $20,000 a year for carrying the mails between Honolulu and San Francisco, and this great Government of ours, this magnificent Government, gives that steamship company the foreign mail postage! What a contrast! What a lesson we may learn from this little Republic, which is giving to-day to an American steamship company $38,000 in coin for two years' service, and other concessions which are equal to about $6,000 a year more in the way of free pilotage, exemption from light-house dues, free port charges, free fresh water, and other concessions, and yet our Government sits supinely, folds its arms, and says to the steamship companies: "If you can not compete with foreign countries, retire, and let them do the business!" We have done it to the extent that we are paying to-day $100,000,000 for transportation of freight and for fares in foreign vessels.

I, for one, believe in an American policy which will build up our merchant marine, which will foster our merchants in their intercourse with foreign countries, and which will make "Old Glory" be the pride, as it always has been, of every eye that can look at it displayed from the peak of an American vessel in a foreign port. We want a new American policy in our marine service.

England stands ready to-day not only to make reciprocity treaties with the Hawaiian Islands, but she stands ready to-day to wrest that trade from us, if she can do it in any way, and she will do it if the enterprise of her merchants, backed and assisted by her Government, can accomplish it, and she will take that trade from us.

Let us to-day do the only thing we can do in the expiring days of this Congress; let us declare that our Government shall reach out a helping hand to the merchants of this country in retaining our commercial supremacy with these great islands of the Pacific.

There is one other thought which suggests itself to me in connection with the manufacturing of this cable. Almost every other thought in connection with it has been mentioned but this, and that is, that this cable will be built in the United States, if our President has the decision of the question, and he will have by this amendment if it shall be adopted. While I may differ from him on many political questions, I believe he is a true and patriotic American. This cable, if its construction shall be authorized, will be built by American mechanics, built from copper made from copper ingots taken from our mines in America; it will be melted in the furnace by coal dug from our mines by American workmen; the American artisan will twist it, draw it out, and put it together until it becomes a cable 2,100 miles long. Then the skill of our scientists will send the thrill of life, of electricity, through it, and when such news is to come to us as has come to-day, instead of waiting ten days or two weeks to get a dispatch to our minister at Honolulu, which we should be obliged to do if we wanted it to reach its destination in proper season, if we wanted it to reach there before an American vessel could sail to Honolulu, we should have to forward it by an English vessel, by a vessel flying St. George's cross, in the custody of an English purser—instead of doing that, we will send it by an American operator, through a cable made by American workmen, and connecting us with our own people in the islands of the Pacific.

I believe that when times are hard it is the time for the Government to be liberal in the expenditure of money. I do not believe it has been wise on the part of the present Congress to withhold appropriations for our public buildings because times are hard. It is when times are hard that we should give the mechanic, the workman, the laborer a chance to work and receive his pay for it. I believe it is a wrong business policy on the part of the Government to be so parsimonious in its appropriations. I do not think I should go quite as far as my friend from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] desires to do, to build a public building in every town, but I know I should build several public buildings in California, and I should not forget Kansas in passing.

No, Mr. President, it is to our nation's honor to build the cable. It is to our commercial advantage and to the interest of the people. It is in the interest of commerce that the cable shall be constructed, and I earnestly hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I consider the pending amendment to the bill, submitted at this particular time for adoption by the Senate, as being a matter of vital interest to the people of the United States now and hereafter, and therefore I give it my very hearty support. I wish to state some of the reasons that operate upon my mind, which I think ought to be influential in their effect upon the minds of all Senators here in gaining their support for this proposition.

I shall not delay by investigating the precise question of order which it is said is going to be made upon the amendment, except as incidental to some remarks I shall have to make upon the merits of the amendment. The question of order, it seems to me, has no proper application either to the specific amendment that is offered now or to the character of the bill to which the amendment is sought to be added.

The amendment does not propose general legislation in any sense, nor is it in any substantial sense new legislation. While it adds something to the expenditures of the Government, it has that one requisite which I understand to be attached to new legislation by our rules, that if it increases expenditures it must have the approbation of a standing committee of the Senate. We have taken no ground in the Senate as yet which forbids the Committee on Appropriations from considering any question of appropriation connected with carrying into execution an existing law, making a further appropriation, or amplifying, changing, or modifying in any respect an existing law, so as to make the application of the money that we appropriate more useful to the subject-matter which is contained in the proposition of a new or further appropriation.

I can see various reasons why the Government of the United States needs telegraphic communication with outside countries, and I think there is no particular line of appropriation where that communication can be better applied than to the bill which provides for our ministers and consuls abroad, designates the locations at which they shall reside and the outfit which they shall have in the shape of support from the Government, salary, and also the assistance of subordinate officers and other needful facilities. I can not understand how it is that the Government of the United States can send a messenger with a confidential dispatch to one of our foreign ministers and pay his expenses out of the Treasury, and can not send such a message across a line of telegraphic communication which it may itself own. Indeed, in respect of communications with the outside world, all of these methods of communication are in the nature of a postal service, and there is no restriction upon us as to what countries we shall visit with our postal facilities or the manner in which the communication shall be conveyed. So upon the question of order I find no difficulty whatever in voting for the amendment to the bill. It is entirely germane to the subject of ministerial and consular representation abroad, and being germane to that it is entirely within the competency of Congress to provide whatever means are necessary for keeping up communication with those officers.

The message from the President of the United States to-day, giving us information of recent events in Hawaii, perhaps illustrates more perfectly than anything I could refer to the necessity of having cable communication between Hawaii and the United States. For if it be true that we have any right at all as an intermediary to interfere either in the nature of advice or the nature of constraint with the action of that Government with respect to some of our citizens who seem to have met condemnation there, inasmuch as the court which has been assembled for the trial of those parties is one of sudden origin and is a peculiar court and of course will act largely in a peremptory manner, it may be quite as necessary that our communication to-day shall be as free and rapid between this country and Hawaii as the peril of human life and human liberty can create the necessity for such communication.

If we had recently owned a cable line across the Pacific Ocean, connecting at Shanghai, in China, it would have been of great utility. I mention that with great deference, because I think there are some statesmen in the United States who think it would be quite a presumptuous thing on the part of the Government of the United States to own a telegraph or cable line across one of the oceans. They look with composure, and indeed with approval, when a line across the Atlantic Ocean is established by the British Government or the French Government, when Russia establishes a line from the Baltic to her eastern possessions, when China establishes a line, when lines are established by the Indian Government, or the Australian Government. We are disposed to applaud those exhibitions of national power and national sagacity in providing for their people and for their Governments, also, necessary means and facilities of intercommunication; but when it comes to a suggestion that the United States can by cable connect Seattle, for instance, with the island of Attou, or with the capital of Alaska, or any other place where we have to pass a line under the ocean in order to establish a communication, they seem to be startled and benumbed with the thought that the Government of the United States should dare to presume to do such a thing. The Government of the United States is supposed to have some clog upon its powers, which operates very restrictively within our country, and which, it is insisted, operates outside of the country to reduce our standard among the nations of the world to one of utter impotency, not to say one of inferiority. We are impotent to do a great many things outside of the territorial limits of the United States upon the great highways of mankind—the oceans—which other nations can do with impunity, and even with applause, according to theories of our passive and masterly inactive statesmen.

Mr. President, I think we have passed beyond that line of mere theoretic argumentation now. We have need to be up and doing. A recent vote in the Senate of the United States shows where we stand on that point. There is a declaration on that point which I think is beyond all question. So I shall accept the verdict of the Senate in that recent vote as my justification for now proceeding to apply that doctrine to the necessary purpose of communication between Hawaii and the United States by cable.

In the pending bill I find an old text that has come down to us through many years, which has never been departed from, and which contains all the doctrine that lies at the foundation of this amendment.

It is as follows:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 281 of the Revised Statutes, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Make it $40,000,000 and the principle is just the same. What can the President do under that provision which has come down through all our appropriation acts unquestioned, unchallenged, and uncriticized for years? What can he do with this secret service money in the way of extending the commercial interests of the United States? The better way to put the proposition is, what is it he can not, in his discretion, do? Having thus armed the President of the United States through many years, without the slightest criticism or objection, with the power to use a secret-service fund to extend the commercial interest of the United States, we now raise a question when we propose to do the same thing by act of Congress, open and aboveboard, limiting the amount of the expenditure and defining the object. We propose now to say we can not do it. We have no such constitutional power, is the assertion now made. We can empower the President to do this in his own way, but we can not do it ourselves. That proposition made on the face of this bill is simply the reductio ad absurdum.

There is no occasion to argue any further that a bill which contains that provision and another which is contained in the proposed amendment is unconstitutional and contrary to the practices and precedents of the Government of the United States unless we intend to reverse the action of Congress which we have always sustained.

I find in the bill also, on page 20, line 19, under "allowance for clerks at consulates," another provision:

Bradford, $1,800.

That is an amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know what Bradford that is. Perhaps the Senator in charge of the bill can tell me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Bradford, England. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that if he will look at the consular reports he will find that the fees at the Bradford consulate for the last year amounted in round numbers to $80,000. Hence it was that the Committee on Appropriations felt warranted in raising the salary of the clerk there from $920 to $1,800.

Mr. HALE. It is not a new item.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not a new item. It is simply a reclassification and a raise of salary because of the $80,000 in fees paid in from that consulate last year.

Mr. MORGAN. Still it is new legislation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not. The consular clerk is there, and always has been there.

Mr. MORGAN. He is transferred to another class.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is it; a transfers from one class to another.

Mr. MORGAN. With a different and larger salary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. That is new.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, it is not. It is simply a change of salary in accordance with the title of the bill. The title of the bill tells the Senator from Alabama that the purpose of the bill is to provide pay for the foreign representatives of the United States, diplomatic and consular, but it does not anywhere in its title indicate that the bill carries an appropriation to lay a cable under the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. MORGAN. The title can be very easily amended and it ought to be amended, and the act itself ought to be amended here so as to show that this Bradford in England is a particular Bradford.

Mr. HALE. There is no other Bradford.

Mr. MORGAN. There are only four, I understand.

Mr. HALE. In this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; in England. This does not even say England.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will look he will see.

Mr. MORGAN. "Bradford, $1,800."

Mr. HALE. It is for clerk hire.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is under the heading of Great Britain and British Dominions, if the Senator will look on page 13, as all the consulates are under their appropriate heading.

Mr. HALE. It is simply for clerk hire, as is shown by the heading.

Mr. MORGAN. "Bradford, $1,800."

Mr. HALE. It is not for salary. It is simply so much allowance to the consulate at Bradford for clerk hire, whether of one, two, or three persons. It is attached to the consulate at Bradford, England, the consul at which place the Senator will find provided for in another part of the bill, and that remains precisely as it is.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, it is a change in the law. That makes it new, does it not?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not.

Mr. HALE. It only changes the appropriation. I agree with the Senator, of course, in his line of argument, but I know he wants to be exactly correct. The allowances of consuls are not matters of law. The salaries of certain diplomatic officers and of certain consuls are fixed by law. The allowance of any consul is entirely flexible, and it is fixed by no law. The original law, which is called the Orth statute, did not fix the allowances of consular clerks.

Mr. MORGAN. It is fixed by no law except this law.

Mr. HALE. Each year is a law to itself. It is no change of any law. There is no law at present about fixing the allowance for clerk hire at the consulate at Bradford, England.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand. Then each year when we make an allowance for consular clerks and for clerks at consulates, or whatever they may be, we make a law.

Mr. HALE. We make the law for the year.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the law for the year. I do not care how long it is.

Mr. HALE. We do not change the law.

Mr. MORGAN. But it is a new law.

Mr. HALE. It is not new legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know how a new law can come otherwise than by new legislation.

Mr. HALE. You may say it fixes a certain allowance for the year, and it is in the range of the legislative power; but where there is no fundamental law which fixes the extent of the allowance, an appropriation from year to year, which must be something, can not be, I think the Senator himself will say, new legislation, nor any legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know what it is if it is not legislation. It can not be a mere friendly interchange of ideas between members of the committee.

Mr. HALE. As I have said—

Mr. MORGAN. It comes to be a law some time or other. No money can be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of law.

Mr. HALE. It is in the scope of legislative power.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand. I am not on that branch of the subject. What I mean to say is that this particular bill, as it has always been handled in the Senate of the United States, is a bill that from year to year provides new legislation. If you wish now to establish a new consulate anywhere at all—

Mr. HALE. The Senator may say that every appropriation bill is new legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. In a sense.

Mr. HALE. Then I go with him. If he goes as far as that, then everything is new legislation, and we never could have, under the rules, any appropriation bills.

Mr. MORGAN. What I want to do is to draw a distinction between that which sticks in the bark and that which goes to the substance. Here is what we have been doing year after year, and we have done it rightly and properly and in violation of no rule whatever of the Senate of the United States. If we undertake to commence a new scheme of legislation, as legislation, for instance, the introduction of something that is not germane to the text of the bill, the purposes of the bill, or what may be called general legislation, legislation that does not affect the consular service or any other that is mentioned in the bill, but affects some outside question of a general character that applies to the people of the United States at large, then our rule forbids it. But our rule is not so critical, not so strict, not so nice, either in its construction or in the practice under it, as to confine the Senate of the United States in allowing amendments so as that they may not permit an amendment upon a bill which causes a change in the law and thereby makes a new law necessary. That is not the idea at all.

Whatever is germane to this bill, to its scope and purpose, is in order, under our rules, if it is recommended by a standing committee of the Senate, although it may be new and may increase the appropriation. To be general legislation, within our rules, it must affect all the people to whom it is applicable, as a criminal law would affect all who are guilty and benefit all who are innocent. Original legislation, not germane to the proposed appropriation, and applying alike to all who are affected by it, is "general legislation" that our rule excludes.

But I do not want to occupy further time in the discussion of this question of order now, because I think the minds of Senators are made up about it. More than that, since I have been here the Senate has never refused to hold anything to be without the limits of the rule that it chose to vote upon a bill. That has been the practice so long that I can afford upon this occasion to go right to the merits of the amendment, taking it for granted that enough appears in this bill to show that the appropriation is germane; for if you can appoint a consul at Hawaii you can provide some means of communicating with him. If you have no other means of communicating with him you can build a ship and send it there, or you can lay a telegraph line there, or if the distance would not be too great you could have carrier pigeons to carry messages back and forth. But whatever facilities of communication may be established between Hawaii and the United States Government so that the Government can communicate with its consul at Hawaii is established as a purpose of government, a distinct government purpose; and the Government of the United States not only outside but even inside of our territorial limits has the right for Government purposes to carry its machinery of communication and all the appliances of its machinery to any part of this continent and beyond it.

What did we do, Mr. President, in regard to the telegraph lines that were built by private companies and under charters of States through the public domain? Companies obtained charters from States and Territories to build telegraph lines across the continent in various directions. What have we done? We have said to those telegraph companies that their lines which have thus been built under corporations created by the States: "You shall not sell your franchises to a new company without the consent of the Government of the United States. More than that, we require of you an obligation that the Government shall have priority in the transmission of its messages; and the Government of the United States shall have the right to buy your telegraph line out and out, and you shall subscribe an agreement that you will consent to sell it." We stand here to-day provided with all the machinery of law to buy any telegraph line in the United States that passes through the public domain or passed through it at the time it was public domain.

That merely shows, Mr. President, that this Government within its borders, and outside of its borders as well, and for a better reason, is not to be thwarted in providing Government instrumentalities for carrying on Government work either inside or outside our limits. That is a power which belongs to the Government. It belongs to it in such a broad sense that the Supreme Court of the United States have decided in a case that went up from Ohio that the Government of the United States as a Government can go into the city of Cincinnati and condemn land in the ownership of private citizens of the State of Ohio for the purpose of building upon it a United States court-house without asking the consent of Ohio. Well, that is as much as I need to say about that.

Mr. President, I do not overestimate the importance of our having communication between Honolulu and San Francisco, and getting it at once. I do not believe that I am one of those nervous and agitated people who get alarmed every time the name of Great Britain is mentioned lest we might give her offense. I am sure I have no prejudices against that grand and majestic realm from which we came and from which we have derived many of our most satisfactory and excellent laws, institutions, and traditions, and much of our blood.

At the same time I recognize that Great Britain expects of us, if that will be any consolation to the anglophobes, that like her other children we will stand up and take care of our rights, protect this blessed land that we occupy here, and that we will exhibit the same sort of spirit here that they exhibit at home in caring for their people and for their country. I feel very much disposed always to do that without tramping upon the toes of the old mother; but at the same time I do not propose, if her toes get in my way, that we shall walk any more lightly because they are there.

I have just adverted to a matter in regard to public events that occurred recently in Hawaii and also in China, showing how necessary it is that we should have the opportunity, for instance, of hearing from our ships in China that the newspapers say have got into trouble. It seems we have a man-of-war over there that ascended one of the Chinese rivers a distance of four or five hundred miles to a walled and fortified city, and having a short "liberty," the youngsters about the ship went out for the purpose of hunting game, and unfortunately they got into collision with some Chinese people. A Chinaman was accidentally killed, and one of the young men on board the ship is said to have been seized and carried off by a mob. We have not heard from them, and there is some anxiety about it. It may turn out to be entirely imaginary, but at the same time suppose it is real; we ought to have the opportunity of learning about that occurrence and of taking care of that boy and providing for the proper application of the laws to him. We need other facilities than we have of sending telegraphic dispatches back and forth through a Chinese cable, controlled by Chinese. When the cable dispatches we send cost the United States for every word $2, for that is the cost of every word of a dispatch between Washington City and Peking or Shanghai, and perhaps it runs above that when you get up to Yokohama, but not less than $2 a word, it is a very heavy burden. It is quite expensive; but we can afford any amount of cost or expense, it appears, rather than undertake to extend our postal and commercial facilities anywhere on the seas.

But, speaking of this line in a commercial sense, if we had a cable laid to-day from Honolulu to San Francisco no other cable would pass through any part of the Pacific Ocean within 1,000 miles of Honolulu, or from the Pacific coast to Honolulu or to the United States, that would not have its centre at that place. Every other cable line would necessarily connect with our line at Honolulu that might be laid to connect North America with Asia. The conscriptive control we have in Hawaii, under our treaties, if that is preserved, must give us the control of this center of commercial and maritime and military intelligence, which is indispensable to our sea power in the Pacific Ocean. What is it worth to us to have the privilege of the control and the exclusive right to use a telegraph and cable line between Honolulu and San Francisco when we can dictate terms to the balance of the world to which they shall assent whenever they are compelled to connect their lines with ours? Can anyone suppose that in connection with this great subject of ocean telegraphy we can have a more advantageous position than to be in possession of a line from San Francisco to Honolulu with which every other country with a line in the Pacific must make necessary connections on terms agreeable to the United States? Because, be it remembered, the Pacific Ocean is too wide for a cable of a single length to be stretched across it with any effect. Your electric current will not carry to that distance with any degree of certainty. There must be a break somewhere.

The whaling trade is yet pursued by Americans with very great satisfaction and profit, notwithstanding our coal-oil productions in this country are so enormous. The whaling trade in Bering Sea and through the North Pacific Ocean is still a source of large revenue to our people and of increasing importance, and it is getting to be more valuable every year. The whaling trade was the commerce that originally gave an impetus to the civilization of the Hawaiian Islands. Whalers congregated there. Until the traffic was broken down by the rebel cruisers, and also by the production of kerosene, whalers abounded at certain localities in Hawaii. Their supplies reached them there. They went out for long voyages and would come there and transfer their cargoes to ships homeward bound and go back and fish the northern seas again without having to make a return trip to the home port.

That is still our important industry in the northern seas. The perils of the sea out there are very great. It is to our whaling fleet in the North Pacific Ocean very material that our people here should have ready communication with Honolulu, for that is the point to which all information centers which goes to and comes from the whaling fleet.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to present any pictures of imagination here, for if I were to draw upon my weak and impoverished imagination to the full extent of my capacity I should not by any means be capable of describing to the Senate the value and importance of the fisheries of the Bering Sea. I will just say this (and if any Senator desires me to prove it hereafter I will bring him the evidence of it in the most tangible form), that the fisheries of what we call the Bering Sea, as compared in value with the fisheries of the northeastern coast, are not less than five or six times greater than those ever were. The fisheries that we own there to-day are worth more for food and for other sea productions to the people of the United States by five times than the fisheries of the northeastern coast, including those around Newfoundland.

Mr. PERKINS. I may state for the Senator's information, with his permission, that there were 600,000 cases of four dozen one-pound cans of salmon alone packed on the Aleutian Islands of Alaska this year.

Mr. MORGAN. Notwithstanding some recent efforts to produce the impression upon the minds of the people of the United States that the fur-seal fisheries in Bering Sea are unprofitable and are actually destroyed, and without adverting at all to the methods by which they say the destruction has been wrought, I undertake to dispute that proposition out and out. We have there a nursery of fur seals protected by two lines of protection, which, if the Government of the United States will according to its plain powers and duties execute, the fur-seal fisheries of the Pribilof group of islands will be worth to us in the course of fifty years $300,000,000.

Mr. Blaine proposed a circuit of 30 miles around the Pribilof Islands to the British Government as full satisfaction of all we demanded as protection to the fur seals. By the decree of the Paris arbitration that was enlarged to 60 miles. Mr. Bayard proposed to Lord Salisbury a close season from 34 degrees north, reaching out to a point that did not include all of our Alaskan possessions to the west in the line of longitude, which he suggested as a settlement of our dispute with Great Britain. The arbitration gave from 35 degrees north latitude a close season after the 1st day of May up to July 31, with the suppression of seal hunting, at any time, in Bering Sea with firearms.

I shall not now stop to discuss this question, but I wanted to make that statement to show that when the arbitration awarded 35 degrees they followed Mr. Bayard's suggestion, except that he was willing to 47 degrees, and when they awarded 60 miles around the Pribilof group they doubled the demand that Mr. Blaine made upon the English Government. That is neither here nor there at the present time, except in view of this assertion of mine as to the probable growth of the seal herd. I shall be disappointed to the very last degree if this protection, honestly and faithfully executed by the United States Government and Great Britain, is not absolute security to the seal islands.

Russia has made her arrangements with Great Britain and also with us. What does she claim for protection? Her fur-seal fisheries are nearly as valuable as ours. She claims 30 miles around her islands there and 10 miles off the coast. That is all she claims, with no close season at all, except within that area.

The representations which are made to alarm the American mind into a belief that those fisheries are not valuable, and that therefore some man may as well come in and pocket them, had better be looked at with a good deal of caution. I insist, Mr. President, that including the fur seals, or even without including the fur seals, we have not such an important fishery interest in the world, and no nation has one so important as we have in the Bering Sea. It will draw fleets of ships there. Every ship that goes there from the United States, unless it sails from the coast of California, Oregon, or Washington, will pass in reach of Honolulu. It will stop there for refreshment; for letters; for supplies; and when it returns to port it will send its cargoes home from there. It has been for many years the center of the whaling fishery, and is to-day.

Now, this relates only to our own commerce with Hawaii, but there is more than that about it. In the year 1893 a fact was omitted, it appears, in our report from the Bureau of Navigation which related to Hawaii. I am astonished that any such fact as this should have disappeared from that report. What is it? In the calendar year 1893, ending December 31, the American ships that arrived at the port of Honolulu were 238, with 191,817 aggregate tonnage. The Hawaiian Government had 23 ships, with 15,750 tonnage. Of those 23 ships more than two-thirds were owned by Americans. The British had 58 ships, with 111,655 tons, and the greater part of that tonnage was of ships that were passing en route from Victoria to Sydney in Australia and back; the German Government had 5 ships, with 5,063 tons; the Japanese Government had 4 ships, with 7,167 tons; and all other nationalities had 2 ships, with 2,245 tons.

Thus it appears, Mr. President, that we have four times as many ships arriving from the United States at Honolulu as Great Britain has. We had more than all the balance of the world, by a very large figure, arriving at the port of Honolulu during the year ending December 31, 1893. There is a commerce worth talking about and worth protecting. We could afford to build this line if we got no other profit out of it than the mere effect of it as a Government instrumentality. We could afford to build it for the protection of our shipping in that quarter. But when we come to realize that great central commercial point in the Pacific Ocean and its incomprehensible value to the commerce of the nations through the ages to come, I do not see how any man can reconcile it to himself that we shall not be within the easiest communication possible with that great center of Pacific commerce which has yet been devised by the ingenuity of man, and that is the cable. And that is all we can do now. We can not trust such communications to a steamship; it does not go fast enough and is too costly. We are bound to have a cable or else we have got to fall behind the procession, away in the rear, and stay there.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to refer to another feature of this question. An American captain, Capt. A. T. Mahan, has recently produced a book that has given him a splendid reputation, a well-deserved reputation in all of the civilized world. He saw around him upon the oceans of the earth the vast commercial interchange going on from place to place of the productions of various countries. He had spread out before him in history the panorama of the naval engagements that had taken place; and he had the sagacity (which appears now to be a very simple thing as we look back upon it and read the book), to connect the prosperity of the different nations with the sea power that they had developed. He established beyond any denial the fact that the sea power of the greatest of these great nations (dependent in some degree, of course, upon their productions and the numbers, extent, and character of the population), has been the source from which they have derived their principal wealth and progress, and that is now the most essential power in the possession of any of the great governments that exist in the world to-day.

He has established that as a proposition of universal political economy. I can not call it anything else. He has gone on to describe it in its application to various countries, their commerce and their growth, in every particular; and he has demonstrated that in the proportion a nation has cultivated commercial intercourse upon the sea with other nations she has become rich and powerful. He has also demonstrated—it is a fact that is apparent upon the face of it—that the development of the commerce of any nation upon the sea must be attended with a naval power which accompanies and protects that commerce. The nations of the world are not a society of Quakers; they are not dealing with each other, Mr. President, with gloved hands. The rivalry between the nations of the earth in the commercial sense, as well as in every other sense, is masterly activity, attended with all possible display of force on every occasion when a display of force is necessary; and that force is brought to the front when the least infringement is made of the commercial rights and privileges of a nation by any other power, thus showing its vital interest as recognized by all Governments in the preservation of the power that develops and protects her commerce.

Captain Mahan very justly, I think, bestowed some high compliments upon Great Britain for her success as a commercial and warlike nation. He has lauded her for her commercial policy, and he has shown that it was not the configuration of those islands that was the cause of British ascendancy upon the sea and British commercial ascendancy; it was not the configuration of the shores of the islands of Great Britain that enabled her to become the clearing-house of the world for its commerce or has enabled her to dictate a gold policy to President Cleveland and our Government—it was not that. It is her commercial power; it is her wealth acquired through her sea power.

She has made her wealth by her commercial activity, and having got a good start, a good bank account, and a large amount of money which she could lend at interest and shave other people's paper with, she has piled up lucre enormously; and we are to-day felicitating ourselves that she, naturally enough, will lend us some money on our bonds. That felicitation came in here this morning, and we were made happy by the announcement that the larger part of a loan of fifty or sixty million dollars was actually negotiated on the other side of the sea. Those people have so much faith in us that they are willing to take our paper at 4 per cent, and let us have at least one-half of $60,000,000, and they safely calculate that we will be their best customer for their loan offices, so long as they can use the vast material we produce as a certain basis of their commercial enterprise.

It is not the configuration of Great Britain which has done all that; it is Great Britain's commercial power, based upon her sea power. Great Britain's commercial power would have been as subject to raids and outrages from other nations of the earth if she had no navy with which to protect it and to attend it in its navigation through the seas of the world, and she would have been as unprotected as your commerce was when we had the Alabama and the Shenandoah out upon the high seas taking shelter under British cover or of those outposts which lie around us, which enabled the Confederacy to destroy your shipping until you hid your flag and took the British flag and hoisted it at the head of your ships.

Great Britain had no more power to protect her commerce, her vast merchant marine, without the assistance of a navy, than you had, when you were blockading our ports, to protect your commerce against the two cruisers—the Alabama and the Shenandoah.

I do not refer to this with any unpleasant feeling. God knows I regret that any cruiser of the Confederate States was ever compelled to sink a Federal ship. At the time I did not regret it very much, but there is a locus penitentia to both sides in all matters connected with American affairs, and I avail myself of that honorable opportunity whenever I can without humiliating myself. But I take that merely for an illustration.

Captain Mahan, in the volume before me, illustrates the importance of the sea power by the blockading of the Confederate coasts at the time of the civil war here, and he goes on to intimate, what I would not dare to do perhaps without his authority, that if it had not been for the possession of the sea power that the United States held at that time she might have fared even worse in the war than we did. It was the sea power which enabled you to choke us to death in the Southern country, by keeping us out of communication with other people abroad. We were a scattered population, unaccustomed to marine affairs, not knowing how to build ships and not having the material with which to do it. It was the sea power that enabled the United States Government to make that magnificent conquest of a magnificent country and a still more magnificent people. It could not have been done otherwise. I believe it would have taken you twenty-five years if you ever could have done it, without the help of your navy, and yet that power was so disproportioned to the extent of our blockaded coast that you could not protect your commerce on the ocean while blockading our ports.

But there is an illustration in our country, which we are not permitted to neglect, presented in our diservered coasts, which is this: You may speak as you please of having no colonial system and of their being no need for it, of having simply a continental policy, as it is called, and standing on the defensive at the mouths of our harbors against foreign invasion and waiting until the fleets come before we make provision to resist them. We may say what we please about it, but there is one thing certain, that if we can have actual physical security under such conditions—and I believe we can—it is still undeniable that we shall have no commercial advantages and no commercial prosperity without ships to run to every ocean and sea of the world and a navy to go along with them to protect them. We are obliged to have them. We have to give up the one or possess the other. If we do not expect to have a naval power sufficient to protect our commerce, then we are not going to have the commerce, except as other people may choose to come and traffic with us on our own coast, as we may go and traffic with the Africans in the center of Africa for the tusks of elephants which are picked up in the forests. No, sir, we are obliged to have a Navy or else have no profit from commerce.

The development of our sea power is the vital question which American statesmen have to consider, and this bill inaugurates a first step to establish such power in the Pacific Ocean. Pass this bill, build that cable line, and what else do you secure? I do not care whether you secure the annexation of Hawaii or not. I am in favor of annexation, but I am in favor of it upon purely national and selfish considerations. All such interests are selfish.

If I were an Hawaiian I would never consent to annexation to the United States, and would have no occasion to do it. I would try to have the proudest and the happiest Republic out there in the Pacific Ocean that ever existed in the world, notwithstanding its small area, with every great power in the world under bonds to protect and preserve its rights, it matters not what happened anywhere else in all the world. It is an ideal position for a republic, better than Switzerland, in the midst of the crowned nations that surround her in the body of Europe. Yet I want Hawaii, I am anxious to get her, not for purposes of aggrandizement; but I want her for the sea power that she possesses in virtue of her geographical position. I want those islands as a point of focalizing the sea power of the United States in the Pacific Ocean, which will some day become far greater in value and importance to us than the Atlantic Ocean is to-day.

Now, I will read an extract from William H. Seward upon this subject—of course an utterance made many years ago, for it was in 1852 in a speech delivered by Mr. Seward on the floor of the Senate. He said:

Who does not see that henceforth, every year, European commerce, European politics, European thought, and European activity, although actually gaining force, and European connections, although actually becoming more intimate, will, nevertheless, sink in importance, while the Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands, and the vast region beyond will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter.

That is a prophecy, Mr. President, the realization of which is going on to-day, visibly, and very rapidly. It comes from the mind of a great statesman, a great philosopher, a great political economist, and we are here seeing it realized now. The Pacific Ocean to-day, on either shore of it, is having a greater bearing upon the political condition of the world than is the Atlantic Ocean on either shore. The events which are transpiring in the Pacific Ocean are of the most surprising character and of the greatest possible magnitude, and yet they are to be supplemented by other events the shadow of which but dimly appears before us now, which in a very short time will make that the theater of the greatest exploitation of statesmanship that has ever been called into action in all the annals of American history.

Mr. President, Great Britain sees that with an eye that never fails to discern the movements of nations or her own best interests. Captain Mahan instructed while he praised Great Britain, and from what has already appeared, dimly it may be, but nevertheless in real and tangible form, I have no doubt that the writing of that book has impressed upon the minds of British statesmen certain necessary theories in respect of the sea power and the best manner in which to control it; and Great Britain is following the very lines of argumentation and logical conclusion which are so ably laid down by Captain Mahan, to execute a policy in which we are vitally concerned.

Since 1850 we have been conscious of a purpose on the part of Great Britain, unrelenting, persistent, and hitherto inflexible, that she should gain a certain control, which meant a managing control, over an isthmian transit across some part of the Isthmus of Darien. There was the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, there were various settlements which she made, as we say, in violation of that treaty, in order to get a foothold in that country. There was her suzerainty over the Mosquito King. There was a continual interference between her and Nicaragua whenever she chose to do it, in order merely to assert her authority there, so that when it became a practical question she could say to us, "We are at home; our flag has been here always;" but recently Great Britain has withdrawn from the Mosquito Kingdom, and has consented to the full dominion of Nicaragua over her own territory and people. This movement was to us a pleasant surprise. It was soon followed by another of greater significance.

We passed a bill through this body in which Great Britain might have found an opportunity, if she had so desired, to have asserted that we were proposing in that measure to violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I do not say that we did; I say we did not; but it was an opportunity that she could easily have found for raising a diplomatic question with us about the course we intended to pursue. She has been as silent as the tomb. That bill passed the Senate by 10 majority as much as ten days ago, and yet there has not been a protest, there has not been any intimation, there has not been anything heard from Great Britain on the subject.

What does that signify in connection with her giving up her suzerainty over the Mosquito King and giving back the Mosquito Kingdom into the hands of Nicaragua? It is, as I believe, that they have abandoned all hope and expectation of getting the control of the transit through the Isthmus of Darien for a ship canal. What, then, have they done? They find that they can strengthen their sea power in another direction by a quiet movement, which for that power is better than that and which will give them, largely, the control of the Pacific Ocean while the American Congress is controverting about whether or not they have the constitutional right to dig a canal, which Great Britain does not oppose their digging.

Convention after convention of intercolonial people, deputies, agents, representatives, etc., met at different places. They met at Ottawa, in Canada, within a year I believe—the date I have not precisely. Before that time they had been trying to persuade the Government of Great Britain to assist in laying a line of cable across the Pacific Ocean to connect from the eastern coast of the Pacific Ocean with Australia, and with all of that system of islands which she occupies now from the antarctic zone up to within 500 miles of Hawaii. Until recently they could not persuade the Government of Great Britain to do it. Finally they hit upon this proposition: "We can build this cable line from Vancouver to Hongkong, or down to Australia, if we can get a resting place, a break in the line somewhere about the Hawaiian group." As soon as that was done and that resolution was reached, Great Britain said: "If you can get each end of this line at every place where there is a break in it located upon British soil, or soil under British control, the Government will aid you. That becomes then a British telegraphic line; it becomes a military line; and it puts the entire control of the line within the possession of Great Britain, and that suits us, the Imperial Government."

The British Government thereupon set to work to get a concession from Hawaii, and she got it subject to our consent. It is very remarkable, Mr. President, that our relations with Hawaii, in the estimation of some Senators, should be so remarkably slack, so very inconsequential, and have so little of substance in them when both Hawaii and Great Britain find it necessary to appeal to us to give our consent that Great Britain shall occupy one of those islands for a resting place for a cable line.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Great Britain did not get the consent of Hawaii subject to our consent, I think. Did she?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; she did.

Mr. LODGE. I think that all Hawaii did was to submit to us the question of the advisability of modifying the treaty. Has the Hawaiian Government assented to it subject to our assent?

Mr. MORGAN. It has, and it is obliged to. They will assent if we assent. It is their plea for a release from the treaty that they may complete an agreement, and not the request of Great Britain to open a negotiation with Hawaii with a view to an agreement.

Mr. LODGE. I did not know that they had gone so far as that.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, they have; and here is the memorandum of agreement drawn up between them sent to us in the President's message.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator read the clause in relation to Hawaii securing the assent of the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think if the Senator from Alabama will read Mr. Hatch's reply to the letter of the commissioners he will see that Mr. Hatch does not assent for the Hawaiian Government, but says that they can not go on with the negotiations until the consent of the United States is first secured.

Mr. MORGAN. Here is the statement.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of this date, inclosing a fair copy of the agreement proposed by you in the hope that it would prove mutually satisfactory, I beg to again express my regret that this Government, by the provisions of our treaty of reciprocity with the United States as we read it, is at this time precluded from the consideration of the terms proposed.

What does that mean? Why does he regret it unless he wants it?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a mere civility, like regretting an invitation to dinner when you do not want to go.

Mr. MORGAN. I should as soon trust the civility of the claws of a tiger because they were covered with fur, as to trust to that sort of civility. No, sir. That is an expression of an agreement on their part, a tacit agreement on their part, that they would be glad enough to do this if the United States would consent to it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President—

Mr. MORGAN. And why should not Hawaii be glad to do it?

Mr. FRYE. That is just what I was going to ask the Senator; why should not Hawaii consent?

Mr. MORGAN. Why should she not be glad to do it? Must she be sorry for everything which hurts our feelings, and glad of everything which pleases us? We do not treat her in that way. Should she look out for our interests and languish for our smiles when we visit upon her every form of rebuff and indignity?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not the issue, whether she ought not to be allowed to have a British cable if she does not have an American cable. The precise point is whether Hawaii has said to Great Britain anywhere, in any form of language, that if we are willing she will consent to the landing of a cable from British Columbia.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, if we give our consent to it here by a vote of Congress, and if Hawaii should say, "No, no; we can not do that," Great Britain would say, "We will see whether you do it or not; we will take possession of a barren island up here; the Government of the United States has taken its hands off of you and given its consent to this thing, and we will go and occupy that island." That is all. A better invitation than that, Her Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain, never wanted. She always attends teas of that kind upon the slightest invitation.

I will read that agreement. This is a British proposition, and it reveals British policy. Let us see what it is:

Subject to the conditions and stipulations hereinafter set out, the Hawaiian Government agrees, if and when the laying of a submarine cable between Canada and Australasia shall be determined upon, to lease to the British Government and its assignees, hereinafter called the lessees, either Necker Island or French Frigate Shoal or Bird Island, or other uninhabited island, whichever of them the British Government may select.

A pretty broad margin of selection she gets there. If you will take the map and look at it you will see that Necker Island is larger than several of the islands there which are inhabited.

It is noted that the Hawaiian Government are debarred by their reciprocity treaty with the United States from leasing or otherwise disposing of any of their lands or from granting any special privileges to any foreign Government, and it is therefore incumbent upon the Hawaiian Government to obtain the sanction of the United States Government as a condition precedent to the grant of the proposed lease.

That notation is an important one. If our friends who feel that Hawaii is coming too much in competition with them in sugar raising should carry out their purpose of securing the abrogation of that treaty, then the question would arise whether or not the rights we have there to restrain her in the disposal of her public domain and her sovereign rights in that realm are not also thrust out from our jurisdiction if we go outside of it.

If Hawaii was mean enough to trade in this way with Great Britain, and then should take as compensation from Great Britain a sum of money that would make up the loss that she supposes she would sustain if that treaty was abrogated, why might she not, after the treaty was abrogated, upon a year's notice, resume her perfect autonomy and sovereignty over her own property and her own country, and make such treaty with Great Britain as she saw proper to make? Why not? Ah, because there is an unwritten law of relationship between Hawaii and the United States, which began when the first dawn of civilization appeared there, and has continued to grow stronger and stronger from that day to this, that we will not permit any foreign Government to go there and acquire rights, in the nature of sovereign rights, whether by a perpetual lease or otherwise. That is the unwritten law, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, which we have repeated here and have affirmed in resolutions at this session of the Senate.

I will proceed with the reading of the agreement:

The Hawaiian Government further agrees, for the consideration and stipulations hereinafter expressed, to insert in the lease the following covenants:

1. That the lease shall commence and take effect when a contract has been entered into for the laying of a cable from Canada to the island intended to be leased, and shall inure and continue until the cable and the connecting line to Honolulu are finally and permanently abandoned.

That is similar to the title the Cherokee Indians have to their domain. That is a base fee, the Supreme Court of the United States calls it; that is to say, under the patents we granted to the Cherokee Indians they are entitled in fee simple to their lands until they abandon them, and then they will revert to the United States. But who thinks about their abandoning their lands? They have nowhere else to go. Who would think about Great Britain abandoning this island when she has fixed a telegraph line there, and through the means of it has acquired the control and the sea power of the Pacific Ocean? Who would think of her abandoning it? Therefore it is an absolute covenant of sale, a sale for just as long as Great Britain wants to hold it.

2. That exclusive possession free from disturbance shall be given, with exemption from all kinds of taxation.

Note the language:

Exclusive possession, free from disturbance.

The United States, after she has assented to that, can not go there for the purpose of locating a cable line and its continuous parts. Every island in Hawaii is to be put under the ban of that provision. The United States could not go there and disturb Great Britain in her possession and occupancy after agreeing to this arrangement. So far as the Island of Necker is concerned, French Frigate Shoal and Bird Island, she gets an absolute right, if not in form, certainly in substance:

3. That a convenient landing station and space for the accommodation of the telegraph office staff shall be provided at or near Honolulu for the purpose of laying and working a connecting cable between the island leased and Honolulu.

A convenient landing place shall be provided. That means that Great Britain is to go into the neighborhood of Honolulu and in the neighborhood of Pearl Harbor, where the United States are entitled to possession, and she is to take her occupancy right there and stay as long as a cable line is needed by her in the Pacific Ocean.

Here comes up another curious and very critical question. I will begin the statement of it by saying that there is not such a harbor in the Pacific Ocean, San Francisco perhaps excepted, as Pearl Harbor. I doubt if there is any one harbor in the Pacific Ocean which has the same depth of water, the same natural fortifications, and the same ease of inlet and egress as Pearl Harbor, after you have put in a suction pump and pumped out the little silt which is in the channel there, which can be done for $70,000 to $100,000.

Where would Great Britain locate "this convenient landing station and space for the accommodation of the telegraph office?" It is to be provided in the neighborhood or near Honolulu. Suppose she says: "We will put it at Pearl Harbor;" the United States Government has given consent, or abandoned that treaty, or has given notice of its abrogation, or else the Hawaiian Government has given notice of its abrogation. That treaty contains a provision in express terms that Pearl Harbor is assigned to the United States for the purpose of establishing there a naval station. That definition of the purposes of the concession would include every necessary fortification for the protection of the naval station, etc.

When that treaty was concluded—for it was a mere extension of the previous treaty of reciprocity—extending that period for, I believe, seven years, Mr. Carter informed Mr. Bayard that Hawaii understood that this provision in the treaty for the cession of Pearl Harbor was to cease with the treaty and wanted Mr. Bayard to agree upon a protocol to that effect. Mr. Bayard said he had no authority to agree upon any protocol; that the treaty, being confirmed by the Senate of the United States, is the supreme law of the land. "We are here exchanging ratifications," said Mr. Bayard. "But," said Mr. Carter, "while we are exchanging ratifications I want a protocol made." "No, I can not agree to any protocol," said Mr. Bayard. Then Mr. Carter said: "I will make a statement that that is the way Hawaii understands it." Said Mr. Bayard: "I so understand it, too, but I will not agree to a statement." Mr. Bayard's understanding, as he expressed it, and Mr. Carter's understanding, as he expressed it, is directly in contravention of the text of the treaty, as I understand it and as I think it will always be held and maintained.

That right is permanent, if any right was ever conferred by deed or treaty of a permanent kind. The very nature of the grant shows it, and the purpose for which it was made shows it. It is idle to talk about our going there and spending a million or two of dollars in the improvement of a naval station and its fortification, and in dredging out a channel to the sea, and then to say that the Hawaiian Government can reclaim that property from us and reassert her rights in Pearl Harbor by merely giving notice of the termination of the treaty. That cession was insisted upon by the Senate as a consideration for this reciprocal treaty between the United States and Hawaii. It was put in the treaty by a Senate amendment for that purpose. It is there now, and it will be there forever until Hawaii, acting with some greater power than the United States, shall abolish it. But Great Britain proposes to do that; not by force, but in the name of international comity.

When Great Britain stipulates with Hawaii, and the President of the United States advises us to consent to it, with the agreement before him, can we not see that that is what Great Britain means when she speaks about having a convenient landing place nearer to Honolulu for this cable, with the consent of the United States, which convenient landing place of course is to be in perpetual right? I will suppose that this proposed agreement is entered into; I will suppose that the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States give their consent under the advice of the President of the United States that Hawaii may do this thing with reference to or in pursuance of the very express agreement which the President of the United States sends to us, and identifies in his message. There can not be any doubt about what it refers to. What is the nature of it?

That a convenient landing station and space for the accommodation of the telegraph office staff shall be provided at or near Honolulu for the purpose of laying and working a connecting cable between the island leased and Honolulu.

Says Great Britain: "We want Pearl Harbor. We want a location upon it. We want to go out upon that peninsula which stretches down into Pearl Harbor, where a fortress would be situated, and on the right and left hand of which there are two channels of deep water where ships and fleets can lie at safe anchorage. We want to go there. That is a convenient landing place, and just the place for a cable. We will take that. Who interferes? The United States can not do it. She has abrogated the treaty, or, if you please, under her advice you have abrogated the treaty." Here we are to be put into that position. It is a sale, virtually, by the Government of the United States, of Pearl Harbor to Great Britain. At the least it is a gift. Mark my words, they will go upon the record, and see their realization within less than three years to come. When events shall have progressed sufficiently far to develop this scheme on the part of Great Britain, they will prove that I am right. She understands the value of sea power. She knows that she must have coaling stations if she has steamers. She knows that there is no steamer built by the admiralty or by the United States or by any other power which can more than carry coal enough in her bunkers to make her way at a slow rate of speed across the Pacific Ocean. She knows that when such a ship reaches its destination, if it has no intermediate place to coal, it is far more impotent than a sailing vessel would be with wooden hulk. It is a dead weight in the water; it is unmanageable without sails and without steam power; it is a virtual wreck, useless, and an incumbrance.

Therefore Great Britain wants a location, a lodgment in Hawaii, and she is moving for it in an adroit way. She wants to reach the focal point of the sea power of the Pacific Ocean not by hindering us or by trying to participate any longer with us in building a canal through the Isthmus of Darien—she takes a shorter route to-day; she takes her Canadian possessions, the Canadian railways and the Canadian harbors, and she makes a lodgment at Hawaii. Then she proceeds down to the next batch of islands, 500 miles below, and from there she steps almost from island to island until she gets to Sydney, Australia. Then she will have not merely belted the Pacific Ocean with cable lines, but she will have divided the Pacific by this cable, which in its uses and purposes is worth any half dozen or perhaps dozen of the best ships in the English Navy. This cable will enable the British Government to concentrate her fleet at any place she desires, and to give notice and admonition of the movements of the fleet of any hostile power. This cable is intended to pay its way as a commercial convenience, but its great usefulness to Great Britain will be its service as a military line, and for this purpose it is chiefly intended.

Now, tell me how we can expand our commerce on the Pacific Ocean when we can have no proper protection, no efficient American Navy to take care of it, and after we have left it to the tender mercies of the British Government. That is what it comes to. There is the trouble. That is why I say I consider the adoption of the pending amendment a vital point at this moment of time. We must go to Hawaii and take possession of Pearl Harbor and land a telegraph cable in advance of Great Britain. We must shut off this negotiation with a firm declaration, not merely on paper, but in fact, that we have gone to Hawaii with our cable and to establish a naval station at Pearl Harbor and have gone there to stay. Whether Hawaii is to be an independent Republic or is to come to us by annexation makes no difference to us. It is all the same in respect of our power in the Pacific, for in respect of the control of the sea power, we have that there which is absolutely indispensable and is the greatest possible security for the final result. What is that? Pearl Harbor. Pearl Harbor, with a cable to connect it with the United States, will be our fortress in the Pacific Ocean from which we can, as we will, command the peace on all its infinitude of coasts and its burden of rich commerce.

Mr. President, I am only arguing upon these patent facts. I do not know more about them than anybody else, but my common sense and sagacity tell me with a power of conviction which I can not at all resist that this is a very critical moment and this is a very critical amendment so far as the United States in its connections with the Pacific Ocean is concerned. Have we the right to build the cable by the Government of the United States? I have understood that the Government of the United States could construct any instrumentality or facility of government that it found necessary if it interferes with no vested right. This is an instrumentality of Government, of military operations, of postal service, and of commerce. It may be a profitable one in a monetary sense, in the sense of earning revenue, or it may be unprofitable; but that is a question aside. The view I take of it is that it is a necessary Government facility for the connection of the United States with the Gibraltar of the Pacific Ocean.

If we go there once and occupy that territory, or so much of it as we have a right to occupy now under the treaty, and hold it and improve it for the purposes secured to us by treaty and connect the United States coast with it by cable, I think there will have to grow some larger and stronger nations than the world has yet a record of in its history before they will ever put us out. But if we wait until Great Britain goes there and plants her foot upon it she will hold to it with just the same tenacity with which she holds to Gibraltar; and without Gibraltar she would seriously imperil if she did not lose her sea power, which is the security as it has been the cause of her commercial supremacy. With another Gibraltar in the Pacific Ocean, supported by her forts and shipyards at Vancouver and at Hongkong and in Australia, her power will be supreme and ours will diminish even beyond the capacity for self-defense.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama a question at this point to emphasize what he has said. He has made a very vivid statement as to the necessity for action at this time. I wish to ask him, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, whether he has any doubt that if we do not adopt the amendment and take possession of the concession at Pearl Harbor there is grave danger of its passing into the hands of Great Britain.

Mr. MORGAN. We have but one possible defense against it. Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator the question because I wish to emphasize this point. Believing that the amendment will pass the Senate, and apprehending difficulty in the other branch of Congress, I wish the attitude of the Senate to be so strong upon the matter that there may be no doubt whatever elsewhere as to the earnestness and seriousness of the Senate on this project.

Mr. MORGAN. So far as I am individually concerned—I do not know that I express the opinions of the committee, as the matter was not discussed before us—I have already expressed myself about it in the most serious and earnest way. In fact, I would prefer to see every rule of this body broken, if that were necessary, than not to pass the amendment. I would rather make a virtue of necessity, break the rules, and pass the amendment, because I think it is a vital thing. The hold we have to prevent Great Britain from doing what we now propose to do and from getting the advantages of Pearl Harbor that we now, as it seems to me, are trying to throw away, consists of nothing but the bond of natural affection between the ruling classes in Hawaii and the people of the United States. Can any Senator name any other?

Yet that is subjected to all manner of friction, attrition, harsh usage, great abuse as politicians on this side of the water may find it convenient for their personal or party purposes to attempt to belittle, to degrade, to calumniate in many cases that band of noble and true men, wedded to the principles of Government which we appreciate so highly here and which they have introduced into those communities for the purpose of trying to elevate them, and not for the purpose of trying to degrade them. For surely after the Yankee missionaries went to Hawaii and got possession the steps of the white men there have been attended with prosperity, growth, civilization, and improvement in every possible direction. Before that time, when the Englishmen, the Frenchmen, the whalers over the world, who were white men also, congregated there to depredate, and not to regulate and control, they poisoned the Hawaiian population to that extent that it has taken the lapse of years and the art of the surgeon with his greatest skill for years and years to eliminate the actual bodily disease which they inflicted upon the natives almost to the actual extermination of the race. The restorative in that country has been the benevolent work of the faithful, earnest, honest Christian missionary from the United States, and to him to-day is due the reformation of Hawaii from a condition of degradation which before that few people in this world have ever suffered.

Those people, acting upon our own ideas, our civilization, our plan of government, have always retained a patriotic affection for the people of the United States, in so much that for fifty years the Fourth of July has been celebrated by Hawaiians of all classes and colors with as much zeal as it has been observed by the American people, as the great birthday of liberty, which they seemed the more and more to appreciate the more enlightened they grew. I speak of that as an indication of the affection which it is very difficult for us to break up, very difficult for us to destroy. Still there is a limit to human endurance in matters of this kind, and these very men, many of them citizens of Great Britain, are of the same blood, of British stock, and if the United States refuses their overture, and if Hawaii is to be treated as if it is a nation, a people, a government to be dealt with as we please, to be kicked about over the floor of the House of Representatives and the Senate like a football, I can easily see that after a while this bond of affection may become so loose that they may say after all, "Well, we believe we will enjoy the Government of Great Britain; we will prosper under it better than we can under our expectations of forming a government with the United States or of kind treatment at the hands of our nearer kindred."

Now, if there is any other course to keep them from doing this, except their affection for us, I do not know what it is, unless it may be their devotion to self-government. So far as that particular element of republican liberty is concerned, it is about as well incorporated in the British constitution to-day as it is in the United States Constitution, and I do not know but it is more so, for the reason that the Government of Great Britain does not dare to refuse to respond to public sentiment in that great tribunal which may alter its constitution, the House of Commons. It does not dare to do it, and the action of the House of Commons is continually from day to day and year to year the actual expression of British sentiment upon all public questions. It is not so here. Sometimes you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have acquired the possession of political power in this body when the Democracy was triumphant in the other House and throughout the country, and you have stood your ground and refused to accede to the demands of the people. I have seen that condition very often. Hence, I justify the remark that as to popular government perhaps Great Britain is quite as much or more so than the United States, and Hawaii may take the same view of the subject, so far as I know. She may be content with a ruler appointed by the British Crown, a free parliament, a government that she can remove whenever it stands in antagonism to the popular will as expressed at the ballot box.

Now, so far as concerns this incident about the conviction of men in Hawaii for high treason, which seems to have made an impression on the Senate to-day, I do not think the question before the Senate has the slightest connection with it. At the same time we have declared oftentimes here absolute noninterference with the local Government of Hawaii. The ink is scarcely dry on the paper upon which the resolution of the Senate was written for which we voted with one accord. Suppose that what has occurred in Hawaii had occurred in Dublin, and that as noble a man had been killed in Dublin by the insurgents as that splendid man Carter, whom I knew and loved. In Dublin or in England that man for his services to the public would have been made a duke or a marquis or an earl. If he who was killed there had been an earl no better or greater than Carter, the British Government would have taken those men and tried them before one of the commissions which they organize and under which they try men for their lives at their pleasure and in accordance with their constitution. They would have been executed before this time, and the American people would have been clapping their hands and shouting hosannas of praise to the British Government for the summary protection of her sovereign rights, when this noble earl had been killed by a man who was attacking the Government with a view to its destruction.

It has been a few days since you, Mr. President, received a communication from a man in Alabama who signed himself "governor" to some Senatorial credentials. Suppose that man, believing, as he does doubtless, that he is the governor of Alabama, else he would not put his name to papers so solemn as those, should conclude, under the impression of that solemn and earnest belief, to organize his men into a body and go and, forcibly take possession of the chamber now occupied by Governor Oates in Alabama, and in doing so should kill one of the best citizens of Alabama or destroy property or should kill a thousand men. It is as bad to kill one man, honest, just, and upright, as it is to kill a thousand. It is no more murder if it includes a thousand than if it includes one. Suppose that thing should be done here in the United States. What would the Senate do about it? We would say that the sovereign State of Alabama must deal with this question. We would say, "We will not pass any resolution of approbation or disapprobation upon this subject. In our organization here as a body of sovereign States, connected together by a common Constitution, we leave to every State the management of its local affairs, especially in respect to crimes and misdemeanors. Therefore the Senate of the United States will pass no resolution on the subject. It will not interfere. The Senate will not send a message to Governor Oates and request that he shall suspend execution if a jury in that State, under its laws and constitution and by proper legal methods of procedure, shall condemn an unfortunate individual to death."

The cases are exactly parallel, except that we owe quite as much respect to the sovereign powers of foreign Governments as we do to the sovereignty of one of our own States. Perhaps we have a better right of interference between our States and their people and the governors than we have between the citizens of Hawaii and that Government. I think we had better let the matter alone. If they commit a blunder in the eyes of the world, let it be a blunder. We are not responsible for it in any way. But if they should slay some man in obedience to the mandate of the law and he should be the man who slew Carter in his efforts to sustain a lawful Government in Hawaii to which he had sworn allegiance, perhaps eye for eye and tooth for tooth might do upon an occasion of that kind without exciting our special animosity. So far as I am concerned, I would have more respect for the Government of Hawaii if it should hang a traitor than I would if it should shrink from its duty and avoid contact with a disagreeable necessity. I should have more respect for it and the world would have more respect for it, and it would exhibit more of the power of government in itself. It is either a Government or it is not. If it is a Government it has these rights. If it is not, it had better close up business and hand back the Government to Liliuokalani, to the great gratification of a number of her American admirers.

But what would Liliuokalani have done if she had succeeded in the overthrow of what she considered to be an insurrection against her authority on the part of the Provisional Government which was established there? In her letters written after the fact, after cooling time, when she imagined there was still a remote possibility of her getting the reins of power in her hands again, she proclaimed death to the traitors and the banishment of all people connected with the revolution, especially the banishment of all missionaries and their wives and children from the estates and property which they had acquired. We know what she would have done. We know what she would do now with this treaty of reciprocity.

We know what she would do with this cable agreement; with the royal princess being educated under Mr. Davies's care in London, accepted, as I dare say upon her personal merits she is entitled to be, at the royal drawing-rooms there. There is no doubt at all that if Liliuokalani had succeeded in repressing the Provisional Government and retaining the reins of sovereign authority in her hands, resenting the feeling that has become flagrant all over the United States, she would have had resentment against us sufficient to have justified her, if in nothing else, in putting an end to this reciprocity treaty, as she would have had a right to do; to have thrown us overboard as to Pearl Harbor, and to have renounced the hold we have in the nature of a political mortgage upon the public lands, the Crown lands there, so that the Hawaiian Government can not lease or sell them without our consent. She would have rid herself very rapidly of these incumbrances of the United States. She would have found but one power in the world that had the audacity to take the possessions which she would have handed out, and that is the Government which is trying now by arts seductive to get our consent that she may go and have a permanent establishment in the Hawaiian group of islands.

Mr. President, I have but a single further remark. As the Vice-President of the United States was not in the chair at the time when I opened my remarks, I wish to say again to the Senate, without undertaking to repeat the argument which I made, as I suppose the question will be submitted to the Senate whether or not the amendment is in order, that I have not the slightest doubt of its perfect propriety and that it is justified by various provisions in the bill itself. It is in keeping with those provisions. It is for the purpose of carrying into operation some of the provisions, especially those as to the appointment and payment of a minister and a consul-general to Hawaii. And in many ways which I have already explained, as the RECORD will show, and which I need not explain again, the amendment is entirely within the reach of the power of the Senate without the violation of any of its rules. But the subject is so important, in my judgment, that I should vote for it if I knew I was violating the rules of the Senate in doing so. I would not allow traditions to stand in the way of a vote as important as I conceive to be the one I shall give upon this amendment under any circumstances.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, with the general tenor of the great speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] I am most heartily in sympathy. I shall vote for anything and everything, I had almost said without regard to rules, that will lead us to the construction of this cable. We have in matters enough forgotten our high place as a great nation among the great nations of the world. We have seen a treaty with Nicaragua withdrawn. We are not likely to see a bill for the building of that splendid canal carried through the present Congress. We have tried to escape from our very creditable conduct with respect to Samoa. We have tried, I am afraid, so far as our national Executive is concerned, to prevent the establishment of a republic in Hawaii.

Mr. President, many have spoken, and yet not too much has been said, concerning the magnificence of the relations of our future nation of one or two hundred millions to the unnumbered millions of Asia and the islands of the Pacific; and yet here we stand hesitating over an item of two or three million dollars which would give us instantaneous communication with Hawaii. Without that cable, and if Great Britain builds one, she will be a week ahead of us in intelligence and action in all matters concerning those little but important islands.

But I rise to protest a little against what the Senator from Alabama said toward the close of his remarks in the way of palliating the conduct of the Hawaiian Republic in its haste to condemn certain citizens to death and imagining the arguments that could be used in the event of the execution of such condemnation. I wish to record my mild protest in general, and to say that I do not believe the Government of Hawaii ought to execute the threatened men.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I will state that I have not one word of advice to give to Hawaii as to her own business. That is my position.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the Senator's argument tended very much to palliate her conduct if she should decide to execute those gentlemen.

The situation in Hawaii has been such upon both sides that whoever became the victor should have found it his policy and duty to be very merciful. Who can blame the people of Hawaii in general, the ordinary people, the natives especially of the islands, for being attached by tradition to the Government of their ancestors, the Government of many generations? They resisted the revolution. We do not blame them for that. I can not find it in my heart to consider it a very serious fault, if they had any reasonable opportunity of regaining their old position, that they should counsel and, if you choose to say, conspire in behalf of it. But the monarchy is gone forever. It is hopelessly banished.

The Republic is splendidly successful. It can not afford to imitate that conduct which the Queen intimated she might indulge in toward her enemies. It can not afford to do it. But I confess I have a personal reason. I see it stated in the dispatches transmitted to us this afternoon by the Secretary of State that Major Seward is condemned to death. Major Seward was a constituent of mine, and I think in law he is still my constituent; but, perhaps, rather of the Senator from South Carolina, for he owns land there. He is a member of one of the best families among us; he was a gallant soldier in the war, and he went to Honolulu a few years ago for his health. He became the private secretary and business agent of Mr. Cummins, who was one of three royalist commissioners who came over here, an eminent and wealthy man, once prime minister of the defunct government. The major came to me, his old commander and dear friend, merely to see me. We shook hands and had a very joyful meeting. He introduced me to those commissioners.

I saw Mr. Cummins, a man of fine physique and evident mental ability. But it appears from the dispatches—I hope it is not true—that he says Seward lived upon him and was his "evil mentor." God help him if he said that. If I had told him here in the Arlington that he was the subservient tool of that quiet, faithful clerk of the commissioners, Major Seward, he would certainly have been greatly offended. Major Seward is not a conspirator by nature. He is a man of peace, courteous, loving, witty, humorous, a lover of good people, good companions, and good order. That he has been one of the leading men in that conspiracy is perfectly ridiculous. I say it is perfectly ridiculous. Therefore I was restive when the Senator from Alabama supplied excuses for the reported purposes of the Hawaiian Republic.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I wish to enter a word of earnest protest against what I think is the bad advice to the present Government of Hawaii contained in the remarks of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I should think it deplorable, not only for its effect in those islands, but its effect upon public sentiment in this country, if the Government in the exigency that has arisen there resorts to sanguinary processes, which I think the Senator must, from his remarks, sympathize with.

Mr. MORGAN. I was speaking of the cold, naked rights of Hawaii as a sovereign state; that is all. I would have no sympathy with the execution of any person in Hawaii—not the slightest. If I had any advice to give to Hawaii it would be to exercise her authority in her own way, and I would temper it with mercy. I would temper it largely with mercy. What I said and what I meant to say was that a man like Mr. Carter can not be killed by a lot of insurrectionists against the Government for the purpose of breaking it up without some consequences from it.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; but there is a grave difference between such punishment as we visit even upon high treason and our methods and the speedy trial in a condition of excitement of the public mind by a military tribunal and immediate execution following. The Government of Hawaii, firmly established as it is, having put down this émeute with no great loss of life upon either side, can not, I believe, well afford now to resort to methods and processes which are not our methods and processes.

Mr. MORGAN. Our methods and processes at the close of revolutions and insurrections have not always been of the kind, gentle, and merciful character to which the Senator refers. The graves of Mrs. Surratt and Captain Wirtz indicate a different result.

Mr. BERRY. We ought not to follow such an example.

Mr. HALE. There was never such an instance of magnanimity known as that which the United States Government furnished at the end of the rebellion, and no man since has regretted it. It was a rebellion so monstrous in its extent and magnitude that Hawaii is a bagatelle compared with it; and after it was all over, and after the immense loss of blood and treasure, we hanged no man, we shot no man, we executed no man; and everyone of us to-day rejoices that it was so. And to-day if the Hawaiian Government proceeds on the other principle and with the other methods, and hangs and executes men right and left, you can not help the American people feeling that that Government has resorted not to the methods that the United States pursues and that all our people agree in, but that it is resorting to the methods that Mexico and the Central American republics and the South American republics resort to whenever there is a revolution. There will be a change of sentiment, and the sympathy which has been almost unvarying and unanimous in favor of the Government there and of the movement in establishing a republic will go awry at once, and will be hurt in every respect. Therefore I want to enter my protest against anything that looks like advising the present Government to resort to extreme measures.

Mr. GALLINGER. A little time ago the Senate very kindly gave unanimous consent to devote a half hour at the close of the debate to-day to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar. At that time I did not suppose the debate would continue so long, and a few moments ago I sent word over to the Senator from Kentucky that I would not ask that order to be executed, but I shall appeal to his kindness of heart at an early day, if the chairman of the Committee on Pensions does not, to let us pass the few private pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, which will give rise to no debate.

Mr. LODGE. As what I desire to say relates to the bill now under consideration, I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will yield to me just a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that a request to yield had come from the Senator from Massachusetts first.

Mr. McLAURIN. Very well; if I can have the floor afterwards.

Mr. LODGE. It relates to the pending bill, and that is the reason why I wish to speak about it now. I desire to move to the bill an amendment relating to the consular service. There is one amendment now pending, the amendment in regard to the cable, which comes from the committee, and therefore has precedence; but I now move my amendment, so that it may be pending to the bill when the vote is reached, as it is a very important amendment, and to-morrow I shall hope to be able to address the Senate upon it for a few moments. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I offer may be considered as pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALDRICH. To be considered as pending after the vote is taken on the amendment now before the Senate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; not to displace the pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. No; but that it may be considered as pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. Now, I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. HOAR. I wish to object for thirty seconds only to the request of the Senator from Mississippi, because I wish to say something that I should like to say to-night, and it will take about that time.

I do not wish to prolong this debate or to take part in it, but I wish to put upon record to-night my entire concurrence in and sympathy with what has been said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. CALL. I submit an amendment to the pending bill which has the approval of the chairman and other members of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the President of the United States is authorized to employ assistant secretaries of legation who can read and speak the language of the country to which the ambassadors or ministers of the United States are accredited when the public interest requires such employment, and the person so employed shall receive the same compensation as herein provided for the secretaries of legation of the United States to such country.

I ask that the amendment be printed, and I shall offer it when the pending amendments are disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CALL. I wish further to say that I desire to enter upon the record my concurrence with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and others who protest against any executions or any severe treatment of people in Hawaii on account of the late attempts to subvert the Government there.

PUBLIC LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in the State of Mississippi.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

*Be it enacted, etc., That the governor of the State of Mississippi be, and he is hereby, authorized to select out of the unoccupied and uninhabited lands of the United States, within the said State, 40,000 acres of land, in legal subdivisions, being a total equivalent to two townships, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall forthwith, upon receipt of said certificate, issue to the State of Mississippi patents for said lands: *Provided, That the proceeds of one township of said lands, when sold or leased, shall forever remain a fund for the use of the agricultural and mechanical college of said State; and the proceeds of one of said townships of land, when sold or leased, shall forever remain a fund for the use of the agricultural and mechanical college for colored persons, established and maintained by said State.

Sec. 2. That in making said selection the governor of said State of Mississippi shall designate the lands for the agricultural and mechanical college, and the lands for the agricultural and mechanical college for colored persons.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. CALL. I have in my hand a letter from W. Randal Cremer, a member of the Parliament of England, accompanied by a petition to the President and Congress of the United States, signed by 356 members of the British House of Commons, in which they commend the resolution passed by Congress for the submission of all international questions to arbitration and ask that further legislation may be had by Congress on the subject. I desire to say that I concur heartily in this recommendation, and at the proper time I shall be glad to address the Senate upon the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication presented by the Senator from Florida can only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the communication?

Mr. CALL. It is a petition—

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is a memorial from certain members of the House of Commons.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope there will be no objection to its reception.

Mr. CALL. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial is from citizens of a foreign power. Is there objection to its reception?

Mr. HOAR. I think it had better go over. I do not know anything about it, but it is the rule of the Senate, a rule of absolute propriety, I think, that communications from citizens of foreign countries must come to us through the executive department. I am not aware that we have ever departed from that rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair called the attention of the Senate to it because of the rule.

Mr. CALL. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. HOAR. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will go over, under the rule.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will withdraw my motion to adjourn, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 9, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

REVOLUTIONARY ARCHIVES.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct a reference, if it is the proper time to do so. On the 7th of January a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, by the direction of the President, pursuant to the sundry civil act approved August 18, 1894, a list of revolutionary archives, except military records, now in the State Department, of sufficient importance to publish, the number of books they would make, and the probable cost of the same, was referred to the Committee on Printing. This was called for by the Committee on Appropriations for consideration in connection with the sundry civil bill for the ensuing fiscal year. I ask to return the letter to the House, that the Committee on Printing be discharged from its consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. That can be done without objection. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the consideration of the following letter, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting, by direction of the President, pursuant to the sundry civil act approved August 18, 1894, a list of Revolutionary archives, except military records, now in the State Department, of sufficient importance to be published, the number of books they would make, and the probable cost of the same.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SUPPRESSION OF COUNTERFEITING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting, submitted by the Chief of the Secret Service; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATION FOR PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional estimates of deficiencies in the appropriation for public printing and binding, submitted by the Public Printer; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, S. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an additional appropriation for the United States post-office, court-house, etc., building now being erected at Charleston, S. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a number of letters of the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letter of the Chief of Engineers, reports of preliminary examinations, which will be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and, without objection, the titles will be printed in the RECORD without being read. There are quite a number of them.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The titles of the letters are as follows:

Channel connecting Irondequoit Bay, New York, with Lake Ontario; Drum Inlet between Portsmouth and Cape Lookout, North Carolina; North River, North Carolina; for a steamboat channel between Beaufort, S. C., and Savannah, Ga.; Bayou Dugdamona, Louisiana; Alligator River, South Carolina; Bayou Castor, Louisiana; between South Amboy and Great Beds Light, with a view to deepening the channel; and Milford Haven from Planktank River, Virginia.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally referred as follows:

The bill (S. 1921) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the city of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2669) to repeal section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring the district judge in the southern district of Florida to reside at Key West—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2511) granting a pension to Eugenia B. Sweeney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2364) for the relief of Silas P. Keller—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 5603) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," etc., with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. ROBBINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this day, on account of sickness.

MILDRED P. POULLAIN.

Mr. LAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution (reported as a substitute for H. R. 989) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 989) for the relief of Mildred P. Poullain, widow of Dr. Thomas N. Poullain, deceased, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts, under the provisions of the acts of March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker acts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. What is this for, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk can report the bill, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. LAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this is a claim for cotton which was taken three months after the war closed. The resolution is unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims, recommending the reference of the case to the Court of Claims to ascertain the facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. LAWSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

GILMAN L. JOHNSON.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 840) to correct the muster of Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the record of Second Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson, late of the One hundred and forty-second Regiment of New York Infantry, so as to make his muster as said lieutenant date from the date of his enlistment in said regiment, and that he have all rights and emoluments due him thereby or by reason thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman if this is not one of a class of cases?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. No, sir; it is an entirely distinct case, as I think I can make plain to the House if I may make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman can make a short explanation.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, the beneficiary of this, Gilman L. Johnson, now a resident of the State of Iowa, was one of the first boys to enlist in the company which I organized in April, 1861, and he served through the term of that regiment, the Sixteenth New York Infantry. Later, when I became colonel of the One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers, and the Sixteenth Regiment had been mustered out of the service, I asked the governor of New York to commission him a second lieutenant in the One hundred and forty-second Volunteers. He joined the regiment when serving in South Carolina, but, in the meantime, the exigencies of the service had so reduced the regiment that he could not be mustered a second lieutenant for want of sufficient men.

Instead of returning home he enlisted, at my suggestion, in the One hundred and forty-second, and was later made sergeant and shortly after was made sergeant-major. He performed during all the time from his enlistment duties pertaining to the rank of a commissioned officer. He commanded troops on Johns Island in January, 1864, and lost his right arm in the engagement. When it was found that some time must elapse before he could be mustered as a second lieutenant—the occasion did not really occur until the next October, when the regiment was increased by recruits—I recommended his appointment as first lieutenant. That commission was made out, but was on board a vessel that was several weeks under water in Hampton Roads, so that it was a long time after he was commissioned before he was mustered as first lieutenant.

This young man was a brave soldier and discharged his duty in the various positions he occupied with ability, and by reason of his long and faithful service he is justly entitled to this relief. A similar bill was introduced in the last Congress and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], who, as lieutenant-governor of that State, had known Mr. Johnson when he was in the State senate, reported the bill favorably and it passed the House, but the time before adjournment was too short to secure its passage in the Senate. The bill has been again reported by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] from the Military Committee, and it comes before the House as one of the most meritorious measures, in relation to the correction of a military record, ever presented here.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, this is only one of a class of bills. There are several such cases and I believe there ought to be general legislation instead of special, and therefore I object to the consideration of this bill now.

EVENING SESSION DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent that the session of tonight be dispensed with.

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

A MEMBER (to Mr. BYNUM). Do not object; members can not get here on account of the storm.

Mr. BYNUM. It is suggested to me by a number of gentlemen that on account of the storm members will not be able to attend the session this evening. I therefore withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the order requested will be made.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees for reports be omitted, and that gentlemen having reports to present may file them with the Clerk.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The first business in order was the bill (H. R. 8665) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. With the consent of the Committee on Naval Affairs I ask that this bill be passed over.

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole then proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the first or formal reading of this bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a very brief statement.

The total estimates for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the ensuing fiscal year amounted to $22,349,101.57. But that estimate failed to include $250,000 for special examiners, which the Secretary of the Interior intended to provide for; so that the total estimates should have been $22,599,101.57. The appropriations for 1895 amounted to $21,367,623.29. So that the estimates for 1896 show an increase of $1,231,478.28 over the appropriations for 1895. The bill now before the committee carries $21,367,623.27, being $437,903.23 more than the appropriations for the current year.

I have here statements, which I will submit, showing the reductions made in this bill, which will amount to $463,637.10, the items of which are as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I now ask consent that general debate on this bill be considered as closed, with the understanding that if on any paragraph when reached there should be a desire for more extended debate than would be allowed under the five-minute rule, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and myself will have no difficulty in arranging the matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not wish at this time to make any remarks in reference to the bill. I prefer to postpone my remarks until the paragraphs embracing certain changes shall be reached. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] informs me that he would like to have thirty minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. I should like to occupy thirty or forty minutes—perhaps not so much—but prefer to do so, if I can, when we reach the subject which I wish to discuss.

Mr. DOCKERY. That will be all right. I presume the gentleman has reference to the appropriation for pension examiners?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. The understanding is, then, that when we reach certain provisions in the bill in which changes have been made there will be no objection to a reasonable time for debate?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think there will be any trouble between the gentleman from Maine and myself on that account. Of course, I do not want to open the door to debate without limit.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think we can agree upon the time when we reach any item of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. All right. I prefer to make any remarks I desire to submit when we reach the particular item in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no desire whatever to cut off any reasonable debate.

Mr. PICKLER. It is understood if I should desire thirty or forty minutes during the progress of the bill that I can have it?

Mr. DOCKERY. There will be no trouble about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the general debate be now closed? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. What was the agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all general debate be closed on the bill and that it be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As I understood the colloquy, there was an agreement that when certain sections of the bill were read there might be debate beyond the time allowed under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not able to hear the colloquy to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. DOCKERY. I stated that if more extended time was desired on any particular provision than the five-minute rule allowed the gentleman from Maine and myself would be able to reach some agreement.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But that was not made a part of the agreement in the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think there will be any trouble about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky object to closing general debate on the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment and debate.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Having reached the paragraph under the head of "Congressional Directory," on line 9—

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8767, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 273) for the immediate relief of the suffering poor in the District of Columbia; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will submit to the House at this time the message of the President.

The message was read, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed [the reading being accompanied by manifestations of applause on the floor.]

It is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Since my recent communication to the Congress, calling attention to our financial condition and suggesting legislation which I deemed essential to our national welfare and credit, the anxiety and apprehension then existing in business circles have continued.

As a precaution, therefore, against the failure of timely legislative aid through Congressional action, cautious preparations have been pending to employ to the best possible advantage, in default of better means, such executive authority as may, without additional legislation, be exercised for the purpose of reinforcing and maintaining in our Treasury an adequate and safe gold reserve.

In the judgment of those especially charged with this responsibility, the business situation is so critical and the legislative situation is so unpromising, with the omission thus far on the part of Congress to beneficially enlarge the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury in the premises, as to enjoin immediate Executive action with the facilities now at hand.

Therefore, in pursuance of section 8700 of the Revised Statutes, the details of an arrangement have this day been concluded with parties abundantly able to fulfill their undertaking, whereby bonds of the United States, authorized under the act of July 14, 1875, payable in coin thirty years after their date, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to the amount of a little less than $62,400,000, are to be issued for the purchase of gold coin, amounting to a sum slightly in excess of $65,000,000, to be delivered to the Treasury of the United States, which sum, added to the gold now held in our reserve, will so restore such reserve as to make it amount to something more than $100,000,000. Such a premium is to be allowed to the Government upon the bonds as to fix the rate of interest upon the amount of gold realized at 3½ per cent per annum. At least one-half of the gold to be obtained is to be supplied from abroad, which is a very important and favorable feature of the transaction.

The privilege is especially reserved to the Government to substitute at par within ten days from this date, in lieu of the 4 per cent coin bonds, other bonds in terms payable in gold and bearing only 3 per cent interest, if the issue of the same should in the meantime be authorized by the Congress.

The arrangement thus completed, which, after careful inquiry, appears in present circumstances and considering all the objects desired to be the best attainable, develops such a difference in the estimation of investors between bonds made payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold in favor of the latter as is represented by three-fourths of a cent in annual interest. In the agreement just concluded the annual saving in interest to the Government, if 3 per cent gold bonds should be substituted for 4 per cent coin bonds under the privilege reserved, would be $539,159, amounting in thirty years, or at the maturity of the coin bonds, to $16,174,770.

Of course there never should be a doubt in any quarter as to the redemption in gold of the bonds of the Government which are made payable in coin. Therefore, the discrimination, in the judgment of investors, between our bond obligations payable in coin and those specifically made payable in gold is very significant. It is hardly necessary to suggest that, whatever may be our views on the subject, the sentiments or preferences of those with whom we must negotiate in disposing of our bonds for gold are not subject to our dictation.

I have only to add that in my opinion the transaction herein detailed for the information of the Congress promises better results than the efforts previously made in the direction of effectively adding to our gold reserve through the sale of bonds; and I believe it will tend, as far as such action can in present circumstances, to meet the determination expressed in the law repealing the silver-purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, and that, in the language of such repealing act, the arrangement made will aid our efforts to "insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1895.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress shall, before the expiration of his term of service, appoint from among the Representatives-elect to the Fifty-fourth Congress a temporary committee on accounts, of three members, which said committee on accounts shall have the same powers and perform the same duties in reference to payments made from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress as are now authorized by law and the rules of the present House of Representatives; and which said temporary committee on accounts shall begin to exercise its powers immediately upon the termination of this Congress, and shall continue to exercise and discharge said duties until after the meeting and organization of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress and until the appointment of the regular Committee on Accounts. And all payments made out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by said temporary committee on accounts shall be deemed, held, and taken, and are hereby declared to be, conclusive upon all the Departments and auditing officers of the Government. And hereafter the Speaker of the House of Representatives of each subsequent Congress shall, before the termination of the last session of each Congress, appoint, from the Representatives-elect, a temporary committee on accounts of three members, with similar powers and for the same purposes.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to reserve the point of order on the paragraph beginning with line 28, on page 10, down to and including line 28, on page 11, until we can hear some explanation of what this is intended to accomplish. It is a new provision of law.

Mr. DOCKERY. The object is simply this: Under the new accounting system the disbursing officers are required to make prompt reports. They can not pay out any public moneys and consult their own convenience as to making reports. The disbursement of the contingent fund of the House is under the supervision of the committee on accounts. This body—the House of Representatives—is not a continuing body. At the end of every two years there is usually a vacancy of nine months, when the House is not in session, and it is necessary therefore to appoint temporarily a Committee on Accounts of three members to authorize the payment of the contingent fund.

The amount involved is small, only about $8,000, as I am informed, and goes to the washerwomen and laborers about the Capitol.

Mr. PICKLER. How has it been done heretofore?

Mr. DOCKERY. The disbursing officer has made up his accounts and then made his report to the Treasury at his convenience. He is now required to do so promptly under the new law, and this is in the interest of the prompt payment of what is due to the laborers about the Capitol.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For mileage, $120,000.

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $385,297.32.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I see here an item for mileage, $130,000, and for compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $385,297.32.

I find that for the same service, apparently, for the Senate, the compensation for clerks, messengers, and others was $425,700, making about $100,000 more paid for clerical services and necessary expenses of the Senate than is paid by the House. I should like to have an explanation of that from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. As far as the mileage is concerned, that is fixed by law.

Mr. HUNTER. The mileage is not included in the question that I ask. I wish to know about the compensation of officers, clerks, etc.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will simply state to the gentleman that it is the old contest between the Senate and the House, which is known to everybody. We all understand that the force carried at the other end of the Capitol is very much larger and at a larger compensation than the force at this end of the Capitol. The Senate claims the right to fix their own affairs, and it is a contest that has gone on for perhaps fifty years. I suppose it will go on for the next fifty years, and the end of each repeated contest will be that the Senate will get what they claim to be their right, to fix the compensation and number of their own employees.

Mr. HUNTER. While I am perfectly willing to concede to the Senate the right to ask for appropriations for the various persons employed there, and to ask that the various places be filled under their regulations, yet at the same time it seems to me that there is such a discrepancy here, when this House certainly ought to cost a great deal more than the Senate for the transaction of its business of this character, that we ought here and now to settle this matter so that there would be at least some sort of parity between the Senate and the House in this question of expenditure.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the gentleman has offered no amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask for an explanation.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is the old fight, known to every member here. If the gentleman wants my opinion, I think the Senate have too many employees, and that they are paid too much. That is my judgment.

Mr. MONEY. The House has always thought that.

Mr. DOCKERY. The House has always thought that. This House is no exception to the rule. The House under all administrations has antagonized that policy, but the Senate have always insisted upon fixing the number and compensation of their own employees.

Mr. DINGLEY. We have always been compelled to admit that the Senate could control its own domestic concerns and the House its own domestic concerns.

Mr. DOCKERY. That has always been the result.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: For Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $5,000; and for hire of horses and wagons and cartage for the use of the Clerk's office, $900, or so much thereof as may be necessary; for Chief Clerk, Journal Clerk, and two reading clerks, at $3,000 each, and for the Journal Clerk for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum; tally clerk, $2,000; for printing and bill clerk, and disbursing clerk, at $2,500 each; for file clerk and enrolling clerk, at $2,500 each; for assistant disbursing clerk, assistant enrolling clerk, resolution and petition clerk, newspaper clerk, index clerk, assistant journal clerk, and librarian, at $2,000 each; for distributing clerk, stationery clerk, and two assistant librarians, at $1,800 each; for one bookkeeper and seven clerks, at $1,600 each; for document clerk and locksmith, at $1,400 each; two messengers in the House library, at $1,314 each; telegraph operator and assistant file clerk, at $1,200 each; one page, one laborer in the bathroom, and four laborers, at $720 each; one assistant index clerk, during the session and ninety-two days after its close, three hundred and four days, at $5 per day, $1,824; one page in the enrolling room, and messenger in the Chief Clerk's office, at $720 each; in all, $83,282.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, after line 5, insert the following:

"That hereafter the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions of either House of Congress shall be done in accordance with the concurrent resolution adopted by the Fifty-third Congress at its first session, November 1, 1893: Provided, That during the last six days of a session such engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions may be done otherwise than as prescribed in said concurrent resolution, upon the order of Congress by concurrent resolution."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should like to ask a question, so that I may reserve a point of order if I desire to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I was going to suggest that instead of it being done by joint resolution, it were better to have it done, I will suggest to the chairman of the committee, by the joint order of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House—

Mr. DOCKERY. It is not a joint resolution. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Than by any resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think I can explain it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It seems to me it would be better to let it be done by the joint order of the presiding officers of the two Houses than by resolution of the two Houses themselves, because such a resolution will take time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say simply this: That this continues the present system of engrossing and enrolling bills by printing, but allows, during the last week of the session, the two bodies by concurrent resolution, if there should be an emergency, to employ the old methods. There might be such an emergency as would make it necessary to employ the old method. This simply continues the present method of engrossing and enrolling bills by printing, except that it provides that, during the last week of the session, when everything is in a rush, the two bodies by concurrent resolution may provide for a modification of the system, if necessary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If there should arise such an emergency, why not let it be met in the discretion of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House? Why not let them do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. For this reason: It is thought the better policy now to provide for that by concurrent resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have no objection. The emergency arises pretty quickly, especially in connection with appropriation bills, at the close of the session.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would be a privileged resolution in either body.

Mr. DINGLEY. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the concurrent resolution that was adopted by the House and the Senate simply applies to the present Congress, and this provision is to continue this printing method of enrolled and engrossed bills in the future which has worked so well. And I want to say with reference to that method that not a single error has occurred in consequence of it; and wherever an error has occurred it has been through some officers or one or other of the two Houses. There is a general desire to make this arrangement permanent in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to make a point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Maine, and the gentleman from Missouri also, I will not insist upon the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For superintendent of document room, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, and for two laborers, at the rate of $900 per annum each, until December 2, 1895, or until the assembling of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, $1,900.55.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, after line 11, insert the following:

"For two laborers, now authorized under a resolution to be employed in the office of the Clerk from March 4, 1895, to June 30, 1896, inclusive, at $90 per month, $1,900.55."

Mr. DOCKERY. That is pursuant to an order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks and messengers to committees: For clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,000; messenger, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,000; messenger, $1,000; clerks to Committees on Accounts, Agriculture, Claims, District of Columbia, Elections, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Invalid Pensions, Judiciary, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post-Office and Post-Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, Rivers and Harbors, War Claims, and clerk to continue Digest of Claims under resolution of March 7, 1888, at $2,000 each; and for assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $1,200; in all, $50,400.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill how many less clerks are provided for committees than heretofore.

Mr. DOCKERY. There are 9 less, including 5 assistant clerks. They are usually provided for by resolution at the first session of each Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. How many less does the gentleman say are provided for?

Mr. DOCKERY. Nine less.

Mr. DINGLEY. The annual clerks are just the same. In the paragraph following the reduction of session clerks is made.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to say that the annual clerks which are provided for in this bill are precisely as they stand in the current law. There has been an application made to the Committee on Appropriations to give an annual clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but the committee did not feel authorized to make any recommendation for that, the House not having acted upon it. Therefore the annual clerks stand precisely as in the current law. There is a reduction in the next paragraph in the number of session clerks—5 clerks and 4 assistant clerks.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 14 clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $17,808.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, as I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill, there are 8 less assistant per diem clerks provided for here.

Mr. DINGLEY. Nine less.

Mr. DOCKERY. Nine less are provided for under this paragraph.

Mr. PICKLER. Are these the clerks that heretofore have been used as assistant clerks to committees?

Mr. DOCKERY. They are usually provided for by resolution, to be paid out of the contingent fund, at the first session of each Congress. When it desires to furnish the committees with additional assistance Congress passes a resolution providing for their payment out of the contingent fund; and then at the second session the salaries for those assistant clerks to committees are provided for in the legislative bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Then, if this reduction is made, it will take away that many assistants from these committees.

Mr. DOCKERY. It does for the time. But the practice is that each Congress determines for itself what number of assistant clerks it desires.

Mr. PICKLER. As I understand, when members were provided with individual clerks, quite a large number of these committees were deprived of clerks. It was considered that the member's clerk could take care of them.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right; and instead of these 9 assistants we give 9 additional clerks to members.

Mr. PICKLER. I think the members ought to have annual clerks, just like the Senate.

A MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is not the issue here.

Mr. PICKLER. But we might adopt that issue. There are a number of these committees that can not get along without clerks, and it is a saving to the Government for a member of a committee to have an individual clerk. The Agricultural Department has lessened its expense quite largely, as I understand, because members are now provided with clerks, and that Department is not required to do the work that they had done heretofore.

Mr. DOCKERY. We have simply provided for 14 clerks to the committees, and that does not interfere at all with the annual clerkships.

Mr. PICKLER. I am interested in this. Being a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I know we need clerical assistance. My point is, whether in the next Congress members will have to get along without that assistance.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is left for each Congress to determine what clerical assistance it wants.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not understand—it may be my inability—where this reduction is to be made.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will illustrate: Suppose, which is not altogether unlikely, that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] should be chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the next House. He would doubtless offer a resolution providing that the committee be allowed one or two additional clerks, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. That resolution would be reported by the Committee on Accounts and would doubtless be agreed to, as such resolutions generally are, and the committee would have its assistant clerks, as it has had in the past.

Mr. PICKLER. But why should we not provide on this bill now for annual clerks for members and be done with it?

Mr. DOCKERY. Because the custom has always been to allow each House to determine for itself what additional clerical service it needs.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman from Missouri misapprehends the question of the gentleman from South Dakota. He asks why not provide annual clerks for members now?

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not understand the gentleman's inquiry in that way. That is another question entirely.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is perhaps proper that the committee should fully understand just the change that the provision in the bill makes. Five session clerks to committees that now have them are dropped under this bill. Those are the Committees on Mines and Mining, on the Revision of the Laws, on the Library, on the Election of President and Vice-President, and on Arid Lands. One assistant clerk is dropped from the Committee on Military Affairs, 1 from another committee, and 2 assistant clerks are dropped from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This makes 9 in all that are dropped, leaving 1 annual clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also the clerk that is ordinarily detailed from the Pension Office. Of course, as to assistant clerks, the next House will undoubtedly take care of that, but as to these five committees whose per diem clerks are dropped by the pending provision, 5 additional clerks will be given to the members.

The whole question lies right here. Since the original distribution of committees at the beginning of the last Congress, by a joint resolution of Congress all members who do not have a clerk as chairman of a committee have been provided with clerks at the rate of $100 per month during the session. In view of that fact the committee have dropped these 5 committee clerks, on the ground that it does not appear that the committees by whom they are employed have had any business of consequence during the life of this Congress. The only difference, of course, is in this respect: if the chairman of a committee has a per diem clerk, the compensation of that clerk will be $80 a month more than that of his session clerk would be under the resolution adopted at the beginning of the present Congress. In either case the chairman obtains the clerk, the difference being only in the compensation.

The simple question is whether or not the per diem clerks for the five committees that I have named shall be dropped, and the chairmen of those committees, in pursuance of law, be each allowed a clerk at $100 a month. Otherwise there would be the same number of clerks to whom a compensation of $80 a month more would be paid. The question is whether, in view of the fact that we now by law give every member a clerk, we shall drop clerks for the chairmen of the committees where it appears that those committees are doing little or no business.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine what committees lose their session clerks under this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have already named them: The Committee on Mines and Mining, the Committee on Revision of the Laws, the Committee on the Library, the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President, and the Committee on Arid Lands.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say a word as to the proposition to deprive the Committee on the Library of its clerk. I have the honor to be chairman of that committee now, but I shall not be in the next Congress. The session clerk receives $186 a month instead of the $100 which he would receive if he were my private secretary. It is claimed that the committee does no work. That is an error. We do have meetings and we have a great deal of business before us, and the only reason that we have not reported many bills at this session has been that we have refrained from doing so out of deference to the wishes of the Committee on Appropriations, by whom we were told that they would allow no appropriation whatever of such a nature to go through. The aggregate of the bills before our committee amounts probably to hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not to a million. Those bills come from almost every part of the Union, from nearly every State—North, South, East, and West. Now, I submit that to deprive a committee of that character of its session clerk is an error on the side of niggardly policy, and I do not think it should be done.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, this reduction does not apply to this Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. No; to the next Congress.

Mr. HULL. There are 19 of these committee clerks that this Congress has had, and you propose to reduce the number by 5. Now, I want to suggest to my friend from Maine that by this policy he thrusts upon the next Congress the burden of coming in here with a resolution from each committee asking for a clerk.

Mr. DINGLEY. Provided they decide to do so.

Mr. HULL. You do that, and that policy will make it appear that the next Congress is increasing the number of clerks, when as a matter of fact it will be asking only for the number that this Congress has.

Mr. DINGLEY. But those clerks were obtained by joint resolution at the beginning of this Congress.

Mr. HULL. But we shall be met with the charge that we are trying to increase the number of our clerks, when, in fact, we shall only be restoring the old number. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "fourteen" and inserting "twenty-three." If this amendment should be adopted, I shall follow it with an increase of the amount appropriated, so as to leave these clerks just as they stand in the present Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph to which that amendment applies has not been read.

Mr. HULL. Let it be read, then.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there any amendment pending? I should like this discussion to proceed in order.

Mr. PICKLER. I suggest that by unanimous consent, before we pass to a new paragraph, we return to the top of page 18, to consider the matter of members' clerks and see whether we can not settle it. I have an amendment in reference to that matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. If anything should occur making it necessary in the rearrangement of paragraphs passed over, that can be returned to by consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 14 clerks to committees, at $6 each per day, during the session, $17,808.

Mr. HULL. I now move to amend by striking out "fourteen" and inserting "twenty-three," so as to provide for 23 clerks to committees, etc.

I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, because the number which I propose to insert is the number of clerks which our committees have had heretofore and the number which we have at the present time. The proposition in effect is that the committees shall have their per diem clerks in the Fifty-fourth Congress just as they have them now. There is no reason why this Congress should start out to handicap the next Congress as to the number of its committee clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. Allow me to say that the last Congress had 34 of these session clerks; and this Congress has dispensed with 11 of those clerkships, which were useless.

Mr. HULL. The presumption is that this is a very economical Congress, and that it has reduced its force to the lowest number consistent with the interest of the public service. When this Congress reduced the number from 34 to 23 it made all the reduction in its judgment necessary. I think the gentleman in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], ought to concede that if we in this Congress have reduced the number of clerks from 34 to 23, the presumption is that we have done the best that could be done. Why should we now try to cut down the force of the next Congress or compel the committees in that Congress to come in with resolution after resolution, fighting each question separately, to determine whether they shall have the same number of clerks that we have in this Congress, thus subjecting its committees to the false criticism of unusual clerical force.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly the gentleman did not hear the explanation I made a while ago.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes, I did; but what I am considering is the effect of your action, not your explanation.

Mr. DOCKERY. The custom, so far at least as assistant clerks are concerned, is to let each House determine for itself the number of assistant clerks it shall have. This House determined that question for itself; former Houses have done so; and the Fifty-fourth Congress ought to be allowed to do the same.

Mr. HULL. The Fifty-second Congress did not reduce the number below 23.

Mr. DOCKERY. They made a reduction from 34 to 23.

Mr. HULL. And stopped at that.

Mr. DOCKERY. That was done by unanimous vote.

Mr. HULL. And 23 has stood as the number for this Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. And now you propose to reduce the number to 14, and the presumption is that you are handicapping the next Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. No, we can not handicap the next Congress, because this is a matter which, according to custom, each House determines for itself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. For what Congress are we making provision in this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. For the first session of the next Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then why does the gentleman say that this does not affect the next Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. I explained a while ago to the gentleman from South Dakota, and have since explained to the gentleman from Iowa, that, so far as the number of assistant clerks is concerned, it is a matter which, according to custom, has always been left to be determined by each House for itself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it seems that in this case we are undertaking to determine it for the next House.

Mr. DOCKERY. My proposition is that we shall not do so; that we provide for the essential committee clerkships and allow the next House to determine for itself how many assistant clerks shall be appointed.

Mr. HULL. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that this is confined to assistant clerks; as I understand, we are striking out five committee clerks as well as a number of assistant clerks. We strike out five committee clerks absolutely. The gentleman from Missouri talks as though the proposition in the bill affected simply the assistant clerks. That is not the fact; it affects clerks of both classes, and places the next Congress at a disadvantage.

Mr. DOCKERY. If I was so understood I wish to qualify that statement, because there are some session clerks included.

Mr. HULL. Five session clerks, as I understand, and 4 assistant clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is right as to that. But I want to say to the gentleman that the House has stricken out 11 clerks to useless committees already. This is a matter that, so far as I am concerned, I am willing, and in the committee was also willing, to leave to the minority of the committee, because it is a matter that refers to the next House. I left it to gentlemen representing the minority, and the bill comes before the House in this form with their approval.

Mr. HULL. I think it would be better grace to let the next House determine that question for itself, rather than for this House to undertake to do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. But of course we are compelled to make the law at this session.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; you can make the law; I am perfectly willing for that. But do not undertake to limit the next House in this manner.

I am perfectly willing, Mr. Chairman, to let this go over until we reach the paragraph referred to by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; let it be passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, Members and Delegates, House of Representatives: To pay Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1895, $250,000.00, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18 strike out all after the word "Representatives" in line 2, down to and including the word "necessary" in line 9, and insert:

"For annual clerks to Members who are not chairmen of committees, and to Delegates from Territories, at $1,200 each, from and after March 4, 1895."

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DOCKERY. I feel constrained to raise the point of order upon that. [Cries of "No!" and "Vote!"]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, as the Chair understands, makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I will simply submit it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair overrules the point of order, and submits the amendment.

The Chair proceeded to submit the question; and announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point that it is too late to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to submit an amendment at this time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to strike out of the amendment of the gentleman from New York the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "from the day the Fifty-fourth Congress assembles."

I go out of Congress and have no personal interest in the matter. I offer this amendment; and I can speak from experience as to the propriety of its adoption. I do not think that members of Congress ought to have clerks assigned to them prior to the organization of Congress. I think it is not proper in any sense of the word, nor is it necessary; but when Congress assembles then I believe the services of the clerk are required, his compensation ought to begin, and that the need of a clerk during a recess between the sessions is as great as it is while Congress is in session. I think the proper thing to do is to let the clerk's salary begin on the day the Congress assembles and continue until the expiration of the Congress. That is a fair and proper thing, and that is what is proposed in the amendment. I make to the amendment of the gentleman from New York. To provide clerks for members before they have to be here and do not need to make any arrangements requiring such assistance seems to me to be entirely unnecessary and improper.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from New York and the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment of Mr. BARTLETT was again read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, what is this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This is the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. PICKLER. That has been already adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I make the point of order that the committee has already voted upon that amendment and agreed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "March 4, 1895" and insert "from the day the Fifty-fourth Congress assembles."

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point of order on the amendment. I want to know how an amendment can be offered to an amendment that has been already adopted. The committee had voted on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was voting on the amendment, but the Chair had not announced the result. The gentleman from Kentucky rose in time, although the Chair was just on the point of announcing the vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to modify my amendment, to strike out of the amendment of the gentleman from New York the word "annual" also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, as I occupy a little different situation from that of my friend from Kentucky who offers the amendment, I feel that I can, without any passion or prejudice in the matter, address myself to it, unhampered by the fact that I am not in the next Congress.

I happen to be of that number who will be members of the next Congress. I believe that, if the amendment of the gentleman from New York is to be adopted and this clerical place is to be made more permanent, the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky ought to prevail.

There is no sufficient reason why we should make an appropriation of over a third of a million dollars now for the purpose of giving clerks to members for the nine months to intervene between the 4th of March and the 1st of December. If I have made a correct mental calculation, that is about what it would take to meet this proposition of the gentleman from New York. Now, I believe that if we are to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, that of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] ought to prevail. What reason is there for each member of the House keeping a clerk at $1,200 a year, during the recess?

I know the great duties that devolve upon members during the session, but in making provision for them under existing law we ought to be careful not to make any more expensive drafts upon the Treasury than we can avoid. I shall therefore favor the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York; but I am opposed to both, and I shall vote against giving annual clerks in any shape, form, or fashion. The present law allows clerk hire for members during the session. The amendment of the gentleman from New York converts these clerkships to annual places at twelve-hundred-dollar salaries. The present law gives a clerk only to those members who are not chairmen of committees which have a clerk. But this goes still further and gives a clerk to every member for nine months when Congress is not in session. It should not be adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am entirely willing that the House shall have a chance to vote on this proposition, because it is a matter which relates to the convenience and comfort of the House; but I am opposed to this proposition for annual clerks. I do not believe it is wise. I do not believe it is sound policy to provide clerks for members for the nine months when the House is not in session. I know there is seemingly a strong claim in equity, because the other body is provided with annual clerks; but I confess frankly, Mr. Chairman, that if this proposition should prevail I can not understand what use I would have for a clerk during the nine months. I am unwilling, and I trust that this House will not support the proposition, to give annual clerks to members during vacation, when those clerks can have no official duties to discharge.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose it would be within the power of every member, under this provision, to employ a clerk during such time as he needed his services, and certify just the amount actually paid.

Mr. DOCKERY. While that is true, I want to say another thing, if the gentleman will allow me. While I am opposed to annual clerks and shall vote against this proposition, because I do not see how I can use a clerk during the vacation, I do believe that some amendment ought to be made to existing law in respect to the employment of these clerks. The members of this body and the body that is to follow ought not to be under the suspicion, by the terms of the law now on the statute books, of using any of the fund for our own purposes.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think that provision ought to be changed in some respect, because we ought to avoid the suspicion and the very appearance of any provision that would make any part of this sum payable to the members of the House for their own use. While I think there ought to be an amendment to that statute by which we should each have a clerk during the session, I do not believe that the business committed to the members of this House warrants them in having annual clerks during the vacation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I rise for the purpose of putting my amendment in the shape of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the provision which is offered as a substitute, as the Chair understands it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerks to Members who are not chairmen of committees, and to Delegates, $100 per month, from the day the Fifty-fourth Congress meets until March 4, 1897.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], who offers the first amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to say a few words in favor of the amendment which I have offered. There is no man in this House who is more in favor of true economy or economical management than I am. But I believe for one that we should either have no clerks at all or that we should have annual clerks.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT. I for one do not care whether I have a clerk or secretary or not, but if I have a clerk or secretary I think he should be an annual clerk. Now, I was unaware, until I heard the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Missouri announce it, that the Fifty-fourth Congress could not possibly meet until December next. That is the first authoritative intimation that I have had that there was no possible danger under any circumstances whatever of an extra session.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I can not. Now, let us see how absolutely illogical the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is. The present system is right or the amendment that I offer is right. We do not want any such hybrid plan as that offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. What does he suggest? He says that this annual salary shall commence on the first day of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and then continue as an annual salary until the 4th of March, 1897.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This bill does not go beyond June 30, 1896.

Mr. BARTLETT. What logic is there in the gentleman's proposition? If we are to have annual clerks, those clerks should come into official existence with the inception of the new Congress.

Now, gentlemen, I say to you that I have fought appropriations whenever I have thought them to be unjust. But I believe this is a just amendment, which should receive the support of this body and that it will receive it on both sides of the House.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, for many years the members of this House had no clerks during the session of Congress. When members of this House debated the question and passed the amendment which gave to each member a clerk the argument presented was that while we, as Representatives, were attending to our duties as Congressmen we needed clerks to assist us with our correspondence, etc. That was the main argument presented then. I believe now that we should adhere to that position. I am satisfied that each member of Congress needs a clerk when Congress is in session; but I do not believe that members' clerks ought to be paid when Congress is not in session. I believe, also, that instead of requiring a member of Congress to certify, as he is now required, there should be a change in the law, so that each clerk be allowed a certain amount while Congress is in session.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to offer a substitute for both propositions?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I yield, as I have said all I desired to say.

The CHAIRMAN. One substitute is already pending. The gentleman from Kentucky has offered a substitute for the pending amendment; therefore another substitute will not be in order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask consent to have the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, read.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not making a motion, I am only asking consent.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order unless it is properly offered, if it is offered as a substitute.

Mr. McMILLIN. But, Mr. Chairman, I asked the Chair to ask consent of the committee that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri be read; and I think it is due him.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman offers it as a substitute it can not be entertained.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. He can read it in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can read it in his own time.

Mr. DOCKERY. In my own time I will have this read, to be offered as a substitute at the proper time. I understood the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky was offered as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I ask to have read in my time the substitute I will offer as soon as I can do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Representatives," in line 2, down to and including line 9, on page 18, and insert the following:

"For clerks to members who are not chairmen of committees entitled to have clerks and to Delegates from Territories, at the rate of $100 per month each during the session of Congress, $230,880.15, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. PICKLER. That is the law now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, there is embodied—

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope that the Chair will be able to procure better order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has failed to get better order. The Chair can not control members, but can only appeal to them. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, there is embodied in the rules of this House a provision to the effect that an amendment changing existing law shall not be admissible upon an appropriation bill unless it lessens the amount carried by the bill. I have known that provision to be successfully invoked time and time again for the economical purpose of saving five or ten dollars or a hundred dollars; but for the first time, so far as I know, in the history of this House or the Congress which preceded it, that proposition has been offered, in a pro forma way, as a point of order against an amendment here proposed which would take out of the Treasury between next March and next December $300,000 or $400,000; and it has been handled in a way to invoke an overruling of it. The point of order has been overruled, and we stand here under a decision of the Chair that a proposition to change the law by amendment to an appropriation bill, so as to provide for paying to each member of this House $100 per month for clerk hire when the House is not in session, is admissible under the rules of the House. Ordinarily such points are made by gentlemen looking only to the interest of the Treasury and having in charge the bill.

For the first time probably in the history of this House or of any legislative body the gentleman having charge of this bill has sat in his seat, as if abandoning the point made by him, when asked whether he had anything to say upon the point of order—one unquestionably good and held good time and time again. He had nothing to say, and certainly a novel ruling has dropped from the Chair, to the effect that a point of order, good at all times when offered against small items, is worth nothing against this large one.

Mr. MOSES. If the point was good probably the gentleman did not think it needed any defense.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I know nothing about that. I am now directing the attention of this committee to a remarkable passage in its recent history, utterly unparalleled in the history of this Congress or of any other Congress that ever sat. A proposition to so change existing law as to take money from the Treasury for nothing, without merit and without right, and give it to the members of the body entertaining the proposition, who are gathering like vultures about the carcass, ready to pounce upon what does not belong to them under the law—that kind of a proposition is before us, and the members of this committee are hungry to adopt it, with a pro forma point of order made and practically surrendered and overruled. I believe that if this House shall declare in favor of a proposition to donate to members $100 a month when the Congress is not in session it will have made respectable everything else that it has done and has not done, and will have placed upon a pinnacle this particular act as worthy of condemnation. And it will receive condemnation from one end to the other of this Republic. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, but a very short time ago I came into the Hall and found this amendment pending. I shall talk to the amendment. I do not know about the point of order, but that is past. I shall not seek to lecture the House. I shall perform my own duty as a Representative, following my own convictions and my own sense of right, and I do not think I shall be flushed by another's lecture.

I concede to the honorable gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who has just addressed the committee, the fullest privilege to voice his own sentiments and control his own vote, and I claim the same privilege for myself. In the years that have passed, long before we had any appropriation for clerks for Members, the Senate first authorized clerks for Senators, payable out of the contingent fund. At that time I heard substantially the speech that the gentleman from Missouri has just made, and I have heard it repeated many times since, although never better than he has repeated it to-day.

Year after year I heard this talk about the extravagance of the Senate, and these appeals to the toiling millions to rise up and put down an extravagance that was outside of the law. When the speech was first made I supposed there would be a volcano, a popular uprising, and I went home and tried to interest some of my people about it, and they said to me substantially that a Government so large and with such varied interests that it costs four or five hundred million dollars a year to run it—that such a country, legislated for by a Senate and House of Representatives, could not afford to be penurious or to be controlled by false economy.

Well, I quit talking along that line. [Laughter.] Finally the Senate clerks were made annual, and the same kind of declamation went on, and when I went out of Congress at the close of the Fifty-first Congress and did not know that I would ever be here again and before the allowance was made for clerks to members, just as I was going out I bore my testimony to the fact that I believed the people would be best served by making an allowance for clerks to members as had been made to the Senators. [Applause.] I so believe now. We have clerks during the session; that is, gentlemen who want them have, for if anybody thinks he does not need a clerk he is not compelled to have one. We have them during the session, and there is just as much reason why we should have them during the vacation. The man who, the moment the gavel falls at the end of a session of Congress, goes home and hibernates is not worthy to be a member of Congress. [Laughter and applause.] It is all the while investigation; it is all the while demand from the constituency; and if a man performs his duty and is not a drone all his time will be taken up, and he ought to have the privilege and the aid of a clerk during vacation as well as during the session.

Ah, gentlemen, let the next Congress, and those that are to follow after it, be composed of men who have the courage of their convictions and the wisdom to choose rightly and then let them choose rightly, and, whichever party is in power, you will not find the people complaining or calling us to account because we avail ourselves of the ordinary aids for the performance of our duties. There is not a merchant anywhere in the United States having a good sized business, there is not a small jobber nor a large retailer, but has a stenographer or typewriter. He does not occupy his time doing clerical work and we ought not to have to do it, and gentlemen mistake if they think they are going to alarm the country because we have the courage to demand that which will enable us to discharge our duties here to the best advantage for the country and for the people whom we represent. I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a simple question, which he can answer in my time. I want to know if these grocery stores and other business establishments that he speaks of that have clerks would want to pay the salaries of those clerks provided they shut up their businesses?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. We never shut up business while we are members of Congress. The term runs for two years. Do you refuse your $416 a month for the next nine months during vacation? [Laughter.]

Mr. SNODGRASS. In reply to that, I want to say that when this House is not in session members are drawing $416 a month, and they ought to do their work themselves, and not take from the Treasury $100 a month additional, when they have nothing to do except to investigate and keep up their little correspondence.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I think that gentlemen who oppose this appropriation misapprehend the question. For my part I want no appropriation from the public Treasury to compensate or assist in compensating a clerk to do my work. I favor this appropriation so that I may have some one under my direction to do the work of my constituents. [Applause.] This morning I received in my mail 17 letters, no one of them suggesting a strictly public duty, but all of them from constituents asking me to do something for them here in this city—to look after a pension, to attend to a matter in the Land Office, or something of that kind—no one of them suggesting a strictly official duty. Now, I know that the people of this country who require this kind of non-official service from their Representatives are willing that it should be paid for. I receive at least 600 letters a month on matters which are not official, but which are of great interest to my constituents.

Mr. HUNTER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. He will be at his home in Iowa during the recess. Now, will he keep this clerk here?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will keep him here in the city of Washington to attend to this business, as he is doing to-day. He is a hard-working, industrious man, whom I brought from my home, and who puts in his entire time in attending to this business for my constituents. There is no gratuity to me in this appropriation. It is not any addition to my salary. No dollar of this money goes to me. Every dollar that I receive for such service goes to this man who does this business for my constituents, and they will be willing that he should be paid.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, the question whether or not we should support the amendment creating an additional charge on the Treasury can not well be determined without some reference to the condition of the Treasury and the means whereby it is proposed to strengthen it. In the course of some remarks which I had the honor to submit on the 28th of January, 1895, I stated: "In the summer of 1893 we were told that the way to get out of our financial troubles was to 'repeal the bullion-purchasing clause of the Sherman Act.' That was done, and still the drain of gold went on. The next cry was to 'issue bonds,' and the President and the Secretary of the Treasury had that done; but it was soon discovered that every proposal for the sale of bonds amounted simply to an advertisement for a fresh raid upon the Treasury to get gold with which to buy those very bonds." And so the farce goes on.

In this connection, and in support of the statement I then made, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read certain portions of an article from the New York Press of January 7. The Clerk will read the portions in the parentheses.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOLD TO BUY BONDS—WALL STREET READY TO ROB TREASURY PETER TO PAY PAUL.

Fully $700,000 in gold coin was withdrawn from the subtreasury yesterday. While this is not a large amount as compared with other days, it is significant and suggestive. It means nothing more or less than that the banks and trust companies in the city are preparing to take up a considerable proportion of the prospective bond issue.

But it is more than likely that the banks will get even with the Government after all. The quiet gold hoarding that is going on just now means that this money is to be used to buy the new bonds, and after they are once obtained it will be a comparatively easy matter for the purchasers to replenish their vaults and safes with practically the same coin again by means of legal tenders. In short, it is only another instance of Peter being robbed to pay Paul.

NO ISSUE AT PRESENT.

Both Mr. Morgan and Mr. Belmont were at their offices yesterday, which gave color to the report that everything was "fixed" so far as the new issue is concerned. Mr. Belmont declined to be interviewed, and Mr. Morgan had only this to say for publication: "I am satisfied that no announcement of a bond issue will be made until after a vote in the House on the Springer bill. I am also satisfied that President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle are keenly alive to the situation."

The withdrawal of half a million in coin from the subtreasury yesterday by the Merchants' National Bank excited a good deal of gossip in Wall street. It is said that the gold is wanted for local subscribers to the bond issue.

It is said that the home bankers will take from twenty-five to fifty millions of the new bond issue. This only confirms what has before been stated that Europe will furnish at least fifty millions of the yellow metal for Uncle Sam's Treasury. But it is a nice question whether the actual gold will come here or whether it will appear in the form of drafts to the credit of the Government. No matter what shape it takes, it will begin to dwindle away as snow under a summer sun.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I have no particular interest in this matter, except that I do not wish it to pass without saying a word upon it. I do not see why this Congress should be so liberal toward the next. We propose here to make appropriation enough to pay the amount of money which members of the next Congress may certify they have paid out for their clerks. Sir, if the members of the next Congress desire to have annual clerks, they can make the necessary additional appropriation themselves and take the responsibility. I do not think they ought to shuffle it off on us; and that is just what is being done to-day.

One word further. There is not a member of this House who is to serve in the next Congress who will not devote the time during the recess to his private business; yet these gentlemen want the United States to hire a clerk to help them do that business. Some of these gentlemen who want to go to Europe (and I have no objection to their going to Europe and staying there if they want to) desire to leave a clerk here to attend to their public business while they are away on a frolic. I say it is incumbent upon a member of Congress to devote his own time, or at least one-fourth of his time, in vacation to his public correspondence, and he can attend to it in one-half his time; and he should not expect to have the United States hire a clerk for him to attend to his private business. We will have to borrow over $300,000 to pay members' clerks before the members are sworn in.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to enter my protest here and now against this proposition, which will increase the appropriation by nearly one-half million, to pay members' clerks during the recess. It has been said, and truly said, by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this is a great country; that this is a great Government; that we are possibly the richest nation on the face of God's green earth, with 170,000 or 180,000 miles of railroad, with great cities, with numerous banks and other institutions, etc. Truly we are the greatest nation upon the face of the earth. But, Mr. Chairman, beneath all this greatness and grandeur and wealth is the canker of a disturbed and an oppressed people, who are ground to the dust between the upper and the nether millstones of want and usury; who pay by their labor every dollar that is appropriated by these "billion-dollar Congresses." I want to protest by my voice and my vote for the great mass of people who to-day are recognized only in the burdens they bear in the way of taxation and Government expenses; who are already up to their eyebrows in debt.

Mr. Chairman, it is for that people and that class of our people that I raise my voice to-day and plead against adding this additional feather to the camel's back which is already bearing such a burden. It is true that gentlemen here may be engaged in important business for their constituents, but they could attend to that business, many of them, very much better if they would let alone the entertainments and receptions; if they would stay away from parties, stay away from card tables and drinking saloons and elsewhere, and come here and attend to their duties. Nine out of ten, I am satisfied, of the members of this House only want clerks to do a duty that they could do and ought to do themselves, as has been well said by the gentleman from Mississippi, and I am unwilling to sit here and see this extra expense saddled upon a starving people, while nothing is done for their relief.

I want to enter my solemn protest against increasing the burdens under which they labor now. The whole tendency of the times is to increase the burden imposed upon the taxpayer. Every employee of the Government, who is now receiving too much, wants his wages raised; and the members of this House, some of them I am sure, who are now ready to vote extra pay to clerks, would be doubtless willing to vote to raise their own salaries to $10,000 a year. I am opposed to it, and will not vote any increase of taxes on an already overburdened people; and upon this principle I will stand or fall. Give us something that will relieve instead of increasing the hardships of the country, and I stand ready to support it with my voice and my vote, but never, no never, will I assist by my vote in saddling upon the country, already ruined, any measure that will add to the sufferings; and I want to warn members of this House that one day, if this thing continues, an enraged people will hold them to personal account—and ought to. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word of the amendment to the amendment.

This is quite an important matter. I wish to call the attention of the committee to one distinction which must not be lost sight of, and which was brought to my mind forcibly by a remark of the gentleman who last occupied the floor. When this matter was first discussed in this body, in connection with the Senate clerks some years ago, the argument was made here with considerable force that it was of the same character as the salary grab. We were told that a wave of indignant condemnation would come from the people of all parts of the country if such a provision was enacted into law. The same argument was made with renewed vigor and force when we gave to the members of the House session clerks.

I appeal to the House now if there has been any cry of that character, and if any clamor has ever come up from the masses of the people on account of the employment of clerks to Senators or the payment of session clerks for the members of the House? Never. And why? Simply because the salary grab, about which there was a proper outcry, was a provision in the interest of the individual members, while this legislation is in the interest of the people themselves, and they alone. [Applause.] Every dollar of the money expended for this clerical service goes to the benefit of the masses of the people of the country. Not one dollar of the money paid to my clerk, the child of a stricken paralytic who fought four years for his country, touches my pocket. But the service he renders goes for the benefit of the 180,000 people that I have the honor to represent on this floor, and for their benefit alone.

Why, gentlemen, you know what your mails are every day. You know the arguments, documents, and circulars that you used to be compelled to throw into your waste baskets, often even unopened and usually unread, because we had no time whatever to give to them from our duties here. Now we have some time to give to the consideration of public questions that come to us in that manner, and in that way we are able to render more efficient duty to our constituents. [Applause.] All know that it has grown to be a part of the business of the Representative to look after a thousand details not heretofore contemplated by the laws that provided for this body; and you can not recede from that. You can not change the habits of the people. They look to their Representatives for this, and they have a proper ground for the belief that their wishes will be attended to.

As far as the transaction of business in the Departments is concerned, for instance, while a member cannot properly in his representative capacity act as an attorney there, yet by the aid of a clerk he can investigate the problems involved, and spread light amongst the people, which can not be done through any other agency without involving an enormous expense to the people. By the assistance of a clerk the capacity of the Representative to serve the people is vastly increased.

The clerk of the Representative should be his right hand and connected with his brain, to become a part of his legislative life, which connection never terminates with the termination of a session of Congress—never. I have to carry on my legislative work as diligently after the adjournment of a Congress as I do on the floor of the House, because there are a thousand and one details in which you are compelled to employ the services of your stenographer and typewriter. Why, the correspondence of the American people has increased several hundred per cent in the last few years. Intelligence by means of the electric telegraph and telephone, by the aid of stenography and the typewriter, has enlarged wonderfully in the last few years, and has enlarged mainly for the benefit of the masses. If you are compelled to write your own letters you are obliged to dispose of important questions presented to you in a mere sentence; but by the assistance of the stenographer and typewriter you can give full attention to such matters, and any man who consults the interests of the people will vote in favor of the employment of these annual clerks if he has the courage of his convictions. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn, and the question will be taken on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The substitute was rejected.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from New York. It carries the amount of the present law, and provides clerks for members, placing them on the roll of the House, and dispensing with the requirement of certification on the part of members.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on page 18 all after the word "Representatives," in line 2, down to and including line 9, and insert "for clerks to Members who are not chairmen of committees, entitled to have clerks, and to Delegates from Territories, at the rate of $100 per month each during the session of Congress, $200-$250.15, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SNODGRASS. I offer an amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the joint resolution authorizing members to certify monthly the amount paid by them for clerk hire, and directing the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, approved March 3, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE and Mr. HOOKER of New York. Point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The point of order is that the amendment is new legislation and is not germane to the proposition pending.

Mr. SNODGRASS. It reduces expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. It is new legislation, but new legislation is not always obnoxious to the rule if it reduces expenditures. As the Chair understands this amendment, it simply repeals a section of existing law.

Mr. SNODGRASS. And it reduces expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not germane to the substitute, but it might be in order as an independent amendment, however. If the committee votes down this proposition the Chair will recognize the gentleman to offer it as an independent amendment. It would not be germane to this amendment, as the Chair thinks. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later if he desires recognition. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri one or two questions in regard to his substitute. I desire to know what difference there is between the existing law and the proposition which the gentleman now makes.

Mr. PICKLER. Practically none.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is this difference, which is a vital difference, it seems to me. Under existing law members are required to certify that they have paid not exceeding $100 a month for clerical service. So far as the public record shows, there is no way to identify the beneficiary of the $100 which is drawn for clerk hire. Now, if this substitute is adopted it will carry exactly the amount of the current law, but it will enroll these clerks on the list, to be paid by the disbursing officer of the House, so that the public records will show whom each member employs, and the clerk will receive the money direct, instead of the member.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I agree with the gentleman on that. I think something in the nature of his amendment should be enacted into law. I believe that members ought not to be called upon to certify to the fact that they have employed clerks for so much during each month.

But I am in favor of the main proposition. I am in favor of annual clerks, in the method provided by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT]. The amendment of the gentleman from New York, I believe, does not cover the point which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] suggests.

Mr. CHICKERING. Yes, it does, I think.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that the amendment offered by me does cover that point, that if these clerks were annual clerks their names would be entered on the rolls, and there would be no doubt of the beneficiaries. I am willing, however, to have that inserted in my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] proposes a modification of his amendment it would be in order to have that done before voting upon the proposed substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri. Therefore if the gentleman desires to modify his amendment he can do so.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will modify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be offered in that form, if there is no objection. The gentleman can make the modification. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just one word in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. HEPBURN].

Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, if the Fifty-fourth Congress does not assemble until December, the clerks will be paid $900 each for that vacation, and as nobody can tell who are to be chairmen of committees, it means 356 clerks for nine months at $900 each, which, in round numbers, is something over $300,000. During that time not a single member of Congress is obliged to be in Washington, and each member of Congress gets $416 a month for doing the work which is imposed upon him. During that time every member is in a condition to attend to whatever private business he has. This is taking something over $300,000 out of the Treasury for work which the members of Congress can well do, for work which the members of Congress in point of fact actually do, for which they are paid, and it is simply that much paid to some gentleman in each member's district. The amendment that I offer is upon an entirely different principle.

When a member of Congress comes here in December and begins his service he gets a clerk and the time covered by the short vacation is extremely uncertain and may be very short. During that time the member's mail goes on, the member's departmental work goes on, and during that time, under our law, if he is a candidate for reelection, he has his canvass on his hands. It therefore seems to me that it is not unjust that the man selected in December, 1895, shall not be required to pay his way back to his home during the short vacation and return to Washington for the short session, and that the member be compelled to face the alternative of depriving himself of the time necessary for his canvass or depriving his people of his full service.

I admit that the only ground upon which I could offer an amendment and vote for it at all is that the service of the clerk is not for the member, but is in reality a service to his people; that I believe to be his value, as was said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. It is service to the people; but from March to December it is not service to the people. The member of Congress is able to do it. He is paid to do it. He does not have to make his arrangements to come to Washington. That salary for this nine months is given to him for this very purpose, and, instead of your performing that duty, so far as that is concerned, it is taking a sum of money out of the Treasury absolutely without necessity or excuse for it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the practical working of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Missouri. I hope the committee, on the pending motion to amend existing law by providing for annual clerks rather than session clerks, will at least make the burden of the people as small as possible. Now, the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri is that the names of the clerks shall go upon the rolls of the House as regular payees. Of course that implies, and of necessity it follows, that these clerks will draw their pay of $100 per month from the beginning of the year to the end of it, no matter whether their services are required or not.

Now, under the existing law no member keeps a clerk under pay unless he needs his services, and he is obliged to certify to the fact that he has employed and paid out so much money for those services. In the course of the vacation if the member does not require the services of a clerk he will have no occasion to employ one, and therefore there will be no expense to the public Treasury. But under the plan proposed by the gentleman from Missouri that clerk would continue to draw his pay whether he was actually employed or not.

Mr. DOCKERY. Only during the session. He draws the money instead of the member.

Mr. POWERS. Only during the session. Very well, Mr. Chairman, then I have misapprehended the scope of the gentleman's amendment. But I think, Mr. Chairman, that during the session members ought to certify to the employment of their clerks. That puts every member upon his honor—and I assume no man upon the floor of this House would certify to the payment for any services that have not been rendered. I think that provision a wise one, and we ought to keep it under the new dispensation, if we are to have a new dispensation.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making some remarks, and then I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

I have listened very attentively to this discussion, and I have been more impressed with the labor and hardships incident to being a member of Congress in the last twenty minutes than I ever was before in my life. [Laughter.] My term of service expires very soon, and from the way the gentlemen who are to be in the next Congress talk I think I am pretty glad I am not going to be here, because in the years that have gone by I have done all the work I had to do. If the gentlemen are to suffer so much here in the future I am really very sorry for them. [Laughter.] Now, my experience has taught me we do not need clerks during the vacation. We have been told that the next Congress is going to have a great amount of work to do, and if that be so and members will have to do as much as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] says, they will want clerks to read the circulars sent them from one section of the country to the other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I happened to find in my pocket a moment ago an extract from a paper, written by a bright young fellow in the country, which seems to be entirely applicable to the situation at this time, and it sets forth a description of the kind of men that the members of the next Congress should have; and I would like to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The politician is my shepherd: I shall not want any good thing during the campaign. He leadeth me into the saloon for my vote's sake. He filleth my pockets with fine cigars and my beer glass runneth over. He inquireth after the health of my family, even unto the fourth generation. Yea, though I walk through the mud and rain to vote for him and shout myself hoarse, when he is elected he straightway forgetteth me. Yea, though I meet him in his office, he knoweth me not. Surely the wool has been pulled over my eyes all the days of my life.

[Great laughter.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I rise to oppose the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed in five minutes on this paragraph and all amendments thereto, and that the time be given to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I object.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who have no personal interest in this matter because my term will expire on the 4th of next March, but since I have been in Congress I have observed that those members who are of most value to the country are those who do a great deal of work, and a large proportion of the work that they have to do is clerical, and they ought not to be required to do it themselves. They need clerical assistance of various kinds. A member sometimes needs one clerk to go to the Departments, and a stenographer for other work; and right here I would suggest that the proposition to have a clerk who shall go upon the roll is inconvenient and ought to be changed.

A member may want to employ a clerk at a small compensation at his home and another in Washington, and some of the time he may want a stenographer. The member ought to be allowed a certain sum of money per month for clerical service, to be divided up as he likes, and not be compelled to pay it all to one person, who may not, and very likely will not, be able to do all the different kinds of work that he requires done. For that reason I think the plan of having a clerk named by the member and put upon the roll, to draw the entire allowance, should be corrected, and the money, as I have suggested, should go to the member, who should pay it out to one clerk, or two, or three, just as his work and his convenience demand.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the substitute that I offered, and submit another which is a little more specific.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all from line 1 to line 9, inclusive, on page 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"FOR CLERKS TO MEMBERS.

"For clerks to Members who are not chairmen of committees entitled to clerks and for Delegates from Territories, at the rate of $100 per month during the session of Congress, such clerks to be appointed by the Members and Delegates, and to be borne upon the rolls of the Clerk of the House, $330,889.15, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment originally proposed by the gentleman from New York, and I think that the propriety of that amendment is sufficiently proved by some of the arguments that have been used against it. If the principal argument against it is that members of Congress, whether of this or of the next Congress, are "vultures," the fact that a gentleman has to resort to such language shows how weak he must feel his own case to be. [Laughter and applause.]

If, on the other hand, it is attempted to bear down a plain business proposition by reading a profane parody of the twenty-third psalm, I think that those of us who favor the amendment may feel assured that our cause is right. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have no personal interest in this matter. I shall not be a member of the next Congress. I doubt if I shall ever be a member of any Congress again. [Laughter.] As I said in the first speech I made here, I never clearly knew why I was elected to the present one. [Laughter.] But this I know: Such service as I have been able to render to this House, to my country, or to my constituents has been made easy, has been made in some measure successful, by the services of a young man whom I brought here, who was previously unknown to me, but who has become a personal friend, and who has helped me in the work that I have had to do for my constituents and has done a great deal of it, clerical work, such as I never could have done myself, and such as, I will venture to say, most members here never could have done.

Mr. COX. Do you not think they ought to have elected the young man? [Laughter.]

Mr. EVERETT. I will answer that question. Whenever that young man sees fit to run for office his native town will elect him to almost anything he wants. [Laughter and applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, I will say further, that his services, like the services of many valuable clerks here, can not be secured for a mere monthly salary, because the higher class of clerks in this country are not in the habit of being engaged by breaks and fits, but must have an engagement which lasts through the year, as is known to be the rule in all business establishments. Many of these clerks are worth more than a hundred dollars a month, more than $1,200 a year, and if they go on they will soon demonstrate their value to all who employ them. If anybody in the next Congress can secure the services of the young man of whom I have spoken he will be lucky, and I maintain that we ought to put this important class of employees, a class rising in importance every year, a class to whom many of us owe our best success here, on the plain business basis of annual salaries. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that the message just received from the President is very brief. I ask that it may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole has resumed its session, and it would not be in order to read the message in committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky, the Chair understands, desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think, as a matter of respect to the Chief Magistrate, we ought to read this message.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of having the message read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky to offer an amendment. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to move to amend the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri by striking out the words "who are not chairmen of committees."

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to the substitute.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point of order that the effect of this amendment would be to give every chairman of committee another clerk in addition to the committee clerk, thus increasing the appropriation and changing existing law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think the actual effect would be that a great many committees that now have clerks would be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the point of order well taken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The point that I desire to submit (not that I think this amendment is likely to pass at present, although it will hereafter) is that the clerk of a committee ought not to be the clerk of the chairman of the committee. He ought to be, in the proper sense of the term, the clerk of the committee, charged with the public business of the committee. He has no such relation to the chairman as the representative of a constituency as to identify him with that constituency. He ought to be selected for entirely different reasons than those for which we select our private secretaries. If this amendment should be adopted, its effect would be, in the first place, to abolish about a dozen or fifteen wholly useless committees, which are now expensive and troublesome, and which take up room in the Capitol that is needed for other purposes.

The amendment would also abolish a dozen or fifteen assistant clerks, who really under the guise of assistant clerks do the work of the chairmen of committees. The amendment would be in the interest of the public service and in the interest of economy. There is no reason why the public business of the committees should be subordinated to the private or official business of the chairmen. I care nothing personally in regard to the amendment, but I put it in the RECORD for members to think about. It is a reform which will come hereafter.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE was rejected.

Mr. COX. I move to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Missouri by striking out "$100" and inserting "$80." [Cries of "Oh, no."] The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Cox, it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken; there were on a division (called for by Mr. DOCKERY)—ayes 54, noes 108.

Mr. DOCKERY. Tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 15 members voting therefor.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. That point comes too late after tellers have been demanded. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is rejected. The question is now on the original amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I desire to offer my amendment now to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

The Clerk read as follows:

That the "joint resolution authorizing members to certify monthly the amount paid by them for clerk hire, and directing the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House," approved March 2, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment just read.

Mr. BROWN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know what change has been made in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York since it was first introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York if there be no objection. The Chair is not informed of any change that has been made.

Mr. BROWN. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that he had made some modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will report the amendment as modified. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York as modified will be read.

The amendment as modified was again read.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. BROWN. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, and have not yielded it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana was recognized to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the amendment the gentleman now offers is not the amendment which was first introduced and against which the point of order was made and on which the Chair ruled. This is a new proposition, and I make the point of order against the amendment that it does not reduce expenditures and is the enactment of new legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule upon the question of order. There is no new amendment offered. The gentleman has simply modified his amendment, and it has been debated for a couple of hours. The Chair repeats that it is not a new amendment.

Mr. BROWN. It a new proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman simply modifies his amendment by changing the form, but not the substance of it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS], which will be again read.

The amendment to the amendment was again reported.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I rose to address the Chair before the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee was read, and immediately after the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] took his seat, desiring to address myself to the question of order raised by him, which I was about to do—

Mr. PICKLER. But the gentleman rose too late.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think not. That, however, I want to find out, and if the Chair, instead of hearing an argument on the point of order, had decided it, my purpose was to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PICKLER. But it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no desire, of course, to cut the gentleman off from the right of appeal, and if that was the purpose of the gentleman the Chair will, of course, entertain it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That was my purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the appeal if the gentleman desires to make it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like first to understand the situation, and shall endeavor to find that out without the aid of the gentleman from South Dakota.

I rose immediately after the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] had taken his seat to make a point of order and for the purpose of addressing the Chair upon that point of order, if the Chair would hear anything upon it.

Now, I rise at this time not for the purpose of securing recognition, but to learn whether the Chair will hear any discussion upon the question of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana. If so, I desire to be heard very briefly.

Mr. HULL. But that has already been ruled upon.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I think you have been heard upon it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, you may hear from me again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman if there is any necessity for it, or any other gentleman who wishes to address the Chair on a question of order. But the modification made by the gentleman from New York was simply to omit the word "annual" from the amendment and insert in another part of it the words "per annum." The Chair did not think it was such a material modification of the amendment as would make it a new proposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to withdraw the modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is not before the committee. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 15, noes 146.

Mr. SNODGRASS and Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. SNODGRASS and Mr. PIGOTT were appointed tellers.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I hope these gentlemen will not filibuster against an appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY (pending the count by tellers). I ask unanimous consent to pass this over until Monday.

Several members objected.

Mr. SNODGRASS (before the count by tellers had been announced). I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMPSON. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume the count.

The committee having divided, the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 172.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over until Monday.

Mr. BARTLETT and others objected.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOCKERY) there were—ayes 112, noes 86.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. HEPBURN. Has not a quorum voted? One hundred and seventy-eight gentlemen have voted, have they not?

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and seventy-eight have voted. The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 34.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the roll to be called under the rule.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I raise the point of order on that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I raise a point of order. The rule provides that when the committee finds itself without a quorum the roll shall be called. The committee can not rise, because you are endeavoring to ascertain whether you have a quorum or not. The committee can do nothing else except to call the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first direct the rule to be read to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Speaker of the House has uniformly held during this session that where the committee finds itself without a quorum the roll must be called.

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask that my colleague [Mr. BRODERICK] be excused for the day, on account of sickness.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done in the House. The committee will now rise under the rule.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called; that 210 members had responded to their names; that he herewith reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. Under the rule the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole again without motion.

The committee again resumed its session, with Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers [Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina] will again take their places.

The committee again divided.

Pending the count,

Mr. DOCKERY said: Pending the count, I desire to ask permission to make a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not take unanimous consent. The vote has not been announced.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I raise a question of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers have not yet reported.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Pending a division, can the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum was made, tellers have been appointed, and, pending the vote by tellers, the gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. While the House is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It seems to me that while the vote is being taken the committee can not rise. I make that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not want to violate any precedent.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am not much of an authority on parliamentary matters. The opinion of the Chair is much better than mine; but if it is not so it ought to be so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has always held that when the point of no quorum was made and the vote by tellers developed that fact, there was nothing to do but to call the roll; but pending that, the only question was whether the motion can be entertained that the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The committee is then dividing touching a question which is in point, and there can not be two questions coming up at the same time. The House is dividing, and must decide that matter that is then being voted upon. I think no other motion can be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made, the Chair will not make any ruling.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Chair will see this: That if it is not in order to move that the committee rise at this point—

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I desire to have the vote announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor, and the Chair can not take the gentleman off the floor, nor can the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was about to say, that the Chair will observe at once that the committee under that ruling may get itself into such a condition that it can never rise. As soon as the fact that there is no quorum is developed the roll is called, and then, when the roll is called and more than a quorum answer and we go into the House, we can not move to adjourn.

Mr. PICKLER. Why not?

Mr. DOCKERY. The rule provides specifically that the committee shall then resume its session, and therefore the seesawing can go on forever.

Mr. PAYNE. I will suggest that the remedy is for the gentlemen on the other side of this question to vote.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But there is a time when the committee can rise. After the roll is called and develops the presence of a quorum then the rule takes the House back into the committee, when a motion to rise can be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Then immediately the gentleman can make the motion, or any gentleman can move that the committee rise. That difficulty which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] suggests would then be avoided. Of course the Chair would not want to make any ruling that would prevent the committee from rising or that a motion could be made under any circumstances; but, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois very properly, whenever the roll is called, a quorum answers, the committee rises, and that fact is reported to the House, then the Speaker directs that the committee again resume its sitting under the rule. Then it would be in order to move that the committee rise.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I ask that the vote be announced.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, one moment. I understand that we lack 40 or 45 of a quorum. It is very evident that a quorum can not be obtained at this time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are here.

Mr. GROUT. Let them vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. You can not compel gentlemen to vote, but I will make no further suggestions.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Is it in order for the committee to call for the report of the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not; but the Chair will announce it without calling for it. Upon this question the ayes are 95 and the noes are 43.

A MEMBER. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Abbott,	Covert,	Harter,	McGann,
Adams, Pa.,	Crain,	Hartman,	McKaig,
Alderson,	Crawford,	Haugen,	McKeighan,

At the conclusion of the call of the roll the committee rose, the Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee having found itself without a quorum he had directed the roll to be called, that 209 members had answered to their names, and that he now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. Two hundred and nine members have answered to their names, and the committee will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole accordingly resumed its session, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph under consideration be passed over for the present without prejudice.

Mr. WALKER, Mr. PICKLER, and others objected.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS, STONE. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put I desire to know whether it is the intention of the gentleman to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for further consideration of this appropriation bill to-day?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is not.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to—ayes 123, noes 4.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8767), the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HAWAII.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a copy of a telegraphic dispatch just received from Mr. Willis, our minister to Hawaii, with a copy of the reply thereto which was immediately sent by the Secretary of State.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 3, 1895.

Mr. HITT. Will the Chair direct that the telegrams be read also?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the inclosures will be read. They are not long.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Willis to Mr. Gresham.

[Telegram.]

HONOLULU, January 30, 1895 (San Francisco, February 6, 1895).

Revolt over 9th. Casualties: Government, 1; royalist, 2. Court-martial convened 17th; has tried 38 cases; 200 more to be tried and daily arrests. Gullick, former minister, and Seward, minister, major in Federal army, both Americans, and Rickard, Englishman, sentenced to death; all heretofore prominent in politics. T. B. Walker, formerly in the United States Army, imprisonment for life and $5,000 fine. Other sentences not disclosed, but will probably be death. Requested copies of record for our Government to determine its duty before final sentence, but no answer yet. Bitter feeling and threats of mob violence, which arrival of Philadelphia yesterday may prevent. Liliuokalani made prisoner 16th; on 24th relinquished all claims and swore allegiance Republic, imploring clemency for Hawaiians. Government replies to Liliuokalani: "This document can not be taken to exempt you in the slightest degree from personal and individual liability" for complicity in late conspiracy. Denies that she had any rights since January 14, 1893, when she attempted new constitution. "Fully appreciates her call to disaffected to recognize Republic, and will give full consideration to her unselfish appeal for clemency" for participants.

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

UNITED STATES DISPATCH AGENT,

Post-Office Building, San Francisco, Cal.:

Forward following by first steamer to A. S. Willis, United States minister, Honolulu:

If American citizens were condemned to death by a military tribunal, not for actual participation in reported revolution but for complicity only, or if condemned to death by such a tribunal for actual participation but not after open fair trial, with opportunity for defense, demand delay of execution, and in either case report to your Government evidence relied on to support death sentence.

The SPEAKER. This message will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to ask the Chair, as a parliamentary inquiry, whether a motion to refer the message with the accompanying dispatches to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would not be in order, in view of the fact that the papers seem to demonstrate a very remarkable and striking change of public policy on the part of our Government since the 19th of January last, when the instructions were given to Admiral Beardslee in which the doctrine was set forth with great particularity that "an American citizen who, during a revolution in a foreign country, participates in an attempt by force of arms or violence to maintain or overthrow the existing government can not claim that the Government of the United States shall protect him against the consequences of such act," but that such citizens would thereby "forfeit their right in that regard to the protection of the American flag;" whereas the Secretary of State, as I understand from this document just read, has instructed the United States minister at Honolulu to peremptorily "demand" of the Hawaiian Government "a delay of execution" of the sentences pronounced by its tribunals against persons convicted of complicity in an attempt to overthrow the Republic by force of arms—

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky, Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, and others. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask whether a motion would be in order to refer this document to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker— [Cries of "Order!"] I hope gentlemen on the other side will try to be calm about this matter, and they will get through alive. The Speaker and I can find out what the merit of my inquiry is. If I can trust the Speaker you should not be afraid to. My inquiry, Mr. Speaker, was simply whether a motion to refer the message and documents to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The message, with the documents, has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine P. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes, had asked for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. VILAS, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. PLATT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

BOUNDARIES OF THE THREE JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1827) to define the boundaries of the three judicial districts in the State of Alabama, and to regulate therein the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States and the powers and duties of the judges thereof, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONTESTS OF ELECTIONS OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUFFERING POOR IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill to which I think there will be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2736) for the immediate relief of the suffering poor of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc. That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the immediate relief of the suffering poor of the District of Columbia, to be disbursed under the direction of the Commissioners of said District by the organized charities of said District, one-half of said sum to be charged to said District.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SIMPSON subsequently said: Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to move a reconsideration of the bill which was passed a few moments ago granting relief for the poor of this District? I desire to ascertain whether the whole of the sum appropriated in that bill is to be paid by the General Government, or whether the District of Columbia will pay its half.

The SPEAKER. The bill provides that one-half of the appropriation shall be paid by the District.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then I have no proposition to submit.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

PREVENTION OF MARINE COLLISIONS.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 8563, and that a committee of conference be appointed.

The SPEAKER. That bill was laid before the House this morning. The request of the gentleman requires unanimous consent.

Mr. FITHIAN. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8563) to adopt special rules for the navigation of harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments, and with a request for a conference. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] asks that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. ROBBINS, Mr. PIGOTT, and Mr. WHITE as conferees on the part of the House.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether it is not in order now to take up and pass bills which were reported from the Committee of the Whole last Friday evening?

The SPEAKER. That would be in order.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that those bills be now taken up.

The SPEAKER. There are certain bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar upon which the previous question has been ordered. Those bills will now be taken up, if no other motion be made.

Bills of the following titles were taken up, the amendments thereto reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar agreed to, and the bills respectively ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 5005) for the relief of William Albin;

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, a motion to reconsider the several votes on the passage of these bills will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 9, 1895.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented the credentials of JAMES H. BERRY, chosen by the legislature of the State of Arkansas a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1895.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. BATE presented the credentials of ISHAM G. HARRIS, chosen by the legislature of the State of Tennessee a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1895.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, internal-revenue forms Nos. 365 and 366 as the blank forms which are now being distributed to be filled out and sworn to as returns of the existing income tax, and stating that the blank forms and all parts thereof are based upon the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," in effect August 28, 1894, as contained in sections 27 to 37, both inclusive, as that act has been construed and understood by the Treasury Department; which was read.

Mr. HILL. Will the communication and accompanying blanks be printed as a matter of course? If not, I ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. Let the blanks also be printed with it.

Mr. HILL. I may want to make some remarks on the subject after it is printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see any use to print the blanks. They will be distributed by the Department.

Mr. HALE. But Senators would then have them where they could conveniently reach them without being obliged to send to the Department for them. There is great interest in the matter, and it seems to me to be only proper to have them right here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I trust the Senator from Ohio will not object to printing the blanks. That is the very thing we want to have printed. We were assured by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], the colleague of the Senator on this side of the Chamber, that these blanks were not to be insisted upon. We shall find it difficult to determine what provisions are insisted upon and what are not, and to learn the exact situation of this question, unless we have everything printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator really thinks it is worth while to print the blanks over again at expense to the Government, let it be done. Senators can get all the blanks from the Treasury Department that are needed by sending for them. But if they want a new edition printed, very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. We want the public to understand what the blanks are that the Secretary of the Treasury thinks are in accordance with law, and which some of us, including, I think, the Senator from Ohio, believe are not according to law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing the blanks?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not necessary, I think, to print the blanks in the large form of the actual blanks circulated. All we want is the reading matter. The blanks can be printed on ordinary size paper, making a few pages of the document.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, they are not to be printed as large blanks, but are to be embodied in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury; otherwise the reply is worthless. If a Senator wants to send to the Department for one he will be as well off whether we have the blanks printed or not.

Mr. HILL. We want them printed, not in the precise shape and form of the blanks, but we want the matter printed.

Mr. HALE. They can regulate that at the Printing Office.

Mr. HILL. The Printing Office will regulate that matter. I desire to have the blanks printed because the position taken by the Secretary of the Treasury seems to be entirely different from that assumed before the conference committee by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communication and the accompanying blanks will be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 6th instant calling for information in reference to the improvement of Wilmington Harbor, California, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a report by Lieut. Col. W. H. H. Benyaurd, Corps of Engineers, containing estimates amounting to $392,725 for the further improvement of that harbor; which was read.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the communication and accompanying papers be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The papers will be needed in the consideration of that subject.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of December 13, 1894, calling for a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of April 8, 1878, to the Secretary of the Interior, a copy of the testimony accompanying report of Agent Joseph Emery, dated June 6, 1887, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and copies of any other reports, papers, or correspondence in the records or files of the Department of the Interior or the bureaus thereof concerning the accuracy of the survey of the boundary lines of the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, etc., transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Idaho, requesting the passage of a bankruptcy bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Ought not the petition to be read, being from the legislature of a State?

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that the resolution be read, and that it lie on the table.

The petition was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BATE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for a special joint committee of fifteen to prepare a plan for the participation of Congress in the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, September 19 and 20, 1895. As the time is short and there was no opposition to it in the other House, and I assume there will be none here, I beg the indulgence of the Senate to have it passed at once. If there is any opposition to it, however, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. HALE. Let us go through with the morning business in order.

Mr. BATE. It will take but a short time; only the time necessary to read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. HALE. If we break into the regular order of routine morning business, in the first place, it is confusing to the clerks, and then no Senator can tell when it is proper for him to come in with routine business. I hope the Senator will not ask it until we reach the proper order.

Mr. BATE. I stated distinctly that if there was opposition I would not press the request.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can call up the resolution when we reach that order.

Mr. BATE. I shall do so.

SHIP CANAL BETWEEN THE GREAT LAKES AND THE ATLANTIC.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, to report a joint resolution; and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 130) authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning deep waterways between the ocean and Great Lakes and providing commissioners therefor, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length; as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to appoint, immediately after the passage of this joint resolution, three persons, who shall have power to meet and confer with any similar committee which may be appointed by the Government of Great Britain or of the Dominion of Canada, and who shall make inquiry and report whether it is feasible to build such canals as shall enable vessels engaged in ocean commerce to pass to and fro between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, with an adequate and controllable supply of water for continual use; where such canals can be most conveniently located, the probable cost of the same, with estimates in detail; and if any part of the same should be built in the territory of Canada, what regulations or treaty arrangements will be necessary between the United States and Great Britain to preserve the free use of such canal to the people of this country at all times; and all necessary facts and considerations relating to the construction and future use of deep-water channels between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean. The persons so appointed shall serve without compensation in any form, but they shall be paid their actual traveling and other necessary expenses, not exceeding in all $10,000, for which purpose the said sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The President may, in his discretion, detail as one of such persons an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amend ment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICKAMAUGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

Mr. BATE. I call up the concurrent resolution which I reported a few minutes ago from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Mr. PEPPER. I ask leave to introduce a bill by request. It relates to a subject in which I think a great deal of interest is felt. The bill seems to be carefully drawn. I ask that it may be read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2740) to provide a representative assembly for the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB ECKERT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6244) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jacob Eckert.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution I offered yesterday, which comes up regularly this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill I desire to have considered will take but a moment. It is a House bill, and has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POWER. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to me for the present consideration of Senate bill 1142.

Mr. CALL. I must ask that the regular order of morning business be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BUTLER. May I appeal to the good nature of the Senator from Florida to permit me to call up Senate bill 917?

Mr. CALL. I would do so with pleasure, but if I yield to the Senator I must yield also to others.

Mr. BUTLER. I think not.

Mr. CALL. I will give way to the Senator from South Carolina and then to the Senator from Montana, but to no others.

NEWBERRY COLLEGE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 917) for the relief of the Newberry College, Newberry, S. C.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the statement of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I said that I should call for the regular order, having a right to the floor upon the resolution introduced by me yesterday, but I yield to the Senator from South Carolina, and then shall yield to the Senator from Montana, provided the bills they desire to have considered do not provoke debate.

Mr. BUTLER. I am quite sure the bill for which I desire consideration will not provoke debate. I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 917) for the relief of the Newberry College, Newberry, S. C. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the trustees of the Newberry College of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of South Carolina, in Newberry, $15,000 for injuries to the buildings of the college, resulting in its destruction, and caused by the troops of the United States while in possession of and occupying it as a barrack, after the close of the war, in 1865, in South Carolina, in full payment of all claims by said college on account of the use, occupation, and loss of the buildings.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSAY OFFICE AT HELENA, MONT.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 1581) granting a pension to French W. Thornhill;

A bill (H. R. 1716) granting a pension to Ellen Carney;

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the State of Florida and is engaged in business there and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress, and whether it owns, either directly or indirectly, any interest in newspapers published in the State, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, have been expended by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company to influence the legislation of Congress, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, does that resolution come over from yesterday?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It comes over from yesterday, it being a resolution then introduced.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Chair hold that, in the absence of a vote by the Senate, the consideration of the resolution can now be proceeded with?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution was introduced by the Senator from Florida yesterday, and comes up as a part of the morning business.

Mr. GRAY. Is there any unfinished morning business, Mr. President?

Mr. BLACKBURN. This resolution has not been under consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This resolution has not been.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It occurred to me that the consideration of the resolution could not be reached except by a vote of the Senate. At any rate, Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. CALL. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Chair will state, in response to the Senator from Kentucky, that the resolution just read was introduced yesterday and comes up as a part of the morning business. The Chair did not understand the inquiry of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Chair, as a matter of information, if there is any unfinished morning business technically.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rules there is no unfinished business in the morning hour, but the Chair is obliged to lay before the Senate as a part of the morning business resolutions coming over from the previous day.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the consideration of this resolution seems to excite some misapprehension on the part of Senators, and it is somewhat singular that it should be so. On yesterday the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] made the following observations, which I read from the RECORD:

I suggest, Mr. President, that this is entering upon a field of inquiry which no Senator or Member of the House of Representatives of either party has ever suggested, unless it was a question as to the election of a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives. Then I think this body has gone so far as to hold that it was impossible to go back and inquire into the morals of the men constituting a State legislature which elected a Senator to this body. It does seem to me that this is a most remarkable proposition, and one which, if it is followed out, will entirely wipe out the States and absorb in Congress the entire control over the morals and everything else connected with the government of the States.

The Senator from Maryland is not so accurate in his statement of facts and in his recollection of history as he might be. It is somewhat singular that he did not remember that a Democratic House of Representatives in 1876 passed a resolution for the investigation of elections in the States and of frauds committed—I have it before me—with regard to the Presidential election and all the organization of the State governments under the reconstruction laws:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when appointed, be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire and report as soon as may be—

1. Whether in any of the elections named in said amendment in said States in the years 1875 or 1876 the right of any portion of such inhabitants and citizens to vote as aforesaid has been in anywise denied or abridged.

2. To what extent such denial or abridgment has been carried.

3. By what means such denial or abridgment has been accomplished.

4. By whom has such denial or abridgment been effected.

5. With what motives and for what purposes has such denial or abridgment been carried on.

6. By what authority or pretended authority has such denial or abridgment been exercised.

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of 7 Senators and 14 Representatives, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the condition of the late insurrectionary States, so far as regards the execution of the laws and the safety of the lives and property of the citizens of the United States, with leave to report, at any time during the next or any subsequent session of Congress, the result of their investigation to either or both Houses of Congress, with such recommendations as they may deem expedient; that said committee be authorized to appoint clerks and stenographers, to sit during the recess, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and take testimony, and to visit, at their discretion, through subcommittees, any portions of said States during the recess of Congress; and the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of 9 Senators, be appointed by the Chair to inquire and report to the Senate whether at the recent elections the constitutional rights of American citizens were violated in any of the States of the Union; whether the right of suffrage of citizens of the United States, or of any class of such citizens, was denied or abridged by the action of the election officers of any State or of the United States, in refusing to receive their votes, in failing to count them, or in receiving and counting fraudulent ballots in pursuance of a conspiracy to make the lawful votes of such citizens of none effect; and whether such citizens were prevented from exercising the elective franchise, or forced to use it against their wishes, by violence or threats, or hostile demonstrations of armed men or other organizations, or by any other unlawful means or practices. The committee shall also inquire whether any citizen of any State has been dismissed or threatened with dismissal from employment or deprivation of any right or privilege by reason of his vote or intention to vote at the recent elections, or has been otherwise interfered with.

And to inquire whether in the year 1878 money was raised by assessment or otherwise upon Federal officeholders or employees for election purposes, and under what circumstances and by what means, and, if so, what amount was so raised and how the same was expended; and, further, whether such assessments were or not in violation of law.

And shall inquire into the action and conduct of United States supervisors of elections in the several States; and as to the number of marshals, deputy marshals, and others employed to take part in the conduct of the said elections; in what State or city appointed; the amount of money paid or promised to be paid to them, and how and by whom, and under what law authorized.

Resolved, That the committee be further instructed to inquire and report whether it is within the competency of Congress to provide by additional legislation for the more perfect security of the right of suffrage to citizens of the United States in all the States of the Union.

Resolved, That in prosecuting these inquiries the committee shall have the right, by itself or by any subcommittee, to send for persons and papers, to take testimony, to administer oaths, and to visit any portion of the country when such visit may, in their judgment, facilitate the object of the inquiry.

The Senator must have known that, and he must have known that it was the result of the inquiries of this Democratic committee which spread the information throughout the country which satisfied the leaders of the Republican party and the Democrats of the necessity of some change in the organization of those States. Why, then, in the presence of this fact, when this resolution does not refer by any possible construction to an investigation of any election or of the conduct of any official of the State of Florida or any other State—does not touch it, does not refer to it—why this eagerness on the part of the Senator from Maryland to prevent the passage of a resolution looking to the prevention of a foreign corporation from using the laws of the United States that it may subjugate the sovereignty of the people and destroy the rights of the States?

The Senator from Maryland, so far from being a Democrat and a State-rights man in respect to this resolution, is aiding a foreign corporation and a few individuals to destroy the States and their reserved rights and the sovereignty of the people.

Everybody knows that here is a great contest between the people of the United States and a few individuals who are incorporated, great lines of transportation, and trusts and syndicates, constituting an oligarchy with a power of taxation greater than that reserved to the Government itself, and good and patriotic men of both parties desire that these franchises should be held subject to reasonable and just control and that they should be limited.

What does this resolution ask? It asks that a foreign corporation, domiciled in Honduras, having the right to enter the customhouse at Tampa Bay or anywhere else in the United States, using the interstate-commerce laws of the United States, making combinations that it may eventually secure a lodgment within the United States, shall be investigated to ascertain whether or not there is any necessity for legislation on the part of Congress to do what? To interfere with elections or morals? No; but to ascertain whether or not the Congress of the United States shall prohibit the use of the laws for sheltering the operations of this corporation within the limits of the United States. Yet Senators, presuming that the people of the United States have not the intelligence to consider this question, say that this touches upon the sovereignty of the States and interferes with the character and the organization made by the people, when it is intended to protect the people of the United States from a powerful combination destroying the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. President, I have no doubt of the authority and duty of Congress to investigate whatever attacks the rights and sovereignty of the people of the United States. I do doubt the power of Congress to interfere with the autonomy of the States. I respect the rights and sovereignty of the people of the States and their reserved rights, and I respect them enough to oppose any corporation or any power which seeks to substitute a few individuals in the place of the people. But, Mr. President, while I have no doubt upon this subject, it is within the competency of Congress to gather information which is important to legislation upon any subject connected with its duty, I have stricken from this resolution every word which referred to any State, or the control or allusions to elections in any State. I have stricken the words, "the State of Florida," out of the resolution, so that it now reads:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the United States and is making use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress and whether it owns, either directly or indirectly, any interest in newspapers published in the United States, and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers. The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, have been expended by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company to influence the legislation of Congress, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

Mr. President, we had a committee of investigation here not two months ago to ascertain whether the trusts and syndicates which Senators on the other side of the Chamber assailed in reference to the recent tariff bill had expended money or used influences upon this body. Why does the Senator from Maryland talk about there being no precedent for an inquiry of this character? Is it not important to know if a foreign corporation has expended money to influence legislation in bringing Senators here, as it is said they have done?

So there is no foundation for this opposition. This resolution asks that the most powerful corporation of modern days, excepting the East India Company, charged with expending great sums of money to influence legislation of the Congress of the United States, shall be inquired into.

Mr. President, I am not an enemy of corporations. I am willing that they should use their franchises reasonably and properly, subject to the power of the people; but I am not willing that they should be given unlimited power under the guise of Democracy, which is no Democracy, but which is a violation of the party faith and principles, and no man can be a Democrat of the school of Thomas Jefferson and be willing to subject this people to the unlimited power and control of corporate authority. That is a kind of Democracy which is not known among the people.

This resolution is a harmless one. I take the responsibility of it both at home and here. I am not afraid to maintain the right and duty and power of the people over both foreign and domestic corporations. But here is a foreign corporation already prohibited by Congress from using the instrumentalities of the Government, and it is to be remembered that this position was taken in the face of the fact that a great portion of the Democratic people of the country believe that corporate influences are powerful and control the legislation of Congress.

Mr. President, I am indifferent whether this resolution passes or not. I think I know the American people; I think I know they can not be deceived. They know the trend of public affairs; they know the policies which are necessary for the well-being of the masses, and they know that the destruction of this Government and the liberties of this people lie in the concentration of the power of this Government in the hands of a few men incorporated in the form of corporate associations, changing the entire character of the Government, a Government by the people. Is a foreign corporation, possessed of vast revenues, to be permitted to come into this country and violate our laws?

When it is proposed to inquire what they have done, and if they have done nothing offensive to the laws to let them go, when you ask no exercise of authority by Congress except in this legitimate sphere, you are met with the statement that this is an unprecedented thing, although a resolution has heretofore been passed by a Democratic House of Representatives for a similar investigation.

I am opposed just as much as and more than is the Senator from Maryland to anything that impinges upon the reserved rights of the States and the people thereof or anything that tends to the destruction of their political autonomy. I have here a resolution passed by the Democratic House of Representatives, submitted by Mr. Thompson. I shall not read it, but will put it in the RECORD as a part of my speech.

Resolved, That three special committees, one of 15 members to proceed to Louisiana, one of 8 members to proceed to Florida, and one of 9 members to proceed to South Carolina, shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate the recent elections therein and the action of the returning or canvassing boards in the said States in reference thereto, and to report all the facts essential to an honest return of the votes received by the electors of the said States for President and Vice-President of the United States, and to a fair understanding thereof by the people; and that for the purpose of speedily executing this resolution the said committees shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to take testimony, and, at their discretion, to detail subcommittees with like authority to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take testimony; and that the said committee and their subcommittees may employ stenographers, clerks, and messengers; and be attended each by a deputy sergeant-at-arms; and the said committees shall have leave to report at any time, by bill or otherwise.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer. I hope the resolution will be passed.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Florida give way to me for a moment?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. As one member of the Senate I think the resolution ought to be disposed of one way or the other. It has been here a number of days. The Senator from Florida has made many efforts to have it disposed of and, I for one am anxious to have it passed or defeated or something done with it, so as to get it out of the way. I agree with a good deal of the criticism that was made yesterday by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] as to the resolution. I think it is altogether too broad. I do not see that we need to investigate the election of members of the legislature of Florida or the governor of that State.

Mr. GEORGE. I have just read the resolution as modified by the Senator from Florida, and the particular objection to which the Senator from New York now alludes has been eliminated.

Mr. HILL. I was going to offer an amendment striking out the greater part of the resolution. Perhaps I might as well, without any further remark, offer the amendment now.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from New York whether he has read the modified resolution now under consideration by the Senate?

Mr. CALL. The modified resolution strikes out all reference to the State of Florida or any State, and refers only to the United States. If the Senator will allow me one moment, I will state that there was nothing in the original resolution that referred to the election of any member of the State legislature. It referred to the action of the Honduras Lottery Company in attempting to affect legislation.

Mr. HILL. That is only another way of investigating the same matter.

Mr. CALL. I am content to strike out reference to the legislature of Florida or any other legislature.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New York allow the resolution as modified to be read?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. HILL. It will facilitate the matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very materially changed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the State of Florida and is engaged in business there and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States—

Mr. CALL. The words "State of Florida" were stricken out and the words "United States" were inserted. The clerks are reading the wrong resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is right as it now stands.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to have the resolution read.

Mr. CALL. The resolution as modified is at the desk.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator from Florida want to state the number who shall compose the committee?

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to the number being stated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Make it eleven.

Mr. HALE. The number ought to be stated in the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I will say "five."

Mr. BUTLER. Let the resolution be read as modified.

Mr. HALE. A committee of five is, I understand, proposed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let the whole resolution be read from beginning to end.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution as modified be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the United States and making use of the mails and of interstate—

Mr. SHERMAN. "And is engaged."

The Secretary continued to read, as follows:

and making use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the election of members of Congress, and whether it owns, either directly or indirectly, any interest in newspapers published in the United States, and whether it or any corporation or persons connected with it or them have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that that part of the resolution may be read which has in it the extraordinary proposition that this body shall investigate the qualifications of members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CALL. There is nothing of that kind in the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit that the resolution as modified, if not referred to a committee, ought to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It ought to be referred to a committee on style.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Florida will take the resolution as he had it printed in the new form, it seems to me there can be no objection to it and no controversy about it. I will ask to have the resolution read as it is printed here, which I think is a great deal better than the modified resolution, changed since the resolution was printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Chair understand the Senator from Ohio to offer an amendment to the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. No. I think if what I have sent to the desk is read, Senators having it on their tables before them—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document which the Senator from Ohio has sent to the desk is the original resolution, the Chair understands.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it was modified by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will be read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I rise to make an inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state his inquiry.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was the reading of the other resolution finished, or did the clerk stop in the midst of the reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the resolution handed in this morning, as modified by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], has been read. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] now presents a resolution which was previously offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], as the Chair understands, and asks that the same be read for information.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I ask, also for information, whether the resolution as amended by the Senator from Florida, which we have just had read, preceded or followed the resolution prepared by the Senator from Florida which the Senator from Ohio has now asked to have read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the resolution as first read succeeded the resolution now sent to the desk by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well. Then I understand the Senator from Ohio does not wish to be understood as saying that the resolution he now sends up is the present view of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do understand it so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Florida sent to the desk a subsequent resolution which meets his view, and the Secretary was interrupted in the reading of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio requests the reading of a resolution. The Secretary will read as indicated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say a few words to clear the atmosphere around us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do for an explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] introduced a resolution which required the Senate to investigate what happened in the legislature of Florida, and also several other matters over which we have no jurisdiction. The Senator from Florida afterwards had printed a proposition which excludes all the objectionable matter and simply requires an examination into the conduct of a foreign corporation which is interfering with our postal laws and which tends to degrade our people by introducing vicious habits as to lotteries. Now, the resolution as printed and submitted by the Senator from Florida is right—every word of it. I hope it will now be read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course it will not be read until we are through making this inquiry. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] requested the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to give way for a moment, stating that he was in deep sympathy with the Senator from Florida as to a very little of what the Senator from Florida desired—

Mr. HILL. That is a pretty broad statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. And offered a resolution looking to the accomplishment of that result. Whereupon the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] stated to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] had prepared another resolution which eliminated all the objectionable matter to which the Senator from New York made protest, and requested that before the Senator from New York send to the Chair his resolution to be read the resolution as offered by the Senator from Florida should be first read.

While the Secretary was in the midst of reading that resolution, which is the last production of the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] rose and presented a resolution which he says embodies the views of the Senator from Florida. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I desire to say that all that is admissible under our rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. Now, Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very glad to give way to the Senator from Florida if he will tell us which resolution now meets his views.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Colorado, like every lawyer in stating his own case, states it in his own way, and generally wrong.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I may be permitted, I will say that I am endeavoring to state the case of the Senator from Florida as stated by himself and not as stated by other Senators.

Mr. CALL. I beg pardon; the statement of the Senator from Colorado is entirely incorrect. A new resolution has been offered here day after day, amended, and changed from the original, because there has been an effort to bury the resolution in the committee, and everyone knows that if anything ever goes there it rarely comes back. The resolution offered by me referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was offered yesterday. This morning it came up regularly.

I modified the resolution by striking out several words referring to the State of Florida, although I have in my hand a resolution of a Democratic committee of the Democratic House of Representatives, passed in 1876, sending to Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina a committee to examine into the action of the returning boards and all the elections in those States. Still, to gratify these unnecessary criticisms, I have stricken out every word relating to a particular State.

Mr. GRAY. The resolution now relates to the elections of Representatives in Congress.

Mr. CALL. The modified resolution was read at the desk.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have a vote on the question.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Ohio has offered a resolution, being the resolution I offered yesterday without the modification I made this morning.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Florida includes in the resolution an inquiry as to the ownership of certain newspapers in his own State.

Mr. CALL. I have stricken out that provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that he make that general.

Mr. CALL. I have made it general.

Mr. ALDRICH. The question of the ownership of newspapers in the United States opens up a very valuable and curious field of inquiry, and I suggest that if we are going into that question at all we should make the inquiry general.

Mr. CALL. It is general.

Mr. ALDRICH. We should make it apply to all States and all localities.

Mr. GRAY. All newspapers.

Mr. ALDRICH. And all newspapers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] had the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was recognized by the Chair. The Senator from Florida has yielded the floor three times.

Mr. CALL. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Florida had yielded the floor, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. Thereupon, the Senator from Rhode Island resuming his seat, the Chair recognized the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then in my own right I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. CALL. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will state his point of order.

Mr. CALL. I yielded the floor to several Senators, not permanently, but for the purpose of making inquiries in regard to the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I protest—

Mr. CALL. I yielded for that purpose, and had no objection to so yielding; but now the Senator from Kentucky, as upon three preceding days, seems very anxious that there shall be no action upon the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to debate, Mr. President.

Mr. CALL. I make the point of order that the Senator from Kentucky has no right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky, having been recognized by the Chair, is entitled to the floor. The Chair was not aware of the circumstance that the Senator from Florida had only temporarily yielded the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I deny that any Senator has the right to take the floor and farm out the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has been recognized. His motion is in order and is now before the Senate. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5603) to repeal an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissions," approved August 19, 1890.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 9, after line 8, to insert:

CONSTRUCTION OF TELEGRAPH CABLE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraph cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, debate upon the pending amendment submitted by the committee has lasted now for several days. The Senate seems to have lost sight of the fact that the question pending before it is not the amendment just read at the desk, but it is a question of order raised by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. In all the days which have been consumed in this debate, I do not remember that any Senator except the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who addressed the Senate yesterday—

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky is mistaken as to his facts. The Senator from Texas withdrew his point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Texas told me he did not, and has made a special request—

Mr. ALDRICH. The RECORD will show that he did withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A question being raised with reference to the matter, the Chair will appeal to the RECORD. The present occupant of the chair was not then present. The Secretary will examine the RECORD and report its statement in this respect.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not be mistaken. The junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] made the point of order against the amendment. At the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] he agreed to withhold the point of order in order that Senators might have an opportunity of discussing the amendment. The Senator from Texas was not in the Senate yesterday, and left at a comparatively early hour in the afternoon of the day before, and in both instances he asked me to see, if he were not present, that the point of order was insisted upon and decided.

Mr. HALE. I suppose there is no real question about it. I think, technically, that at the time the Senator from Texas did withdraw the point of order and intended to renew it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not matter. It would be renewed anyway.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Kentucky can renew it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would do so except that the Senator from Texas tells me he still insisted upon his point of order.

Mr. HALE. I suppose he would have to renew it, probably.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; it would be renewed. In that connection I desire to say that though I am in charge of the bill by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I have never favored the amendment that is now under consideration. I shall vote against its being incorporated into the pending bill on the question of merit. I shall vote to sustain the point of order. I do not believe the amendment is in order under the rule. I rely upon two propositions to sustain the objection.

In the first place, I do believe that this is general legislation, which it is sought by the committee amendment to ingraft upon an appropriation bill. It has never been passed upon or reported favorably by any standing or select committee of this body. It has never been estimated for or reported by a Department of the Government. More than that, it is obnoxious to the rule from another standpoint. It certainly is not germane to the bill. It is a provision looking to the expenditure of money for a purpose not connected with or germane to a bill which simply proposes to make appropriations for the pay and maintenance of the diplomatic and consular service of this country.

I need not weary the Senate by a discussion of the rule. I do not think anything could be made plainer.

Rule XVI provides that—

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation—

And surely this is a new item of appropriation—unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

That is not claimed in this case—

or treaty stipulation—

Which surely does not apply here—or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

For which there is no claim made in any quarter—or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Mr. HALE. Now, right there—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Most certainly.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator from Kentucky forget that this amendment comes here by the sanction of a standing committee of the Senate, to wit, the Committee on Appropriations? The Senator loses sight of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations has the same power to give sanction to an amendment to a bill that any other committee has; and the Committee on Appropriations has directed the amendment to be put upon the bill, thereby exercising the same authority that any other standing committee would exercise if it moved the amendment to the bill after the bill came into this Chamber. I think the Senator from Kentucky, as an old parliamentarian, will acknowledge that. The Committee on Appropriations is not ousted of the same power that other committees have.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not going to contend that the position which the Senator from Maine seems to take now is unfair. That it is novel, that it is without precedent, I think he will admit. But I do not object to it on that ground. It is but perfectly natural that the Senator from Maine, advocating and supporting the amendment, should resort to methods which are without precedent and novel, because the amendment itself is without precedent in the history of this country. Never before was it proposed; much less by a rider upon a general appropriation bill, to commit the Government to the expenditure of $3,000,000 or any other amount of money for building a cable to any foreign shore. The amendment itself is an unprecedented and novel proposition. The arguments by which the Senator from Maine seeks to support it are entitled to be novel and unprecedented, too.

I now insist that he can not point to an instance, nor can any other Senator, where such a construction was ever put upon that rule. It never before was claimed in the history of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island please allow me to finish this sentence? I want to finish the sentence.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will furnish one instance.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will go back. Never before in the history of the Government did any Senator ever claim that Rule XVI was to be so construed as to allow the Committee on Appropriations to be either the standing or the select committee that must recommend an amendment before it shall be in order and cease to be obnoxious to that rule. The practice is universal and unbroken—there never was an instance in which it was violated or disregarded—in the construction of that clause of Rule XVI; that it means that some committee, standing or select, other than the Committee on Appropriations, shall have recommended an amendment and sent it through this Chamber to the Committee on Appropriations before the Committee on Appropriations has the right under the rule to incorporate it in a bill.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] appealed to me a moment since, and I will yield to him first.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky will find precedents in every general appropriation bill that was ever reported to the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations. There never has been a bill, I will venture to say, reported from that committee to the Senate which did not contain new provisions increasing appropriations already made and new items of appropriation recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and by nobody else.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have asked the Senator to put his finger on a case, which he has failed to do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will justify all I have said in that respect. Certainly during my service in the Senate I have never known a general appropriation bill to be reported that did not contain such provisions.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island, to whom I am always more than glad to yield the floor, now whilst he is on the floor, please answer me one question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will he indicate and point out a single, solitary instance which has occurred within the last one hundred years where a point of order having been made, the Senate ever did sustain a proposition to interject into a general appropriation bill any item or amendment that was obnoxious to the sixteenth rule?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate has certainly done so, and it is doing it all the time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator please point me to one instance?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, I will send for the Indian appropriation bill, reported by the committee yesterday, and I will show him not only one, but scores of amendments of the same character reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Rhode Island does not answer my question. He is now talking about a bill which has never been before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will show the Senator from Kentucky such instances in this very bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The question I ask the Senator from Rhode Island is whether within the last one hundred years there is an instance to be found with a search warrant where a point of order was made under Rule XVI and was overruled either by the Presiding Officer of this body or by a vote of the Senate, and such an amendment was allowed to be considered?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have never heard the construction now contended for by the Senator from Kentucky urged in the Senate by any Senator, and I think no such question was ever raised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. It seems that this novel and unprecedented amendment is bringing out novel and unprecedented things all around.

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly is. No Senator on this floor ever contended that that rule had the construction which the Senator from Kentucky now undertakes to place upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to suggest in a very few words the only point in the matter?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Tennessee will indulge me but a moment—I shall not detain the Senate much longer—I will state that I am trying to do, and if I may be left uninterrupted for five minutes I will do, just what the Senator from Tennessee wants to do. I will tell the Chair and tell the Senate where I think the point is.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator from Alabama to excuse me.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask a question for information. The Senator from Kentucky is a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations. I desire to ask him to inform me on what appropriation act it was that the appropriation of money was made to survey this same cable route?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, Mr. President, I do not want to be led off.

Mr. MORGAN. This will not lead the Senator off.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator. He is generally better informed upon all subjects than any other Senator. My recollection is that it was done in 1891.

Mr. HALE. On the naval appropriation act?

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the naval appropriation act. Now, if I may be allowed, with the permission of the Senator from Alabama, I will resume.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him. I know the question rather put him out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the contrary, it did not annoy me a particle except by its absolute irrelevance and meaninglessness in this connection.

Now, having said so much in reference to my objection to the amendment under the first clause of Rule XVI, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to paragraph 3 of the same rule. I insist that either under paragraph 1 or paragraph 2 it is utterly impossible for the Chair or for the Senate to hold that the amendment has any place in the pending bill. I have read the first paragraph. Now I will read the third paragraph:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any appropriation bill—

Mark you, the disjunctive form is employed here—

nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

Is there a Senator upon this floor who will contend that the amendment is germane to the subject-matter of the pending bill?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Kentucky asks the question I will answer yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want Senators to answer in their own time, if they please.

Mr. MORGAN. There is one here; and I was right about it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, if I am entitled to the floor, I will proceed. I am trying to get through—

Mr. WOLCOTT. What was the answer of the Senator from Alabama? We could not on this side hear what he said.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest that the Senator from Alabama did not have the floor to say anything.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I certainly should like to know what reply the Senator from Alabama made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senate is not making much headway. If I can be let alone for five minutes by the clock I will do as I have done for the last week, keep my seat, say nothing, and let everyone else talk until he gets tired. The third paragraph of Rule XVI reads:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Then the rule goes on with a bill of particulars:

Nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Now, I insist that under the first clause of this rule it is the duty of the Chair, upon the point of order being raised, to determine it subject to appeal to the Senate. Under the third paragraph of the rule the Chair is not only not called upon, but he is not permitted to decide the question of relevancy. That shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate. But under the first clause of the third paragraph of the rule it is the duty of the Chair to rule and to determine, subject to the right of appeal to the Senate.

Mr. President, either under the first clause or under the third clause I hold that this amendment is not entitled to be considered here. It is not germane to the subject-matter of the pending bill. It does not relate to the paragraph to which it is attached. More than that, it has never been recommended by any standing or select committee of this body. It has never been estimated for by any Department of this Government. Besides, sir, in my judgment, even if not obnoxious to the rule, it has no merit upon which to stand.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Kentucky does not claim that the amendment changes any existing law? The Senator does not make that claim?

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no law to be changed upon this subject. It is new legislation. It changes the attitude of the Government. It is the first time in the history of this Government that the proposition was ever made that we should go to work to build foreign cables.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But it changes no existing law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Everyone understands very well, Mr. President, what the amendment is. It is an entering wedge, looking to the expenditure of three millions of money to lay a cable from the California coast to Honolulu or the Hawaiian Islands. It is the entering wedge of that project of annexation which lies so close to the hearts of many Senators here. I have no quarrel with them. I simply say it is without precedent. I have never favored the amendment, and I shall vote against it when the vote is reached at half past 2 o'clock. I am not going into general discussion of the question of annexation. What I mean to say is that if Senators will take this rule and read the first and third paragraphs, they must, in my judgment, come to the conclusion that the men who wrote those paragraphs in that rule were employing the plainest and strongest English that any tongue has ever yet controlled to prevent the introduction of just such amendments on just such bills and under just such circumstances.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, it seems to me (and I make the statement without intending to reflect in the least degree upon my distinguished friend) that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] occupies to-day a most remarkable and exceptional position. He stands here in charge of the bill. He stands here as the representative of the Committee on Appropriations. There is before the Senate for consideration a provision in the bill, new, it is true, new legislation perhaps, that has received the sanction of the majority of the committee which has charged him with the care of the bill, and he not only invokes against it the usual course—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Against what?

Mr. MANDERSON. Against the adoption of the amendment proposed by his committee. He not only invokes argument against it, but he brings, as I take it, exceptional and strained interpretation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question which is purely on this subject?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to impute to me any unusual conduct in that I am in charge of a bill one provision of which has been put in by a majority vote of the committee to which I do not give my assent? Is there anything—

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not dispute the Senator's right to do it. I do not dispute the propriety of his action.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all.

Mr. MANDERSON. I say it is unusual that a Senator should find himself in that position.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not pleasant, either.

Mr. MANDERSON. I can realize that it is unpleasant.

Now, Mr. President, the rules of the Senate are not only very frequently disregarded by a majority of this body, but they are frequently set aside. If we were to pursue them in their strictness they would be barriers to legislation. But we do not pursue them in their strictness. We expunge them altogether very frequently by the unanimous consent of the Senate. I have never known an occasion when a rule was invoked by a point of order and a majority of the Senate were in favor of ingrafting upon an appropriation bill, even general legislation, that the rule was not entirely disregarded, the Chair overruled at times, and at other times the rules set aside by a majority vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The senior Senator from Nebraska is one of the best equipped members of the Senate Committee on Rules. I indorse what he says. I go further. I not only agree with him that there never was a time when a rule was invoked here that a majority of the Senate wanted to override it that they did not do it—

Mr. MANDERSON. Always.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I go further and state that, in my judgment, the Senate has no rules and never did have since I have known anything about it. I go further and appeal to the Senator from Nebraska and make him my witness by whom to prove that it is not my fault. For at least eighteen months or two years past I have done my best in the Committee on Rules to get them to adopt a rule by which the Senate could transact business, but I have never succeeded because I could not secure the invaluable aid of the senior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is very true. The rules are good enough for me as they stand, and their principal merit is that we can so quickly get rid of them when we desire.

Mr. President, I was struck with the remark yesterday of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who said he cared nothing for the rules of the Senate; that this is a proposition so meritorious, that it is a proposition so important to the best interests of this country, that notwithstanding he might be of the opinion that placing it upon an appropriation bill is in violation of the rule, he would not vote to sustain the point of order. I concur with him upon that proposition. I agree with him that the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations is of such vast importance to this country that no rule should be permitted to stand in the way of its enactment into law.

I wish very much that there had been a crowded Senate when the Senator from Alabama made that luminous and wonderful speech yesterday, showing the necessities for the building of this cable. He set forth in most apt language and in eloquent terms why we should not only build this cable, but why we should annex those islands of the Pacific Ocean. I think the time has come when this great Republic of ours should extend its limits. I do not know but that there is in me something of the spirit of the filibusterer, as those were called who were in favor of the annexation of islands in years gone by. This country can never obtain commercial supremacy among the nations of the world until it has entered as the rival of that great power, England, in obtaining the islands of the ocean. No true American can pick up the map of this continent without feeling, as it seems to me, a sense of shame that one of the islands which forms the military and the naval key to our situation has over it the flag of England—I mean the Bermudas. He can not but feel a sense of shame when he sees that all the islands from Cuba to the Lower Antilles, which stand like sentinels at the Gulf of Mexico, are owned by foreign powers and not one of them is owned by the Government of the United States.

We stand, Mr. President, in the position where a great army would stand that would allow its outposts to be held by the enemy. Unquestionably if we do not reach our hands for the purpose of taking not only the Sandwich Islands, but ultimately some of the islands of the Caribbean Sea, we never can assume among the nations of the earth that naval and military supremacy which must be in the leadership of commercial power.

So, on a question so important as this, I for one do not hesitate, even although I might agree with the Senator from Kentucky, in voting to violate the rules of the Senate. They ought not to stand in the way, but should be brushed aside when a question is so important as the one before us.

Now, the Senator from Kentucky (I regret his absence from the Chamber, and I have been talking in this general way simply in the hope that he might return) challenges the Senator from Rhode Island to bring forward some instances that are akin to this in the legislative history of the Senate. I remember several of them. I know that there came from the Committee on Appropriations, not by the report of any standing or select committee, the proposition to subsidize ships for mail carriage. As I recall the appropriation of $400,000 or $600,000, it was challenged on this floor by the raising of the point of order that it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill; and that emanated from the Committee on Appropriations.

I remember that on some of the naval appropriation bills there have been emanating from the Committee on Appropriations, and not by the suggestion of any standing committee, large appropriations for the building of ships. I sent a few moments ago to the document room and obtained the sundry civil appropriation act of the last Congress. It is full of propositions that emanated directly and in the first instance from the Committee on Appropriations, and I have no question but that reference to the debates upon that bill would show that the point of order was raised against several of them. I find on page 70 of this print a proposition with reference to the settlers on the Des Moines River lands. As I recall that provision (and my recollection in that respect is verified by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who had charge of that important subject-matter) it did not emanate from any of the standing or select committees of the body, but came from the Appropriations—

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me to correct him, I will state that the amendment to which he refers came from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I was mistaken.

Mr. PASCO. It was considered first by that committee and referred on their motion to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANDERSON. I know it was a very old piece of legislation. Is the Senator from Florida confident that it came from the Committee on Public Lands at the last session?

Mr. PASCO. I am.

Mr. MANDERSON. That, then, is an exception. Now, I turn to page 123 and I find a proviso which changed existing law as to the United States district attorneys, and which did not come from the Committee on the Judiciary. It provided that hereafter—

The United States district attorney shall be allowed one fee and one mileage actually traveled to and from the place of hearing for his attendance in person, or by his assistant before a United States commissioner or other committing magistrate in each case and no more.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Was there any point of order made against that amendment?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know that there was.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then how could it have been excluded? Mr. MANDERSON. I gave, in the absence of the Senator, several instances where points of order were made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And were overruled?

Mr. MANDERSON. And were overruled by the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the Senator's permission I will ask him if such action was taken in those cases in the exercise of that absolute disregard of the rule that the Senator says the Senate always employs?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So do I.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the rule was completely disregarded by the Senate. I refer particularly to the instance where upon one of the great appropriation bills there was imposed a subsidy for mail steamers, which was presented by the Committee on Appropriations. As I recall it, the point of order was made upon it as against the committee's amendment, the point of order was overruled by the vote of the Senate, and the amendment was retained upon the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will make a contract with the Senator, with his permission, by which I will not interrupt him again or ask him another question if he will let me ask him one right here.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator may ask me all he pleases.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Do I understand that the Senator is defending the pending amendment upon the ground that it is outside of the rule, but that the practice of the Senate has been never to pay any attention to its rules, but to violate them on all occasions, and consequently it ought to do it now?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is my position exactly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is it?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is my position exactly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then there is no quarrel between the Senator and myself.

Mr. MANDERSON. None whatever. I always bow to the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Rules when he attempts to construe a rule, even when I know he is wrong. I follow my leader implicitly in that direction. I take exactly the position suggested by the Senator from Kentucky; that this is a piece of legislation so important for this country that the rules of the Senate, which are daily more honored in their breach than in their observance, should be torn asunder to place this important piece of legislation on this appropriation bill. Now, if this debate shall continue long enough so as to make it worth my while to expend the time, I will undertake to show to the Senator from Kentucky a great many instances during his period of service in the Senate when the Committee on Appropriations, without suggestion from any standing committee, has presented new legislation upon appropriation bills, the point of order made against them frequently, and the Senate overruling the point of order and voting the amendment upon the bill. I hope when that shall appear he will be content to follow these numerous precedents and follow the majority of his committee.

Mr. PALMER. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly. I am through.

Mr. PALMER. Is it the duty of the Chair to observe the rules?

Mr. MANDERSON. The rules in their wonderful latitude permit the Presiding Officer of the body a very delightful opportunity to evade responsibility and submit all questions for the vote of the Senate. I am glad to say that the Presiding Officers of this body upon important questions usually take that course, and I have no question but that that will be the course which will be taken by whoever shall preside when the question of order shall come to be submitted; he will leave it to the Senate itself, that makes the rules and breaks the rules, to determine whether in this particular instance the rule shall be broken.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the abnormal character of the amendment, the impropriety of urging it at this time, is well illustrated by the situation in which we find ourselves at this moment. Here is legislation, whether it be in order or not, confessedly of the most important character, so important that more than one Senator has said upon his own responsibility and in his place that he was willing to throw to the winds all the rules that govern the procedure of this body; that he was willing that anarchy should come into that procedure if need be in order to bring about the adoption of the amendment.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has said, with an emphasis that I have never before known him to employ, that he was willing, so important did he consider the crisis—I think that was the word—to violate every rule that the Senate has adopted to govern its procedure, and that nothing of propriety or of parliamentary usage should stand in the way of incorporating this amendment upon the pending appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senate and I want to appeal to the country as to whether the adoption of this measure by such methods will receive the sanction of this body or of the public sentiment of the country. Why should our judgments be hurried, stamped by this proclamation of a crisis, a national crisis in our affairs, in order that we may expend three millions of money in giving us telegraphic communication with the Islands of Hawaii? What has occurred, what is there in the situation, what is there in the history of our times, to justify these extraordinary propositions and this extraordinary language, if I may be allowed without offense to so characterize it, of the Senator from Nebraska and of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]?

Why, sir, we were all slumbering peacefully in the regular intervals of repose until the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] introduced the amendment. I doubt whether it ever occurred to a single member of this body until it occurred to the fertile, direct, and practical mind of the Senator from Maine that the amendment was necessary for the peace, the comfort, or the happiness of this country to be introduced and incorporated in the pending bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not convey the impression that he alone believes that this matter took thought and form in a strange and unaccountable manner in my brain. Three years ago Congress entered in upon this matter and provided for a survey with the direct object of building this cable. That laid the foundation of it; and since then there have been other proceedings in both bodies touching it. I was only proposing to carry out what Congress had embarked upon in this matter, believing that the time has come when the original purpose of Congress embodied in our bills should be carried into effect. It was not a new, a strange, and uncouth object that I obtruded on the public mind by any means.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine is correct in stating that there had been, three years ago, a preliminary investigation of the route for a telegraph cable to Hawaii; but he misunderstood me if he thinks I meant to criticize his right to introduce the amendment. Not at all. But I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that grave and distinguished Senators on this floor have, with an emphasis and with an excitement that I have rarely seen equaled, sought to call our attention to the existence of some alleged crisis in our national life; that suddenly, upon the introduction of the amendment by the Senator from Maine, they seemed to have waked up to a danger that was menacing the country, and that there was an importance to be attached to the consideration of the subject which warranted the breaking of all the rules of the Senate and our relapsing into a state of anarchy in this body, so far as rules are concerned, in order that we might with unseemly haste and precipitation incorporate a proposition to spend $3,000,000 in giving us telegraphic communication with Hawaii.

Mr. HALE. Now, does not the Senator from Delaware frankly think that the debates in this body and elsewhere for the last two years upon the general subject of the Hawaiian Islands and our relations to them, and transactions there, have so brought the whole matter to the public attention that this is naturally the focalizing of all that? This is the first practical thing that has been proposed by anybody. All the rest has been debate upon resolutions of one sentiment or another, and it has finally resulted that this project has been brought forward as a practical business matter. Is not that natural?

Mr. GRAY. I concede that the Senator from Maine, who is the author of this amendment, has offered the first practical suggestion which has been made in this long and weary debate that has occupied our time during the last two years; but during all that time I do not believe that any Senator within the sound of my voice or any member of this body had worked himself up into a state of mind such as was manifested by the Senator from Nebraska this morning and the Senator from Alabama yesterday afternoon in regard to the gravity of the situation which they attempted to depict.

Why was it that not until the suggestion of a telegraphic cable, not until there was a suggestion to spend three millions of the people's money in order to forward some scheme, commercial or otherwise, did we discover this grave national situation that required us to go without our ordinary rest and our heads to be perturbed on their pillows with visions of disaster and danger threatening this country unless this cable should be immediately built?

It seems to me, so far as I can view this matter, that the terror displayed by the Senator from Alabama on yesterday afternoon was altogether disproportionate to anything that I can see in the situation. Of course my own powers of observation and perspicacity may be entirely at fault, and the Senator from Alabama may be entirely right, but I am only expressing my own astonishment that a situation so grave as this should not be obvious even to my poor powers of perception.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I was not conscious that I was in any state of terror yesterday afternoon when I had the honor of the floor, and I did not express any terror of anybody. I expressed merely what I conceived to be an obvious necessity that we should take time by the forelock and do something now which would prevent us from being robbed of a possession that I thought was ours under treaty arrangement.

Mr. GRAY. Think of it, Mr. President. That survey was made—may I ask the Senator from Maine how long ago?

Mr. HALE. In 1891.

Mr. GRAY. That survey was made in 1891, four years ago, and yet in all that interval we have been sleeping on our posts, and not giving the alarm to the country that was given yesterday by the Senator from Alabama and by the Senator from Nebraska this morning, and failing to call attention to this grave crisis which was threatening our peace and our prosperity.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is wrong in saying that we have slept on it ever since. In the very next Congress after that, the Committee on Appropriations reported a project for a subsidy amounting to $3,000,000, to be given to a company to build a cable. That was beaten and thrown out, and the main reason given was that an association, a company, would absorb it, would grab it, and the Government would lose all control of it, although it should pay the money, and now, on the heels of that, the Committee on Appropriations has put in another proposition that the Government shall build the cable and own it and operate it. We have not slept since 1891, but have tried to accomplish this.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that I introduced a proposition in 1891 for the incorporation of a company to construct and lay a cable to the Sandwich Islands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4600) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We are proceeding under a unanimous consent agreement to vote to-day; but, without raising that point, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally and temporarily laid aside and that the Senate continue the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not wish to exaggerate the attitude taken by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Nebraska in their advocacy of this proposed cable.

Mr. HALE. I did not know that the Senator was aware that action had been taken by Congress, and that we have been all the time endeavoring to accomplish it.

Mr. GRAY. I listened to the Senator from Maine when he spoke on this amendment, as I usually listen to him, with great respect and interest and instruction, and I heard him recite that incident in its history; but it does not appear that even then the situation was considered so grave that we could not deliberately, without excitement, and without having our judgment hurried, pass upon the propriety of giving a subsidy to a private corporation, or of considering that no necessity existed for telegraphic communication with the Hawaiian Islands, and it seems to have occurred to no one even to suggest, if they disapproved of the first method, of employing the one it is proposed to employ now. So I think I am right in saying that in all this time we have been serenely occupied with the ordinary affairs of legislation, without being at all disturbed by any of those things imagined by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, as I listened to the Senator from Alabama in his eloquent recital of the influence and power of the British Empire and the necessity there was on our part to be the vigilant sentinels of our country in its time of danger, I could have almost supposed that we were on the verge of a war with our kindred across the sea.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not allude to that, but I think we are on the verge of being very badly cheated. That is my idea.

Mr. GRAY. "Very badly cheated," but there was a great deal more in the manner and tone of the Senator than the danger of being pretty badly cheated would account for. I think, perhaps, the gentlemen who are conducting affairs in Hawaii, so far as they are concerned, can take care of themselves when it comes to a bargain or to a matter of being cheated on one side or the other. The Senator is in milder mood now.

Mr. President, I have learned in my service, now not a short one, in this body that there is no better way to excite flagging interest—or rather to create interest—in a measure than to invoke the fear of British aggression, British influence, British power, British competition, and I have sat here many a time and on frequent occasions and listened to these appeals to a sentiment which I do not believe is one calculated to promote lucidity of judgment or that temperateness and deliberation which ought to characterize legislative action. I for one am a little wearied of these appeals. I think that the United States and that the American people have outgrown this state of pupillage. I think that we no longer ought to seek to occupy the provincial status which these appeals indicate or would seem to make necessary in order that they might be of effect.

I do not think that it is a very lofty, high, or patriotic feeling not to believe that the legislation of this country, its policy, its attitude, and its standing among the nations of the world are assured and can be maintained without fear of British aggression or of British influence, and I should deplore appeals of that kind as tending to warp the judgment and to confuse the understanding of those who ought to bring to the consideration of public matters a clear judgment and an undisturbed mental action in order that we may have the best legislative results. Many a selfish scheme has been promoted by this unworthy practice.

Mr. President, I should like some Senator to tell me what it is we have to fear from Great Britain. When a real interest of this country is involved, or if the prosperity or existence or integrity of our country should be threatened, I believe that there is a courage and confidence in the bosom of every patriotic American citizen which will enable him to fling defiance in the face of any power on earth without blenching and without fear.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator asks a question, and I should like to have an opportunity to answer it, though I do not desire to take up his time in doing so.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator will not take much time, because we vote at half past 2 o'clock, and I am anxious that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] shall take the floor on his consular amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall not take up much of the Senator's time.

I wish to ask the Senator if he sees no significance in the fact that Great Britain, with the finest navy in the world, is securing strategic positions all around the globe. She has secured islands everywhere for military and naval stations, and Hawaii is the last one of those in a commanding position within comparatively easy reach that is left open to our competition. Is there no weight to be given to that? Is it not possible that we may have something to do with the affairs of the outside world at some time in the future?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I am not disturbed by the course of British Empire, which is often alluded to here in terms of apprehension if not of criticism and denunciation. I do not hold myself as an American Senator and an American citizen bound to follow her example. I have thought that American policies and an American international morality have been established in the hundred years of our existence, and I am a great deal more proud of that than I am of any attempt to imitate Great Britain in her career of empire around the world—these stepping stones, as some Senator calls them, which are to be established across the Pacific, in order that we may imitate the world-girdling policy of that country, which it seems to me impossible for some Senators here to banish from their thoughts.

There is another consideration to which I wish to briefly ask the attention of the Senate, I have not the time to more than allude to it, and that is this: We are called upon by this amendment to take an initial step, a new departure in legislation by an amendment to an appropriation bill, without the consideration of any of the standing committees of this body which have the time and the competence to examine and maturely consider the proposition in all its bearings. These committees are created for that purpose. In the parliamentary tumult of the closing days of this session we are to be asked here in fifteen minutes from this time to vote upon this most important proposition.

I protest, Mr. President, that this is not such a performance of our high legislative duties as will commend itself to the people of this country. We are asked to embark in an enterprise which, in its initial step, is to involve an expenditure of three millions of money. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] confessed yesterday that it was only an initial step, and that he was in favor of making it a part of a great system of Pacific cables which would cover the bottom of that ocean and take us all around this globe.

Where are we to stop? What are the interests of your constituents [the Vice-President in the chair] and mine, sir, of the men who plow the furrows in the field and who work early and late in the factories, in this expenditure which comes, after all, from the product of their toil? It is made in the interest primarily of certain commercial and business interests of the Island of Hawaii; it is made for no purpose which concerns the Government of these United States. We have in use no harbor there; we have no fortifications which make a cable a military necessity. If this is to be the first step in annexation, then I ask Senators not to reverse the natural process. Let us annex the Hawaiian Islands and consider the cable afterwards when the military necessity arises. But I do protest against having this matter prejudged and the American people committed to annexation in this indirect manner.

Mr. President, one word, and only a word, about the point of order which has been raised under Rule XVI. If this is not general legislation I have failed to hear any Senator explain what it is. Of course it is general legislation, and the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Alabama in what they said yesterday afternoon and this morning have not undertaken to show wherein this is not obnoxious to the language and spirit of that rule; but they have boldly confronted the situation by saying, "rules or no rules, the crisis is so important that this amendment must be incorporated in this appropriation bill."

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me a moment. If he had been in the Senate when I made my speech yesterday afternoon he would not have made that remark, because I elaborately argued the proposition that every single particle of this amendment was in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. And in order under the rules.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, in order under the rules; and I took up the rule and discussed it, and I believe it to be in order, unquestionably in order.

Mr. GRAY. It may have been my misfortune not to have had the opportunity of hearing the argument of the Senator. I heard the Senator, it is true, say he believed the amendment was in order. That was his opinion. But in that part of his speech I heard—and I thought I heard it all—he took refuge where the Senator from Nebraska has taken refuge, in the power of the Senate to disregard its own rules. Of course I admit that is a matter which will address itself to the conscience and judgment of individual Senators, and I have no right to criticize, nor do I presume to criticize, any Senator for his vote upon this matter. I can only say for myself that I can not find it consistent with my duty to vote squarely against what I believe to be a rule of this Senate which I am obliged to conform to.

Mr. HOAR. How does the Senator distinguish this amendment in principle from an amendment to a river and harbor bill for an improvement in Delaware Bay, which the Committee on Commerce would insert in the bill as a matter of course?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, a river and harbor bill is a matter which deals, of course, with rivers and harbors, and the addition of an item to that bill of appropriation for a distinct harbor is not, I believe, so far as I can give an answer to the Senator's question now, a matter of general legislation. This amendment, however, is a matter of general legislation obviously, inasmuch as it undertakes to change the attitude of this Government as it has existed during a hundred years toward project of this kind proposed to be put in the control of Government itself to manage, maintain, and operate.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator seems to fail to comprehend the point of my question, which is: Why is this amendment a matter of general legislation any more than an amendment for the improvement of the harbor of Delaware Bay would be general legislation when offered to a river and harbor bill?

Mr. GRAY. I think it differs.

Mr. HOAR. Why?

Mr. GRAY. I think it does differ, but I have not time to do more than to ask the Senator why this is not a matter of general legislation, which I should be glad he would in his own time explain, and not by comparing it with some other matter which may or may not be obnoxious to the same rule.

Mr. HOAR. This is a proposition for a special public work in the interest of commerce, just as every proposition for an amendment to the river and harbor bill is a proposition in the interest of commerce. It is a special public work, and we never have treated such a proposition as general legislation.

Mr. GRAY. This is a great deal more than a special public work. It is a proposition that the Government of the United States for the first time in its history shall not only build, but shall maintain and operate an instrumentality of communication between this country and a foreign country. It is just as important and just as much a departure from our policy as if it were a proposition to build, equip, and operate a line of steamships between this country and the Sandwich Islands—every bit as much—and I say it is a departure not only in fact, but it is a departure in principle; and the Senator from Nebraska the other day in the colloquy he had with the Senator from Maine I think demonstrated that it was a concession to the State socialistic principles which the Senator from Nebraska seemed himself to advocate. It is just as much a departure, I say again, as it would be to equip a railroad from the lakes to the Gulf and to maintain a railroad service by the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I do not think that in this hasty manner we should attempt to incorporate legislation not only of that general but that far-reaching character upon an appropriation bill and in the short time which is given to debate of this bill in all its multifarious items that we should impose upon this country a system or a scheme so far-reaching and important as this is destined to be.

I hope that, if the Chair shall undertake to decide this question, he will take the view I have taken, that this can not be anything else but general legislation; and that if it is submitted to the Senate without a decision by the Chair, I hope that Senators will feel that the rules of this body do amount to something, that they were adopted in order to govern procedure here, and that we might illustrate the capacity of American Senators to observe the rules which they themselves have made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, at the close of the session last evening the Senate was good enough to give unanimous consent that a certain amendment which I offered in regard to the reorganization of the consular service should be considered as pending; and I desire before the time comes for taking the vote to say a few words in regard to that amendment.

It is the intention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], as I understand, to offer a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, looking to the same object, the reorganization of the consular service, as a substitute for my amendment. That substitute, if offered by the Senator from Alabama, with one slight change, I shall most gladly accept. It is an excellent bill, more compact than my amendment, and embodies the same principles. I have no time in the few minutes which remain to argue this case as it ought to be argued, but the report of the Senator from Alabama from the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to the bill seems to me absolutely conclusive on the subject and to contain all the facts which can possibly be desired by anyone.

The all-important point, however, involved in it, to my mind, is that with our consular service open, as it now is, to constant change we never succeed in getting anything like a permanent or an effective service. A consular service is not placed abroad merely to attend to ordinary consular duties; it is placed there to promote the business interests of the United States. We are at a disadvantage with every other civilized nation in the organization of our service. Every four years, at every change of Administration, men who have just begun to learn their duties are thrown out and we are forced to begin all over again with a new set of men unfamiliar with the language of the country to which they are sent, unfamiliar with the business of the country, and with everything to learn.

The object of the substitute to be offered by the Senator from Alabama, the one controlling object, is to endeavor to retain in the consular service of the United States a body of trained men able to promote and push our business interests in every country of the world, and for that purpose to take them out from the wretched condition of being the mere sport of politics.

The state of our consular service, owing to the fact that we do not have trained men in it, has been such that we have lost ground in competition with the other great commercial nations of the world. It is one of the great instrumentalities for promoting our business that we have thus almost wholly laid aside. The business organizations of this country have been aroused to this evil. I have here resolutions from Buffalo and Baltimore, and others have come in from Boston, New York, and Chicago, and from the National Board of Trade, representing the merchants and the business men of this country, and demanding such a change as is here proposed in the consular service. I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD some of these communications as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUFFALO MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE,
Buffalo, N. Y., February 6, 1895.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the members of the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange, held this day, the following resolution was adopted unanimously: Resolved, That the Merchants' Exchange of Buffalo indorses the measure now before Congress—before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate—as an amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and recommend its early passage by both branches of Congress.

Copies of this resolution forwarded to Senators HILL and MURPHY, Jr., and Congressmen LOCKWOOD and DANIELS; also to Senate and House of Representatives.

Yours, faithfully,

WILLIAM THURSTONE, Secretary.

HON. SENATOR HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

BUILDERS' ASSOCIATION EXCHANGE.

Whereas we, the Builders' Association Exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., believing that business interests of these United States demand the best talent obtainable in our consular service, and that the same should be filled by men of ability and efficiency, whose tenure of office should be proficiency, instead of politics; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill introduced by Senator LODGE, providing that the consular service shall be placed under civil-service rules: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we approve of such measure, and recommend its passage by both Houses of Congress.

ROOMS OF THE BOARD OF TRADE,
Baltimore, Md., February 4, 1895.

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, Washington, D. C.:

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore, at regular monthly meeting of this date, with reference to the consular service of the United States:

Whereas the subject of appointments to the consular service of the United States has been under consideration by this board, we desire to record our opinion that the efficiency of this important service would be greatly benefited by an adequate civil service examination before appointment, as well as permanency of tenure and a system of promotion from the less to the more desirable places; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a measure, introduced by Senator LODGE, to provide for the reorganization of the diplomatic and consular service, which fulfills the essential conditions considered necessary to secure efficient and creditable service:

Resolved, That the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore heartily approves of this measure now before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and recommends its early passage by both Houses of Congress.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and that the Senators and Representatives from Maryland be requested to contribute their best endeavors toward the passage of the measure.

Respectfully submitted.

EUGENE LEVERING, President.
H. C. LANDIS, Secretary.

Mr. LODGE. I have briefly stated the purpose of the bill presented by the Senator from Alabama, which he will move as a substitute for my amendment. It has been most carefully considered by him and by the Committee on Foreign Relations, as may be seen by examining the report. I have not time, Mr. President, to enter into the details as I should like to; but the bill meets the great object to be attained. It provides for giving us a permanent service of trained men who, by their training and their permanency in office, will be able to promote the business interests of the United States abroad. It will cure a great evil; it will enable us to get a service such as the United States has never had. That is the object of the bill; and I sincerely hope that the Senate will sustain the Committee on Foreign Relations in adopting it.

Mr. President, I have not spoken during the debate in regard to the Hawaiian cable, and I wish now to say just a single word on that most important matter before I sit down. I desire especially, in reply to something which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has just said, to say that it seems to me that the great purpose of the pending amendment for the construction and laying of a cable to the Sandwich Islands is not to spend $3,000,000 for protecting the commercial interests of Hawaii, but to take the first great step toward a proper protection of the United States of America in the regions lying around and beyond our coast. This is the first great practical step toward the maintenance of the sea power of the United States, of which the Senator from Alabama spoke yesterday.

Mr. President, the whole tendency of modern times is toward consolidation. The day of little states is past. It is the time of great states and great peoples, and that, in my judgment, is a movement which makes for civilization and the advancement of mankind. The great nations of the earth are reaching out to take the waste places that are necessary for their advance and their protection. In this world movement I want my country to play its full part and have its full share. I would not have the United States enter on the acquisition of distant possessions after the fashion of England, but I would have her look well to all her interests outside as well as inside her own borders.

I advocate the building of this cable, as I advocate the building of the Nicaragua Canal, or the taking of other islands on our Atlantic Coast because they are all necessary to the protection and to the development of the United States. In the present day, and historically also, I have always been opposed to the Democratic party and its principles, but that party in the past has had one great principle which I have always believed in, and that is, the extension of the boundaries of the United States wherever it was necessary to do so. Alaska is the one great extension made under Republican auspices; and that was made under the lead of Charles Sumner, Senator from my own State. The other great extensions have been Democratic work. They have been the work of Jefferson, when he made the Louisiana purchase by violating not merely the rules of the Senate, but the Constitution of the United States, as he himself admitted.

We owe to the Democratic party Texas and the extensions to the South. We owe to the Democratic party Florida, and for Florida Andrew Jackson, one of the gods of modern Democracy, fought. Yet to-day we are told by the official leaders of the Democratic party that we must get out of Hawaii and get out of Samoa, and we are going to lose, I fear, the Nicaraguan Canal in a Democratic House of Representatives.

Such have been the principles of the Democratic party in the past in regard to the extension of the United States; they are American principles; and it bodes ill for the Democratic party when its leaders permit those great principles of American development to pass, as they have passed, into the exclusive keeping of their opponents.

Mr. President, I am ready to join with any Senator or with members of any party in the policy which looks to the maintenance of our power beyond our borders by taking possession of islands like Hawaii. England has studded our eastern coast with her naval stations and her forts. We should look to it that we are also protected there. I think that if there is any provincialism in regard to our attitude toward England it is the provincialism which would yield to her when our own interests are at stake. My opinion of England is such that I would imitate her in the conquering and aggressive policy which has carried her flag around the world. That is the spirit of the English-speaking race, and I do not want to see it abandoned by those of that race who dwell within the borders of the United States. It is the American spirit, the spirit which has made this great country what it is, and it can not be curbed or checked either by feeble leadership and mistaken policies at home or by resistance abroad, whether that resistance comes from England or any other foreign country.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire the floor, Mr. President, for just one moment.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] proposes to offer an amendment to the pending bill reforming the consular service. I propose to offer as a substitute for that amendment a bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

I merely wish to explain that the reformation which is to take place, if that bill be adopted, will not take effect until after the expiration of the fiscal year covered by the present bill. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to notice the fact that it does not take effect until the 1st of July, 1896.

I wish to explain further, it will go into the bill in the form of regulations of the consular system of the United States. The different sections instead of being numbered are lettered, and it concludes with a provision that the amendment shall not take effect until the 1st day of July, 1896. This is all I wish to say about it.

Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. GEORGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest that the hour of half past 2 o'clock has arrived, at which, by an order of the Senate made by unanimous consent, debate is to cease and voting is to begin.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that the point of order be disposed of.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present an amendment at the request of the State Department. It is a very small amendment, making a small appropriation to pay debts of the United States aggregating about $500.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let it be considered by unanimous consent as pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the pending question is disposed of, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Mississippi for the purpose of offering the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Before the vote is taken on the pending amendment I ask to incorporate in it the amendment of which I gave notice, to add at the end of the clause the words "said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government." I do not think the words are needed, but I stated that before the vote was taken I should ask that the clause be incorporated. I ask that the amendment may be modified by adding those words.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All right.

Mr. HALE. Then the vote may be taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 2 o'clock having arrived, the amendments are to be voted upon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the absence of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], I desire to submit the point of order raised against the amendment, which rests upon two grounds of objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that debate is not in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not going to debate the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires the Senator from Kentucky to state the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall not indulge in one word of debate.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair state again exactly the order of the Senate under which we are now proceeding?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the RECORD read, showing the unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the message is read I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that at the hour of half past 2 o'clock to-morrow the Senate will, without further debate, proceed to vote upon the then pending amendments to the pending appropriation bill and upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that at half past 2 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed to vote on the amendments to the pending bill and on the bill? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 8, 1896, page 2184.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests the Senator from Kentucky to state the point of order against the proposed amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The point of order raised by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] against the amendment, I understand, rests upon two grounds of objection: First, that it is obnoxious to the first clause of Rule XVI in that it does not increase an appropriation already made, but adds a new item of appropriation which is not needed to carry out any existing law or treaty stipulation, and is not in accord with any act or resolution passed by the Senate at this session, and that it has not been moved by the direction of a standing or select committee nor proposed in pursuance of the estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Secondly, the amendment is obnoxious to the third paragraph of the same rule:

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that one item included in the point of order made by the Senator from Kentucky the Chair is required under the rule to submit to the Senate. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest that by unanimous consent both points be decided by the Senate at once.

Mr. HALE. The Chair has only to submit the question whether the amendment is in order. That includes all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So I say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the proposed amendment in order?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether an agreement of the Senate that at a certain hour the amendment shall be voted upon does not cut off questions of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think that needs any discussion.

Mr. HOAR. I was not present when the understanding was reached.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the point of order pending, I take it the Chair can not cut the Senate off from determining it.

Mr. HOAR. The unanimous agreement of the Senate that the Senate shall vote on the amendment at a particular hour would seem to waive a point of order. However, I am informed by Senators around me that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] reserved this point of order from the unanimous agreement. If that be true, there is no doubt that the point of order must be decided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is certainly true.

Mr. HOAR. Otherwise I should insist that it can not be raised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Here is what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said:

I ask the Senator from Texas if he is not willing to hold his point of order for the present? We shall have some debate on the subject, and, as the Senator from Texas knows, under the rules of the Senate we can get it just as well on the point of order as on the merits of the case; but if the Senator will withhold his point until Senators have had an opportunity to say something upon the proposition I think he will get at his purpose.

Mr. HOAR. It is evident the reservation was made. Otherwise the Senate would have cut off the point of order by the agreement to vote at this hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations in order?

Mr. HALE. On that question let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYLE (when Mr. ALLEN's name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is necessarily absent from the Chamber, and is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. BATE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. CAFFERY (when Mr. BLANCHARD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD] desired me to state that he is detained from the Chamber by sickness, and he asks to be excused for the rest of the day. My colleague is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I understand he would vote "yea" if present, and as I should vote the same way I ask to have my vote recorded. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when Mr. COKE's name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] would vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. HUNTON (when Mr. DANIEL's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when Mr. DOLPH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DOLPH] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. Both Senators are absent.

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has been called from the city to-day. He is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present and voting I should vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] and I vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I should vote "yea" if he were present and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. I do not know how he would vote if present. I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. MILLS's name was called). The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is necessarily absent from the city to-day. I have been requested to announce that he is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is detained from the Chamber by indisposition.

Mr. TURPIE (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called). My colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired on this question with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I should vote "yea" on this question were he present. I am informed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] that his colleague [Mr. SHOUP] would vote the same way, and if I am correct about that I will vote.

Mr. FRYE. Some Senator has already announced a pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

Mr. WHITE. All right; I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WILSON], who is absent on account of illness, is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. MARTIN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], that we transfer our respective pairs so that we can vote.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

Mr. MARTIN. Then the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] will stand paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I am under the impression that he favors the amendment, but not being certain on that point, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote for the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I will state to the Senator from Washington that I announced a few moments ago that my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. HUNTON. Then I withdraw the announcement.

Mr. ALDRICH. Two pairs have been announced with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] announced the pair of my colleague [Mr. DIXON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and then it was announced that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. McLAURIN. I was unable to hear the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. LODGE. It appears that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] has been paired twice, once with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] asked me to take care of his pair.

Mr. LODGE. And he is also paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. McLAURIN. Who paired the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. LODGE. In the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] I have charge of the pairs on the Republican side, and I paired the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. McLAURIN. I had charge of the pair of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and, as I told him I would do, I transferred to him my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. LODGE. Very well. That relieves the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] of his pair, and enables the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] to vote.

Mr. SQUIRE. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with whom is the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] paired, according to his announcement just now?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] now stands paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HUNTON. But with whom did the Senator from Massachusetts announce that the Senator from Nevada was paired?

Mr. LODGE. With the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. HUNTON. What has become of that pair?

Mr. LODGE. The pair of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] was transferred to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN], which sets the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] free and enables him to be paired with the Senator's colleague [Mr. DANIEL], which has been done.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 25; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate decides the amendment to be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GRAY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], with whom I have a general pair, would vote for the amendment, and, as I should do the same, I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when Mr. COKE's name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] to state that if present he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). Under the arrangement of the transfer of pairs made between myself and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. ALDRICH (when Mr. DIXON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DIXON] is detained from the Senate by indisposition. He is paired, under the arrangement which has been stated, with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). As I have heretofore announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). In pursuance of the arrangement between the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and myself, by which we have transferred our respective pairs, I vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. By a transfer of pairs which has been arranged the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] stands paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. Under the circumstances, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when Mr. VOORHEES's name was called). I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but by an arrangement with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] the pair of my colleague has been transferred to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. My colleague [Mr. DOLPH] is detained from the Senate. If he were present he would vote for this amendment. He is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. BATE. I desire to announce that I am paired on this question with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. If he were present and I had a right to vote I should vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I announce again that if my colleague [Mr. WILSON] were here he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 25; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I raise the point of order upon that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend the bill by adding thereto the following:

TO REGULATE THE CONSULAR SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

a. That the consular service of the United States shall be reorganized in the manner hereinafter provided in this act, and the regulations applying to said service shall also include secretaries of embassy and of legation and one attached to each embassy and legation.

b. That the rules and regulations necessary to carry out this reorganization shall be established under the direction of the President of the United States, except as otherwise provided in this act, and that the plan of reorganization shall be completed and such reorganization begun within the period of one year from the date of its passage.

c. That the offices of consular agents shall not be affected by this reorganization.

d. The reorganization shall include all other offices of the consular service. The offices of consular clerk are transformed into vice-consulates of the third class, and shall be held by the consular clerks now in office.

e. That the reorganized service shall consist of the following classes of offices in the diplomatic and consular service: Offices of secretary of embassy of the first class with a salary to each office of $3,500; offices of secretary of embassy of the second class with a salary to each office of $3,000; offices of secretary of legation of the first class with a salary to each office of $2,500; offices of secretary of legation of the second class with a salary to each office of $2,000; offices of consul-general of the first class with a salary to each office of $5,000; offices of consul-general of the second class with a salary to each office of $4,000; offices of consul of the first class with a salary to each office of $3,000; offices of consul of the second class with a salary to each office of $2,000; offices of vice-consul of the first class with a salary to each office of $1,800; offices of vice-consul of the second class with a salary to each office of $1,500; and offices of vice-consul of the third class with a salary to each office of $1,200. All of said offices shall be filled by appointment of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

f. That all notarial services, when certified under the hand and seal of a consular officer, shall be deemed official services, and the fees therefor shall be charged and collected, and accounted for to the Treasury of the United States, except such notarial fees as are received by consular agents, which they shall retain.

g. That no person under the age of 21 years shall be admitted to the consular service after the reorganization herein provided shall have been established, and persons above 18 years may be attaches to embassies and legations.

h. That the present incumbents of the consular offices included in the plan of reorganization provided for in this act shall be gradually recalled within three years from the date of its passage; and they may be readmitted to the class of the service which they now hold, or any other class, on passing the prescribed examination, if they are found to be duly qualified.

i. That the President shall appoint a board of organization, consisting of five members, who are to be the Civil Service Commissioners and two officers of the Department of State. The functions of this board shall be the following: It shall determine the rules for appointing examiners and the regulations as to the time and places for examinations, the method of application for admission and of conducting the examinations for entrance and promotion in the service, the character and scope of the subjects to be submitted as tests of knowledge and efficiency, and all other matters appertaining to the subject of examinations.

k. That the subjects of examination for promotion in the service shall be chiefly, but not exclusively, related to the duties and the work of the consular and diplomatic service, and promotion to consul of the first class or of secretary of embassy shall require the passing an examination in a second foreign language.

l. That candidates who successfully pass the examination for admission to the service shall become eligible for appointment in the lowest class of the service, or to any higher grade for which they are duly qualified, not above that of consul of the first class or secretary of embassy of the second class.

m. That in the procedure of promotion in the consular and diplomatic service under this act no class shall be overstepped, and the minimum length of service in any class before promotion to the next highest shall be six months, and any person in the Department of State in the classified service may be assigned for duty transferred from the Department to the consular service abroad, and vice versa, at the discretion of the President, on passing the regular examination provided for the office to which he is thus transferred.

n. That the subjects of examination for admission to the service shall be:

- First. The history of the most important treaties, from the peace of Westphalia to the present time.
- Second. History of the United States.
- Third. The Constitution of the United States.
- Fourth. International law, public and private.
- Fifth. Elements of commercial law.
- Sixth. Geography (physical, historical, and political).
- Seventh. Arithmetic.
- Eighth. English language.
- Ninth. Foreign languages; the examination to be written or oral, in either German, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, Russian, Chinese, or Japanese.

o. One attaché shall be appointed to each embassy and legation, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, who, after one year's service, and after he has attained the age of 21 years, shall be eligible as a vice-consul or secretary of legation of the second class upon passing an examination, if he is found to be duly qualified.

p. That hereafter all appointments shall be to a designated class, and not to a particular position within that class, and the President may, in his discretion, transfer at any time from place to place diplomatic or consular officers, but without reduction of salary, and at the expense of the Government.

q. That the places at which consulates are established by law are not changed by the provisions of this act; but the President shall arrange the same into classes, to correspond with the requirements of this act, and, from time to time, he may place any consulate in a different class and may temporarily change the location of any consulate to meet the necessities of the public service; but no greater number of consuls of any class shall be appointed than are provided by law.

Sec. — That all laws inconsistent with this act, after this plan of reorganization embraced in the foregoing sections lettered from a to g, inclusive, shall go into effect, are hereby repealed, but this repealing clause shall not take effect until July 1, 1896.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say in regard to the point of order that the bill creates and abolishes consulates; it makes consuls and unmakes them; it regulates their salaries, and lowers and raises their salaries. There is nothing in the amendment I offer which does not pertain to the regulation of consuls.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not object to the amendment upon the ground of irrelevancy, but I hold that it is clearly, and I should think admittedly in every feature, in conflict with the rule. I take it that the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist that the amendment is in order.

Mr. LODGE. I do not agree with the Senator. I think it is clearly germane to the bill if anything is germane to the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. Has the Senator's amendment, as he proposes it, ever been considered by any committee of this body, either select or standing?

Mr. LODGE. It has been considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was never considered by the Committee on Appropriations. Now, I make the point of order—

Mr. LODGE. I think it highly probable, but that does not cut me off from offering the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; but it is general legislation, which the Senator will surely admit. It proposes to reorganize the whole consular service of the United States. There are not five members in this Chamber who have ever read it.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think that general legislation can not be placed upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Unless we are to pursue the course proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which is to disregard every rule. I do say—

Mr. MANDERSON. May I interrupt to say that the Senate has again proven the truth of my assertion—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I agree that it has added another to the list of bad precedents.

Mr. MANDERSON. That the rules of the Senate are made to be broken when the proper occasion arrives.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate is violating another very distinct rule, which is that a question of order is not debatable. I should be glad to remind Senators of that fact.

Mr. HALE. Besides, the agreement is that we shall proceed to vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The question of order is debatable.

Mr. HARRIS. A question of order is not debatable.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I insist that a question of order is debatable in the discretion of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was listening to the suggestions of Senators upon the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. No point of order was reserved against my amendment, as was the case with the committee's amendment. I submit that the agreement of the Senate cuts it off.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendment never was offered except by unanimous consent under the order of the Senate after the committee amendments should be disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. It was pending, and the Senator had the same opportunity to interpose a point of order against it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. After the committee amendment was disposed of and the Senator offered his amendment I made the point of order against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question, Is the proposed amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it. The yeas have it, and the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CALL. I have an amendment to offer which is recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the President of the United States is authorized to employ assistant secretaries of legation who can read and speak the language of the country to which the ambassadors or ministers of the United States are accredited when the public interest requires such employment, and the person so employed shall receive the same compensation as herein provided for the secretaries of legation of the United States to such country.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President—

Mr. ALDRICH and others. Question!

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have nothing to say except that the proposed amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida has been recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has that backing before the Senate. I think I know what the purpose of the Senator from Florida is, and I am thoroughly in sympathy with him. It does create one new office in the shape of an assistant secretary of legation. I am not disposed to antagonize it.

Mr. CALL. I am reliably informed that at one of the legations where very important negotiations are pending there is no one connected with the legation who can speak the language, and that important negotiations are conducted by the subjects of the foreign Government, none of the American legation being able to speak the language.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The question being put, a division was called for; and the yeas were 13.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer an amendment at the suggestion of the State Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated at the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 16, insert:

To pay for expenses incurred by order of the Department of State, at the request of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate, in making investigation into the consumption and production of cotton in their respective consular districts, as follows:

J. W. Pepper, United States consul at Milan	$9.65
R. W. Hemick, United States consul at Geneva	24.12
Alton Angier, United States consul at Rheims	38.70
A. H. Lowrie, commercial agent at Freiburg	10.75
A. J. Bensusan, vice-consul at Cadiz	5.00

And to Thomas E. Heenan, consul at Odessa, for loss of salary occasioned by his absence, under orders of the State Department, in investigating cotton culture in Asiatic Russia, his report thereon having been furnished by the said Department to said committee, viz, $326.90.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. On page 3, lines 8 and 9, I move to strike out "six" and "thirteen" before "thousand" and insert "seven" and "fifteen." The amendment raises the salary of the ministers plenipotentiary in Portugal and Switzerland $1,000, making it $7,500 instead of $6,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 3, strike out the word "six" before "thousand" and insert "seven," and in line 9 strike out the word "thirteen" before "thousand" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Switzerland and Portugal, at $7,500 each, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the last amendment but one was adopted, the amendment placing certain deficiencies upon the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 16, insert:

To pay for expenses incurred by order of the Department of State at the request of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate in making investigation into the consumption and production of cotton in their respective consular districts, as follows:

J. W. Pepper, United States consul at Milan	$9.65
R. W. Hemick, United States consul at Geneva	24.12
Alton Angier, United States consul at Rheims	38.70
A. H. Lowrie, commercial agent at Freiburg	10.75
A. J. Bensusan, vice-consul at Cadiz	5.00

And to Thomas E. Heenan, consul at Odessa, for loss of salary occasioned by his absence, under orders of the State Department, in investigating cotton culture in Asiatic Russia, his report thereon having been furnished by the said Department to said committee, viz, $326.90.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This item belongs properly on the deficiency bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. If there is any special reason why it should go on this bill instead of the deficiency bill—

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is none. It belongs properly on the deficiency bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The money is due; there is no question of that. It would be more proper to put it on the deficiency bill than on the diplomatic and consular bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator like to put amendments of this kind on the pending bill instead of on the deficiency bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; upon the contrary, I think the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire is very proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. CALL. If there be no objection, I ask that in lieu of the amendment which I withdrew, authorizing the appointment by the President of an assistant secretary of legation at any foreign embassy where no member of the legation can speak the language of the country, that I be allowed to move that the President may, if in his judgment necessary, appoint an assistant secretary of legation at Berlin who can speak and write the German language. I do it upon the ground that important negotiations are now pending with that country in respect to the imports and exports of the two countries, and I am informed that there is not a single member of the legation there who is familiar with the German language or with the habits and business of that country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MANDERSON. Are we to understand that at the Berlin legation there is no one who can speak the German language attached to the legation?

Mr. CALL. I am informed by Mr. Charles Allen, an ex-member of Congress from New York, a gentleman of very high standing and entire reliability, in a letter from him from that place, that such is the fact.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the order of the Senate debate is not in order. I ask that the rule may be enforced in that respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate was proceeding by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HALE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears none. Will the Senator from Florida indicate the point where his amendment is to come in?

Mr. CALL. In the memorandum I sent to the Secretary's desk—

Mr. BLACKBURN. What is the amendment the Senator proposes?

Mr. CALL. An assistant secretary of legation at Berlin to be employed—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend. The Chair asked if there was objection, and the Chair was unable to hear any response, owing to the confusion in the Chamber. The Chair will again inquire if there is objection to the request of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ALDRICH. I objected to any discussion of the question. I suggest that this matter be taken up by the committee. This is not the place to consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island object to the request?

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Without any idea of going on with the bill at this time I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

Mr. HALE. The Senator wants to get it before the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to get the bill before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not ask for the reading of the bill at this time. I want the record to show that by the action of the Senate in taking up the Post-Office appropriation bill the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, coming over from a previous day, is not to be displaced and sent to the Calendar, but only temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

LOUISIANA OR HONDURAS LOTTERY COMPANY.

Mr. CALL. I offer a resolution which has been heretofore read. I ask that it may be printed and laid on the table until Monday morning.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That a special committee be, and is hereby, created, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting to the Senate whether the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company has been established and is now operating in the United States and is engaged in business herein and in the use of the mails and of the interstate-commerce corporations or companies in violation of the laws of the United States. The committee shall also inquire whether the Louisiana or Honduras Company, its owners, managers, directors, or agents have entered into a combination with any person or persons or corporations for the control of the elections of the members of Congress and whether it owns, either directly or indirectly, any interest in newspapers published in the United States and whether they, or any of them, have contributed money for the establishment of newspapers or for subsidizing newspapers.

The committee shall also inquire and report what sums of money, if any, have been expended by the Louisiana or Honduras Lottery Company to influence the legislation of Congress, or by any person or corporation in any way connected, combined with, or interested in such lottery company, and by what persons such money was expended, and by what persons it was contributed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR STOCKBRIDGE.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit for adoption the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, and they were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, the late Francis B. Stockbridge occupied what may well be called Michigan's historic seat in this body. In 1835 the people of Michigan, claiming their rights under the ordinance of 1787, organized and put into full operation a State government and sent to this body Lucius Lyon and John Norvell. For nearly fourteen months these two Senators-elect were kept in the Senate corridors, until the boundary dispute between the young State and Congress was settled as such disputes are usually settled—in favor of the stronger party.

On taking his seat in the Senate, January 26, 1837, Mr. Lyon was assigned by lot to the first class; and after serving in the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Congresses he gave way for Augustus S. Porter, elected by the Whigs, who had an accidental majority in the legislature of 1840. Five years later Lewis Cass entered the Senate. Among all the Commonwealth builders of the Northwest, Cass was the most distinguished. By just and honorable treaties he had obtained the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands that comprise not less than one-fourth of the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan; and as Secretary of War and minister to France under Jackson he had won fame at home and abroad.

During the twelve most eventful years when the Constitution was on trial he stood with Webster and Clay as its defender; and during that period was the Presidential candidate of his party. It was during his second term in the Senate that the movement to resist the extension of slavery north and west took definite shape; and nowhere was this movement stronger than in Michigan, where it found expression in the first Republican State convention, held at Jackson on the 6th day of July, 1854. Of the members of that convention Chandler, Bingham, Jacob M. Howard, and Christiancy afterwards were elected to this body. It is not necessary for me to do more than to advert to the fact that for eighteen of the most trying years of this Government Zachariah Chandler represented in the Senate the uncompromising loyalty of Michigan. Sustained and supported by his State, he was an aggressive leader; and after a brief intermission he was elected to this body for a fourth time, and he died in the harness.

It was during the years immediately following the war of the rebellion that the vast natural resources of Michigan became available. These conquests over nature called into prominence a new class of men. The State of Michigan held in trust for the whole country a series of waterways and a wealth of iron, copper, timber, and salt which needed but the fostering care of the Government to supply the people of this country with cheap transportation and cheap raw materials. As Cass represented Michigan's devotion to the Constitution, and as Chandler represented Michigan's intense loyalty to the Union, just as truly, though less conspicuously, Mr. Stockbridge represented the commercial enterprise of his State.

Like his illustrious predecessors, Mr. Stockbridge was a native of New England, having been born in the town of Bath, Me., on the 9th day of April, 1826. Then, as now, the first ambition of a

New England boy was to establish himself in Boston; and thither young Stockbridge went at the age of 17. Equipped with an excellent common-school education, for four years he received a solid business training in one of those large wholesale houses which were at that time centers of trade for the entire country. But when the smell of pine is an inheritance it rarely happens that one loses his inborn love of the woods and its product, and it was altogether natural that on attaining his majority the young man should seek the bustling young city of Chicago as the scene of his activities and the lumber trade as a means of building his fortune.

In 1851 his outlying interests drew him to the source of his supplies in Allegan County, Mich.; and a few years later he made his home in Kalamazoo, where he became a very considerable part of Michigan's "big village," as the place was known until a few years ago, when it became a beautiful city. As a member of the staff of the great war governor, Austin Blair, Mr. Stockbridge acquired the honorary title of colonel, by which he was familiarly known, probably because the rank served well to record a sort of half paternal, half friendly relation in which he stood to the people among whom he had made his home.

In 1869 he represented his district in the State legislature, and two years later he received the not unusual promotion to the State senate. Careful, conscientious, industrious, and clear-sighted in all his legislative work, his genial nature and his readiness to assist in every good work made friends for him all over the State, and but for his own expressed wish undoubtedly he would have been called to the executive chair. Instead he came to this body in 1887 as the especial representative of rapidly developing and vigorous western Michigan.

What battles he fought against circumstances we do not know. In the end he conquered and became what the world terms a "successful" man, with large interests not only in his own State, but also in the South and the far West. Liberal by nature, he used his wealth to build up the industries of his town and to establish, strengthen, and maintain its charities. Happy in his domestic life, he left a widow to mourn the loss of a devoted husband, and many relatives to regret keenly the taking away of one who had been as a father to them.

Of his work in the Senate it is unnecessary to speak here further than to say that when his first term was drawing to an end the voice of Michigan, as interpreted with a very large degree of unanimity by the legislature, was for his return. He had satisfied the people of his State. We who were accustomed to his presence in this Chamber can testify to his devotion to the interests of his country, his State, and his party; and when on April 30 of last year death came upon him suddenly as he was caring for another it was the universal feeling here that a wise counselor and a devoted friend had been taken from us.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, Maine never loses interest in her sons who leave to engage in life's conflicts elsewhere, and she always rejoices in their successes. She is proud of the boy who left as a sailor before the mast, then became one of the heaviest ship-owners on the Pacific Slope, then governor of California, and now a United States Senator; and of another born on one of her hill-side farms, educated in her public schools, graduated from one of her colleges, who then went West, became a successful business man, then represented his adopted State of Minnesota in the national House of Representatives, and now is a colleague of ours in this Chamber. These men, and such as these, are a State's jewels.

I think, Mr. President, that Maine equips her children fairly well for such contests. She has always been a border State, almost entirely surrounded by ocean and by a foreign land. She is located in the extreme northeast of the Republic. Her early history was one of cruel war. The price of a livelihood was always a struggle; if sought offshore, a ceaseless contest with wind and wave and rock-bound coast; if inshore, then the conquering of the primeval forest and the revealing of land which never laughed with a harvest when tickled with a hoe, but responded only to hard work. Her climate is severe, her winter long and cold.

Mr. President, these conditions, seemingly unfavorable, I think combine to make her people self-reliant, courageous, patient, economical, thrifty—legacies to her children of infinitely greater value than ease, luxury, and money.

Senator Stockbridge, to whose memory we are to-day paying tribute, was one of these boys. He was born in the shipbuilding town of Bath, of good old New England stock on both sides. His father was an eminent physician in that section of the State, but of course in those days with a small income, and could give his son only the advantages of the common schools, with a term or two in an academy.

Young Stockbridge, at the age of 16 years, self-reliant, started out for himself; went to Boston in a store. He was adventurous and bold and soon found that his counter was altogether too narrow for him. He went West, located in Chicago, then far distant from the home of his birth. He engaged in the lumber business, it may be, inspired to it by the whispering pines of his own native State.

He was sagacious and cool, but bold. In all of his proposed investments he was his own explorer, his own counselor, depending entirely on his own judgment. He regarded contracts, whether written or oral, as sacred, and observed them with the strictest fidelity both in letter and in spirit. He was a strictly honest man, and was not long in gaining a reputation which insured to him all the credit he needed for his extensive operations.

He was a man thoroughly familiar with men. Having been poor himself, he sympathized with the poor, gained the entire confidence and esteem of all his employees, always treated them not only justly, but generously; so his extensive operations were never crippled by strikes nor injurious combinations. It was not long before he became one of the great lumber kings in the West and had acquired wealth.

Mr. President, I have observed too frequently, when men seek riches, they are apt to acquire a love for money itself—one of the most debasing of the passions of the human heart. Not so Mr. Stockbridge. He seemed to think he was a steward for his Lord, and that the property he acquired was a trust to be administered by him faithfully for the good of his fellows.

He was exceedingly generous and charitable, as large gifts to benevolent, literary, and religious associations and institutions testify, and he indulged in an immense amount of that giving of which the left hand knows nothing of what the right hand is doing. It is known in Kalamazoo that on Christmas and on Thanksgiving days no table of the poor man was left without a supply equal to that on his own, and that he did it.

In this charitable career he fortunately always had the sympathy and the loving cooperation of his wife, who, while it may be, was more impulsive than he, was equally generous.

I have said that Mr. Stockbridge's early education was limited, but he inherited an intense love for books, was a constant student even when business cares almost overwhelmed him, was familiar with the current literature and well read in the classics. He had one of the finest and best selected private libraries I have ever seen of books—not ornaments, not furniture, but familiar friends. He was fond of art, and lavishly expended his money for choice pictures, fine statuary, and rare bric-a-brac. So it happened that in the latter years of his life neither in conversation nor in public speech nor in letters could one discover the school deprivations of his boyhood.

He was ambitious. Why not? If all men were content, what would this world be? He had acquired wealth; he had leisure; he knew that he had the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens; he knew equally well that he could render his country and State valuable service, so sought, not unduly, not improperly, public position. His people were ever ready to gratify him. He served in both houses of his State legislature, and then twice they elected him to the highest office in their gift, that of United States Senator.

As a Senator, we can all bear witness to his fidelity, to his constant attention to the duties of the great office. On committee his services were regarded as invaluable on account of his large experience in affairs, his careful attention to whatever was committed to him, and his untiring energy. He seldom indulged in debate, but when he did he attracted attention by the dignity and the courtesy of his bearing, by the closeness of his logic, by the clearness of his statements.

He was princely in his hospitalities. He had an elegant home in Kalamazoo, surrounded by beautiful and extensive grounds, and the doors were always wide open. I have had the pleasure to be his guest, and the moment I entered the house found myself invested with everything that heart could desire—horses and carriages and servants, and everything that money could buy were mine. Mrs. Stockbridge was a charming hostess, and seemed to take more pleasure in the bestowing than even the guest did in the receiving.

Mr. Stockbridge was a man of strong convictions and fixed principles, to some seeming almost stern and Puritanic in his fidelity to them. His stand on temperance may illustrate this. He was a total abstainer from intoxicants and never would allow even wine in his house. Here in Washington he kept open house, as he did at home, and was lavish in his hospitality. He was giving frequent dinner parties, and I presume every Senator in my hearing has been his guest. His table was always splendidly equipped, furnished with everything to tempt the appetite and delight the taste, but never any wine. I have no hesitation in saying that no Senator here, whatever his own private tastes and wishes might be, left that hospitable table without a new and a profounder respect for the Senator who dared disregard the requirements of custom and of fashion in devotion to principle.

Mr. President, Mr. Stockbridge was in every respect a strong man, a warm friend, a good neighbor, a patriotic citizen, a devoted husband; and he was more and better than all these—he was an earnest, faithful Christian, a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, active in all of its charities, faithful to all of its obligations.

It is well with him. He has only passed through the open door of his Father's house, and has entered now upon life eternal, with all its wealth of possibilities.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, Mr. Stockbridge and I were warm personal friends, and when the sad intelligence came to us that he was no more I felt that I had sustained a personal loss which could never be repaired, for at any time of life one does not easily make new friendships.

During the whole of Mr. Stockbridge's service in this body I believe it was my fortune to be associated with him on the Committee on Indian Affairs. In the discharge of the duties devolving on us in that committee we were often associated together on subcommittees in the investigation of questions referred to us. In this way I came to know him intimately and to learn his great worth and merit, and I hazard nothing in saying that no man of correct feelings could know him well and not be his friend.

One of the most striking traits in his character was his fine, well-balanced, sound judgment. Never swayed by passion or prejudice, he held always a just balance in weighing the merits and demerits of any question; and when he had the opportunity for a full investigation of any matter his judgment upon it would command the respect of all who knew him.

This quality was manifest in everything connected with him. His marked personal success in every walk of life in which he entered, the high position he held among those with whom he was associated in business and politics in his own State and here all bore evidence of it.

Perhaps his most lovable trait, that which attached his friends to him most warmly, was his own generous feelings and his broad charity. He judged no one harshly, never attributed unworthy motives to others, and never suspected others of sinister purposes, but always put that construction upon the conduct of others which most accorded with his own high standard of proper conduct.

While he was distinguished for his modesty he was at the same time possessed of great force of character, exhibiting in himself such a happy blending of modest worth and self-reliant manliness as forms the finest type of our Western manhood.

Of the antagonisms which rude self-assertion is always sure to arouse he knew absolutely nothing.

His courteous bearing toward and gentle regard for the rights and feelings of others never for a moment forsook him, and carried the conviction to all who came in contact with him that he was in the finest sense of the word a gentleman.

I knew him in his home, and it was there that he appeared to the best advantage and in the most favorable light. No one who ever came within the circle of the personal friends and congenial spirits drawn together by his discriminating friendship could forget the charm of his hospitable home, and I am sure that no one ever went out from under his roof without feeling that his was a home of unusual loveliness, the crowning glory of which was the beautiful life of the husband and wife who made it what it was.

Mr. President, until the last man who knew and served with Mr. Stockbridge shall have passed out from this body he will not be forgotten here. No seat will again be marked as his; his name will not again appear upon our official rolls; but his memory will linger like a sweet incense here where his presence brought only pleasure.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I am sure the Commonwealth of Illinois, which I have the honor in part to represent in this Senate, would not have me remain silent on this sad occasion.

Mr. President, as has been said by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], the colleague of the late Senator Stockbridge, whom we mourn, the deceased had entered upon his second term of service in the Senate, and to those of us who only knew him as we ordinarily know each other here there seemed many years of usefulness before him. Mr. Stockbridge, when he determined to leave Boston to find a new home, located for a time in Chicago. He was soon attracted, however, by business ventures, into the State of Michigan, where he made his permanent home, his fortune, and his fame.

His life was a career of honor and great usefulness in that Commonwealth, and he endeared himself to all the people. In the Senate he won the esteem of all and the affection of those here who most associated with him and knew him best. He was a man of strong sense, always quickly discerning the right, never swerving from it, and was a most excellent and conscientious legislator. He performed his duty under all circumstances, and met the highest expectations of the people on all occasions. Few men in the Senate have more completely won the confidence and esteem of the members of this body than did Senator Stockbridge.

He was a good man in the quiet walks of life, as he was a faithful servant of the people in his public career. He was a man of business. He not only responded to the calls of his people to perform public duty, but he conducted large business operations as farmer, stock raiser, and land and lumber trader. He not only sought as a legislator to build up and sustain the policy which he believed to be for the best interests of the great body of the American people, but he sought also to develop by business enterprises the resources and wealth of this country.

Mr. President, men are in a large degree what they make themselves. I recognize the fact that geniuses and poets are born, not made; but after all, the man who starts out with a determination that he will be a man among men, that he will carve out his own fortune, that he will make the world better for his living in it, and labors to that end, is the best type of manhood and leaves behind him more to be gratefully remembered by the people.

Mr. Stockbridge made no pretensions to genius or to oratory, but he was an honest man with more than ordinary ability, and was always for the right. During all his manhood life, private and public, the people with whom he lived and whom he served appreciated and trusted him.

Mr. President, it was my good fortune to become somewhat intimately acquainted with the deceased after he entered this Chamber, and the longer I knew him and the more closely I became associated with him the more highly I regarded him. He had no concealments, but was direct and single-minded, always resting upon the truth.

He was a patriotic man; he loved our free institutions; he loved liberty, and was proud of the glory of our country and its position among the nations. He was a Republican and believed in the principles and policies of the party, but he was never offensive in presenting his views in the presence of men who did not agree with him.

Mr. President, he is gone, and his place has been filled in this body. The same experience must come to us all. I well remember his stalwart form and his vigorous bearing when he first entered the Senate; and I also sadly remember the many strong men who have been Senators upon this floor during the twelve years of my membership, and have, like him, surrendered to the great destroyer. Humanity is forever subject to the great law of change. From birth to our final breath we pass constantly on and on, never halting till the silent shore is reached. Senators may ordain, and the people may obey their ordinances, but death shows no favors to the tribunes.

The departed Senator began his business career in the great metropolis of my State, Chicago, and he laid down his life in that city, surrounded in his last hours by his relatives and friends. I accompanied his remains to their last resting place in the city of his home, where many thousands of his neighbors and friends, with saddened hearts, followed all that was left of Francis B. Stockbridge to the grave.

I pay my last tribute of respect to his memory. Peace be to his ashes.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, while I can not hope to add anything to the just meed of praise bestowed upon the life and character of the late Senator Stockbridge, yet I should do violence to my own feelings and sense of duty to permit the occasion to pass without expressing and placing on record my high appreciation of his character as a man and his worth as a citizen. Knowing him as I did in private life, and of his many admirable qualities, I am not surprised that Senators who were associated with him in this body even for a brief period should be able to bear testimony to his personal worth, and his fidelity, integrity, and rare good judgment in the discharge of public duties, and his unswerving devotion to the interests of his State and the country.

These encomiums by his colleagues will be exceedingly gratifying to the people of Michigan, who twice honored him with a seat in the Senate and who to-day hold his memory in the highest regard and deeply deplore that his life could not have been spared to the full completion of the term to which their partiality had called him. In forming an estimate of his character your judgment, of necessity, is based almost entirely upon your association with him in his official capacity as a member of the Senate. But there was another side to his nature none the less attractive and praiseworthy.

He was known to you as a Senator. I knew him as a neighbor and friend, with whom it was my good fortune, during the last twenty years of his life, to be in almost daily intercourse, thus affording an opportunity of discerning those admirable qualities of head and heart which attached him to his friends and secured for him an enduring place in the affectionate regard of his fellow-citizens. During this period of nearly a quarter of a century we were residents of the same city and much of the time of the same ward, and were naturally thrown together in social intercourse, freed from the restraints of public life which sometimes obscure for the moment the dominating characteristics of the human heart. It was under such circumstances and amid such surroundings I came to know Senator Stockbridge, and became attached to him as a neighbor and friend.

In looking back on the years of that acquaintance and summing up its incidents, if called upon to single out the chief and controlling elements of his character, those which molded and dominated his whole life and made it a marvelous success, I should have no hesitancy in declaring they were his wonderful self-reliance and superb courage. He had confidence in his own judgment and the courage to execute what his judgment approved. This was exemplified in early life. Born at Bath, Me., in 1826, in 1842, when but 16 years of age, he determined to take upon himself, in a measure at least, the duties and responsibilities of life, and to that end made his first venture as a clerk in a mercantile establishment in the city of Boston, where for a period of five years he devoted himself to the duties of his position, acquiring his first practical lessons in business affairs and developing those qualities of integrity and self-reliance which marked the whole course of his future life. It was during this experimental period, undoubtedly, that he became conscious of his natural bent of mind and aptitude for business pursuits, and having made the discovery, without attempting to force his life into unnatural channels, so frequently attempted and so frequently disastrous, he had the rare good judgment to enter the open way pointed out by his inclinations and dedicated his life to an active business career.

Having thus determined his course, he entered upon it with the ardor and enthusiasm of youth and pursued it with unflinching energy to the end, permitting no obstacle, however formidable, to impede his progress or turn him aside from the consummation of his supreme purpose.

His resolution formed, it only remained for him to determine the character of his business and the field of his operations. With that sagacity and foresight for which he was noted, he saw in the forests of the Northwest the possibility of a great business future, and accordingly in 1847, at the age of 21, he took up his residence as a lumber merchant in the city of Chicago, a place then of less than 10,000 inhabitants, where he laid the foundations of his future success. From a lumber merchant he became a lumber manufacturer, and pushing his way into the forests of Michigan and the Northwest, erecting mills and establishing camps, he moved forward in the course of his destiny until he was recognized as among the foremost business men of the Northwest.

In 1853 he became a citizen of Michigan and retained his residence in the State during the remainder of his life. Here he enlarged his business, became connected with other and important industrial enterprises until, at the time of his death, his business interests, varied and complicated, extended beyond the limits of the State from the extreme south to the distant forests of the Pacific Slope. This great business success was due in a large measure, if not chiefly, to those characteristics of which I spoke in the beginning, and which he possessed in a preeminent degree—self-reliance and courage. These were the weapons with which, single-handed and alone, he made his way in the industrial world.

But this tribute would be incomplete without mentioning another phase of his character, as pronounced as those to which I have already referred, namely, his kindness and boundless generosity. His liberality knew no bounds but the measure of his ability, and his charity no restraint but the limit of its necessities. It was this that greatly endeared him to his people. Reserved, yet companionable; dignified, yet without ostentation, he freely mingled with all the people in their everyday life, acquainting himself with their conditions and ministering to their necessities. Possessed of an abundant fortune, which sometimes dries up the "milk of human kindness," he bestowed private charity with a lavish hand, while his donations to public objects were on the broadest scale of liberality. Church and school, benevolent and charitable institutions alike were the recipients of his favor. The city of his home is to-day adorned with enduring monuments to his public benefactions.

But while engaged in large business enterprises, demanding his chief thought and attention, he was not so wholly engrossed by these as to be entirely indifferent to passing political events. In these he took a lively interest, and early identifying himself with the Republican party, he became an active and influential member of that organization, adhering to its varying fortunes with characteristic steadfastness. Here, as in the business world, he quickly secured the confidence of the people and was twice elected to the State legislature, serving first in the house and subsequently in the senate, where, in the discharge of his legislative duties, he displayed the same rare good judgment which had always characterized his business life. Though a man of practical affairs, yet in his capacity as a legislator he rendered great service to his party and the State; and after all, the highest statesmanship is only the application of sound business principles to governmental affairs.

That business knowledge he possessed in a remarkable degree, and it must have advantaged him and the Senate while here in the transaction of the public duties incident to this Chamber. His death is a loss to the Senate, the State, and the country.

It is a consolation, however, to know that though his life fell short of the allotted span, yet it was full of good deeds worthy of remembrance and emulation.

In his unexpected death we have a fresh reminder of the brevity and uncertainty of this earthly existence.

I can not refrain from one single reflection. Nothing has so impressed me with the transitory character of human life as the contemplation of the changes wrought in the personnel of the National Congress within the brief period since I first became a member of the House of Representatives in 1873. The intervening years have served to remove from these Halls most of the participants in the legislative duties of twenty-two years ago. Out of a membership in the House at that time of something over 300, the names of only five of that number are borne on its roll of present membership.

Call to-day in this Chamber the names of the Senators which constituted the members of the Senate in 1873, and only eight out of seventy-two would make response. Some have passed to other spheres of human action, while many sleep with the fathers. How rapidly the scenes change! How startling the transformations! The actors of to-day sleep in the graves of to-morrow, while the drama moves on with unabated interest. When contemplating these things we call to mind the words of one who, standing in a gallery whose walls were hung with the portraits of departed generations, exclaimed, "These are the realities, we the shadows!"

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 11, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 9, 1895.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES FOR COLLEGE ENDOWMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of disbursements made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, under the act endowing colleges, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Education.

IMPROVEMENT OF CARVERS HARBOR, MAINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting preliminary examination, and report by the Chief of Engineers, of the improvements of Carvers Harbor, Maine; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

KANSAS CITY, OKLAHOMA AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8165) authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate, which are mainly formal.

The Senate amendments were read and concurred in.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through Indian reservations in the Indian Territory, and the Territories of Oklahoma and New Mexico, and for other purposes."

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHICAGO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 397) to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill., with Senate amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Senate amendments be read, with a view to moving concurrence.

Mr. SAYERS. What are the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments will be read.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. SAYERS. This is quite an important bill, and I ask the gentleman from Alabama having it in charge to allow it to lay over until Monday so that I may examine it. It is possible that I will offer no objection whatever to the Senate amendments; but I desire an opportunity of examining them, and ask that the bill lay on the table for the time being.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I, of course, feel very much inclined to oblige the gentleman from Texas in this matter, but we have a very short time in which to act on matters of this kind. This is an important question and ought to be promptly attended to. The bill does not carry any appropriation.

Mr. SAYERS. But it fixes the liability of the Government at $4,000,000 in the future.

The request I make, Mr. Speaker, is to let it lie over until Monday. I shall not offer any captious objection if I find on examination that the bill is right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I will let it go over until Monday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will lie on the table for the present.

There was no objection.

DANIEL C. RODMAN, DECEASED.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 914) for the relief of the representatives of Daniel C. Rodman, deceased, and others.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to give notice that after one recognition on each side I shall have to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel C. Rodman, Ossian B. Hart, Charles Slager, Calvin L. Robinson, Ozias Buddington, and Joseph R. Richard, sureties upon the bond of Ozias Morgan, given as security for the faithful performance by said Ozias Morgan of his duties as receiver of public moneys and disbursing agent of the United States land office at Tallahassee, Fla., from 1866 to 1870, and their heirs and legal representatives, be, and they are hereby, released and discharged of and from all and every obligation and liability whatsoever on account of said bond.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman make a statement as to the object of the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. If I may be permitted to do so, Mr. Speaker, I will make a brief statement covering the purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will have that permission.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, the parties mentioned here were the sureties on the bond of Ozias Morgan, who was a receiver of public moneys in Florida some thirty years ago, and on a final settlement of the affairs of the receiver with the Government it was ascertained that there was some slight deficit in his account. Suits were instituted promptly against five of the six sureties to recover the amount of the bond. One of the suits was compromised. In the case of the others the defendants were dead or were reported as absolutely insolvent and unable to satisfy the judgment. The sixth surety, soon after signing the bond, returned to Connecticut and lived there five or six years after the suits were decided against the other sureties. He received no notice of the default of the receiver, nor any notice that the suit was instituted against his fellow-bondsmen during his lifetime. Some years after his death, however, a demand was made upon his estate for the amount of the bond—

Mr. SAYERS. Does the bill propose to relieve the surety of the amount of the liability on the official bond of the receiver?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. That is what the bill proposes.

Mr. SAYERS. When was the original suit instituted against the other sureties?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. In 1875. There was no suit, however, instituted against the widow of Daniel C. Rodman, and the Comptroller of the Treasury recommends that there be a dismissal of the demand against her.

Mr. SAYERS. How much is involved?

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. The whole amount of the deficit of the receiver was in the neighborhood of $1,800 or $1,900.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, and, being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MINES ON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7148) to authorize the exploration and purchase of mines within the boundaries of private land claims.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a far-reaching bill, and I should like to have some explanation of it before unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from New Mexico will be permitted to make a short explanation.

Mr. JOSEPH. Let the communication of the Secretary of the Interior, which is a part of the report, be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose there is a report accompanying this bill. Let us have the report read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report can be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

During the reading,

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE said: Mr. Speaker, I do not see any reason for taking up any more time in this matter. I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call for the regular order.

HEIRS OF THE LATE MRS. CATHERINE T. CULVER.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged motion, to reconsider a vote of concurrence in a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up a privileged motion, to reconsider a vote of concurrence in a Senate amendment to a House bill. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, and then the Chair will state the parliamentary condition.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 664) for the relief of the heirs of the late Mrs. Catherine T. Culver.

In line 6, strike out the words "eight hundred and forty" and insert the words "five hundred;" so that it will read: "$500."

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill with a Senate amendment. The Senate amended the bill by reducing the amount from $840 to $500, and the House concurred in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Washington entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the Senate amendment, and he now calls up his motion to reconsider.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will make a brief statement if any gentleman desires it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to make a brief explanation.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This work was done by the late Mrs. Culver while Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, was the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in this House. The work was done for that committee. We find that the work could not be performed for a less sum to-day than it was done for more than seventeen years ago. We are not asking for any interest on this sum of $840, which is what would be required for the performance of the work at this time. These facts were not presented perhaps as they should have been before the same committee when the matter was considered, and the consequence was that the amount was cut down from $840 to $500. I am informed that if we non-concur in this amendment it will be entirely agreeable to the gentlemen at the other end who insisted on the cutting down of the amount. The amount of $840, after all these years, is to be paid to the heirs at law of the late Mrs. Culver, who performed this work.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain why the money was not paid at the time?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No appropriation was made at the time. This action has been recommended in half a dozen Congresses at least, but it never reached a stage when it could be considered in the House until during the last session.

Mr. HOLMAN. The services were rendered without authority, were they not?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir; the services were not rendered without authority. The whole subject was up when this bill passed this House. The services were rendered to this Government, and the result of her work was published and accepted by the Government, and it is a valuable work and has been in use ever since its publication.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington moves that the House disagree to the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RICHARDS, Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia, and Mr. KIEFER.

DEFICIENCIES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the District of Columbia submitted by the Commissioners; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] desires a moment or two in which to make a personal explanation. Without objection, that will be allowed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is well known to the members of this House that this country has been visited by a missionary. His name is the Hon. W. Randall Creamer. He came from Great Britain, a country that is so eminently peaceful, so averse to encroachments, territorial or otherwise; so moderate in its pretensions, so free from aggrandizement, so yielding in its relations with foreign powers. His mission was a mission of peace. It was to secure a treaty between the United States and Great Britain by which all differences between them should be decided by arbitration. It had no relation to any of the other nations.

He came on the Teutonic. He arrived here on the 16th of January, I think. He came fortified and accredited with a petition signed by 354 members of the British Parliament, addressed to the President and to Congress. He made his way to Washington. He solicited an opportunity to be heard before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives. Every member of that committee, I believe, is in favor of the nations adjusting their differences by pacific means, and of resorting to the arbitration of war only when that is the last resort. The request of Mr. Creamer was unanimously granted by that committee. He was heard. On rising to address the committee, he invited any member of the committee to ask him questions. Availing myself of that invitation, I asked him a few questions. The cross-examination was not severe or lengthy; but the missionary somehow seemed to lose his temper. I did not know it at the time, but after going away from the committee room he charged me, in high quarters, with having insulted him when before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This charge he made not only to members of this House, but to others.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was entirely mistaken. I was guilty of no such offense. Such an offense as that would be a breach, as it seems to me, of the privileges of members of the House. To insult a member of the British Parliament when he was being heard before a committee of this House would be conduct unbecoming a gentleman as well as unbecoming a member of Congress. I have written him a letter in which I have informed him that I did not insult him and had no such intent. As that letter tells the whole story, I will ask the Clerk to read it, and I leave the matter there.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I have learned with surprise and sincere regret that you have charged me with insulting you on the occasion of your appearance before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives on Thursday, the 24th ultimo. With a view of disabusing your mind and relieving myself from so unjust a charge let me recapitulate for you the circumstances of your appearance before that committee.

You asked an opportunity to be heard on the subject of an international treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States which shall bind the two nations to refer to arbitration disputes which diplomacy fails to adjust. In common with the other members of the committee I accepted the term "international" in its broad sense and gladly voted to grant you the privilege you requested, having the highest respect for the British Parliament, from which you came accredited to our committee. At the opening of your remarks you stated that you would prefer to answer questions that might suggest themselves to any member of the committee rather than to make a formal speech. Accepting the suggestion so courteously given, I ventured to ask you several questions. The first was, "Is the British Government satisfied with the result of the Bering Sea arbitration?" You answered this in the affirmative. I then asked, "Is it the policy of the British Government to preserve the herds of fur-bearing seals in Bering Sea and the North Pacific Ocean, or destroy them?" You hesitated, and finally said that you did not know. I then asked you, "Assuming that both nations desired the preservation of the seals, do you not think that that arbitration resulted in a signal failure?" To this you made no direct answer. Other questions were asked by different members of the committee as well as myself.

For instance, you were asked if "the British Government is willing to arbitrate its differences with the weaker powers; whether England will agree to arbitrate her differences with the Republic of Venezuela as well as with the stronger nations?" To this you did not give a satisfactory reply, very much to my regret. Hoping to draw from you a statement which would have great weight as coming from one so highly commended by the members of the British Parliament, I asked you if it had not been "the policy of the United States and Great Britain for many years to arbitrate their differences where diplomacy failed to adjust them, and why the latter should single out this country—a power competent to take care of itself without arbitration—and omit all the weaker powers that needed to be protected?" I regretted then, as I regret now, that you did not give a full and direct answer to that question.

I asked you "who the proposed arbitrators were to be, and by what mode they were to be selected." You answered that the matter of and manner of selecting arbitrators had not yet been considered; that the first thing is to agree to a treaty of peace, and a method of choosing arbitrators could be arranged later. I asked you, "If the treaty were limited to the United States and Great Britain, it would not follow as a matter of necessity that American disputes with Great Britain would be referred to European arbitrators?" You said you thought not, but that no plan for selecting arbitrators had been matured. You added that you had thought of selecting two judges of the highest court in each country, and if the four disagreed, they could select a fifth arbitrator. What could or would be done if they were tied upon that, you did not tell us.

I remember remarking to you that I thought "who are the arbitrators to be and how are they to be appointed" was a matter vital to such a treaty, and not a mere incident. On that you seemed to disagree with me.

So far as my memory serves me, these are all of the questions that I asked you.

From your reading of the daily newspapers, you must be aware of the very prevailing belief that England has ever been more solicitous to secure treaties of arbitration with stronger nations than with weak. I hoped that your appearance before our committee might be made a means of dissipating this belief if it were unjust, and thus lead all nations to the adoption of the policy of arbitration, of which you have been so eloquent a champion. Having been so long engaged in this work, and having given it so much of your eminent ability, you must recognize the fact that the sentiment to which I refer stands in the way of the adoption of any general international agreement as to arbitration of difficulties. I am of those who believe that this is one of the most important questions of the age, and I hailed your coming before our committee as an indication of a desire on the part of the people in your country to forward the good work to which so many able men have devoted their lives. In this country the sentiment in favor of arbitration is practically unanimous, but our people believe that the most effective steps toward securing universal arbitration lie in the direction of the weaker powers against encroachments of the stronger. I believe, too, that in England public sentiment is becoming so strong as to prevent wars to a great extent. I need only refer in this connection to what I esteem the crowning glory of Gladstone's career—the prevention of war at a time when it seemed inevitable.

Holding these views, you may readily imagine my anxiety to make the most of the very favorable opportunity afforded by your visit to our committee. You came bearing recommendations and endorsements from a very influential portion of the British Parliament. You came at a time when there were questions pending between many different nations as to boundaries and other rights. It seemed to me most important that a strong expression should be drawn from one holding so high a position as yourself, and it did not seem possible to me that a member of the British Parliament, standing before us as a representative Englishman, could have any hesitation in declaring the willingness of his people to arbitrate with the weaker governments quite as readily as with those they might have occasion to fear in case of war. And it seems incredible to me that you could consider a question bearing upon this point as an insult.

I beg to assure you that it was offered with no such intent. I would not thus, as a representative of the people of this country, insult our friends in England. I would not even intimate that there was any question or any doubt in my mind as to the high stand England would take when the question of arbitration with a weaker power was presented to her. If I have erred in this respect, and if you deem the questions I have quoted above an insult to you, I must plead my higher estimation of the English character than your present complaint would seem to justify, and beg to assure you that in spite of your complaint I shall hold to the opinion I have expressed until forced to admit that the common belief is correct, and that England seeks arbitration only for the purpose of escaping danger.

I am, sir, yours, very truly,

JOHN VAN VOORHIS.

HON. WILLIAM R. CREAMER,
Member of Parliament, London, England.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. MARSHALL, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HOLMAN, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to submit may be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to submit may file them with the Clerk. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but I have an adverse report which I desire to have announced as being filed from the desk; and I ask that gentlemen of the minority may have leave to file their views if they desire to do so, and that the bill be put upon the Calendar with an adverse report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee submits an adverse report. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8768) to secure adequate compensation for the right to construct, use, extend, and operate street railways in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask that it go upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go upon the Calendar adversely reported. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the call of committees for reports is dispensed with.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCRANTON], who has charge of the special order which begins at 2 o'clock, I ask that the special order be postponed until 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the special order will be postponed until 3 o'clock instead of 2. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask that the Committee on the District of Columbia be assigned Tuesday next instead of Monday. It is very important to get through with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that on consultation with a majority of the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on the request of the gentleman from Missouri and his committee, it will be altogether agreeable to our committee that Tuesday be assigned to us instead of Monday, if it is agreeable to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Tuesday be assigned to the Committee on the District of Columbia for the consideration of its business, on the same terms to which under the rules Monday would be assigned to that committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of an appropriation bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose, before the House adjourned on yesterday, the committee was dividing.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph go over until Monday.

Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the point of order that no quorum voted be withdrawn, with the understanding that there shall be a ye-and-nay vote in the House.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, well, there would be anyhow, if one-fifth of the members present demanded it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that the point of no quorum be withdrawn.

Mr. DOCKERY. That agreement will have to be made in the House.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This amendment changes the bill, and necessarily there will have to be a vote in the House; and that may be a ye-and-nay vote if one-fifth the members present demand it. For that reason I do not see why the point of no quorum may not be withdrawn, and then we can go on with those parts of the bill to which there is no contest. That will give a ye-and-nay vote in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I was about to ask unanimous consent that this paragraph and the pending amendment be reported to the House without recommendation, and with the understanding that a ye-and-nay vote upon it be taken in the House.

Mr. PICKLER. No, no. It is already adopted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The recommendation by the committee can be reversed by the House. Let it go to the House as an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. As a large majority, although not a quorum, have voted in favor of the amendment, it seems to me that in the interest of public business the point of no quorum should be withdrawn, with the understanding that there shall be, as there would be inevitably, a ye-and-nay vote upon it in the House. I think that ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. DOCKERY. There will undoubtedly be a ye-and-nay vote upon this in the House.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to gentlemen that it is useless to waste time in this way, as the point of no quorum will not be withdrawn.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. We can go on with business if the gentleman from New York will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is, if the minority can have their way they will graciously let the majority proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Then let the majority bring a quorum here to pass this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday the pending question was on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, Mr. BARTLETT. The point of no quorum was made, and the Chair appointed to act as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. BARTLETT, and the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. TALBERT. The tellers will take their places and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BARTLETT, as follows:

Page 18, strike out all after "Representatives," in line 2, down to and including line 9, and insert in lieu of it the following:

"For annual clerks to members who are not chairmen of committees and to Delegates from Territories, at $1,200 each, from and after March 4, 1895.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 59.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I give notice that I shall demand the yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I give notice that I shall also ask for the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to give notice. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the second paragraph on page 18, under the heading, "For contingent expenses."

Mr. HULL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. My understanding was that the provision in relation to committee clerks was to come up immediately after this other matter should be disposed of. I ask that that be now taken up. I do not think it will occupy much time.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that the gentleman let that matter go over until we have gone through the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] I am willing that that paragraph shall go over until the remainder of the bill is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three Commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; eight clerks of class 4; ten clerks of class 3; thirteen clerks of class 2; fifteen clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $800 each; one messenger; two laborers; one engineer, $840; and two watchmen; in all, $91,340.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on that paragraph. In lines 10 and 11 it reads: "one secretary, $2,000." The point of order I make is that under the statute the salary of that officer is fixed at $1,600, and that the additional $400 is contrary to the rule which provides that we can not, in an appropriation bill, change existing law so as to increase expenditures.

Mr. SAYERS. Was not that done yesterday?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I think the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky is well taken, and I will move to amend the provision by striking out "two thousand" and inserting "sixteen hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair get the parliamentary status right. The Chair strikes out the $2,000 on the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] move to amend the paragraph?

Mr. DOCKERY. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to say that the salary fixed by the statute was $1,600.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is correct.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert $1,600.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky on that amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to have read at the Clerk's desk and printed in the RECORD a list of officers provided for in this bill who are given larger salaries than those prescribed by the statute, with the pages of the bill where the appropriations are found.

The list was read, as follows:

Salaries in excess of statute limit.

Total number of salaries in the bill that are in excess of the statute limit, 20. Aggregate amount of excess, $13,250.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If my time has not expired—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, before passing from this provision and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri I desire to say a word with reference to the subject raised by the gentleman from Kentucky.

It is true that the law provides a salary of $1,600 for the secretary of the Civil Service Commission. In the current law, however, as fixed in the appropriation bill of last year, this salary is placed at $2,000. Undoubtedly the point of order lies against it; and I may say that there are twenty or thirty salaries in the bill to which the same point of order would apply; not that we have increased any salary above the current law. We have placed them in the bill at the same as in the appropriations for the current year, but some of them in the current appropriation bill are larger than as fixed by the statute and have been so for some time.

In this case the provision of the bill simply restores what has been the custom in connection with this salary heretofore by giving the same amount as that fixed in the current law. But the point of order, as I have suggested, will lie against some twenty-two salaries for the same reason.

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to strike out "$1,600" and insert "$1,500," and I do it for the purpose of sending to the desk to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a list of salaries of officers in the employ of the Government which are less than the amount fixed in the statute.

The list is as follows:

Total number of salaries in the bill at less than statute limit, 115. Amount necessary to bring them up to statute limit, $53,350.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ought to state to the committee in this connection that there is no salary in this bill, except one that I now recall, which is larger than is provided in the current appropriation bill for this year.

Mr. SAYERS. And will not the gentleman from Kentucky go further and state that there is no salary larger than for years past?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I had intended to make that statement. The gentleman from Texas did not permit me to conclude my sentence. I believe there has been but one increase; that is to say, there is no salary larger, as I now remember, than for the current year, and no salary other than it has been for a good many years past; nor has any salary been brought up to the statute that has been heretofore appropriated for at less than the statutory requirement. There is, therefore, in what I say no criticism upon the subcommittee that prepared this bill, nor on the committee which acted upon the report of the subcommittee and accepted it. It is simply presented as a matter of information which it seemed to me it was well for the Committee of the Whole and the House to have possession of.

And I may state, Mr. Chairman, in this connection another curious feature not only in this bill, but generally in the appropriation bills. I suppose that it is not unfair to say that fully 20 per cent of the officers to whom salaries are paid by the appropriation bills have been created not by statute, but only by the appropriation bills themselves. I repeat the statement that it is not unfair to suggest that of the number of persons to whom we pay salaries probably 20 per cent of the positions they fill have been created by the appropriation bills and not by separate statutes. I do not pretend to make any criticism upon this condition, but simply state the fact.

Mr. BLACK. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky this question: Do you not think it a bad practice, this sort of legislation, and is it not in flagrant violation of the rules of the House?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from Georgia asks me a question which involves an argument. I can answer, however, in a general way by saying that I do not think it a very bad practice; it may be in a special case that it would be a bad practice; but there are many cases where the salary theretofore fixed for an office is wholly incommensurate with the work involved, because of changed conditions; for instance, when the office was created the work attached to it was small, but by successive gradations the work has been increased so as to make it entirely proper that there should be an increase in the salary. On the other hand, large salaries have been given in cases where the work of an office was large at the time, but by changed conditions the salary paid would be wholly out of proportion to the amount of work done. It is extremely difficult to make separate bills to cover each of these cases as they arise, and I am not prepared to say, therefore, that it is a bad practice for the House, in making up the appropriation bills, to make the salary fit the actual work done and the responsibility involved in the special office to which it applies.

I withdraw the amendment I last offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Wyoming, who desires to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, strike out all of line 8, down to and including line 21.

Mr. DOCKERY. The latter clause, from line 18 to 21, has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair for the present sustains the point of order against the amendment. This latter paragraph has not yet been read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let it be read now.

The CHAIRMAN. But there is an amendment pending, and the question will be first taken on that.

The amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was agreed to.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 22 by striking out, in lines 11, 12, and 13, the words "eight clerks of class 4, ten clerks of class 3, thirteen clerks of class 2, fifteen clerks of class 1."

Mr. BOWERS of California. My amendment contemplates dispensing with the services of 48 clerks. This Civil Service Commission—the fifth wheel of this Government coach—is growing into importance. There are 63 persons now employed and this bill provides an appropriation of $97,000 for them.

The whole business is a fraud and subterfuge; an imported, un-American humbug. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] during the last session uttered a truth when he said that formerly when a clerk went out of office on a change of Administration he went out carrying his good character with him with colors flying; but to-day, under a civil-service reform that keeps no man in office whom his superior does not want there, he simply goes out characterized as inefficient, or dishonest, or something of that kind. I have here now the proof of it. You have it yourselves.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Why should the gentleman confine his amendment simply to clerks? Why not apply it to all?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I will finish it all up if you will just give me time. In the post-office at New York the other day 43 employees were discharged, many of them having been there eight, ten, and sixteen years, and as it happened only 41 out of the 43 were Republicans. That was simply a coincidence.

Mr. HULICK. Was not that enough?

Mr. BOWERS of California. It was enough, yes. Down in Fresno a carrier employed for years had charges preferred against him. He was discharged. He telegraphed, as I have evidence here, to the Commission—to the Department—that the charges were false, and asked for an investigation. I have here the statement that the postmaster was sustained, and that the man could not have an investigation.

I have here the statement of a man who served for years in the custom-house at San Diego. When they changed collectors the new collector, rightfully, as I believe, chose his own assistants. He was responsible for that office, and he had a right to say who his assistants should be; but this man supposed there was something in civil-service reform. He did not understand the game, and so I got this long paper. In it he says that his dismissal was in violation of the regulations; as if that made any difference. The collector, under this law, after certifying, as he does here, to the man's efficiency when calling for his resignation, was forced suddenly to find the man inefficient and incapable, and to say to him, "For that reason you must go." Why, in every office in the country the head of that office must have the choosing of his assistants. He must be held responsible, and you have no right to hold him responsible unless you let him select his assistants. There is no manufacturing business, there is no business carried on in the United States that could be successful that would allow some outside commission to choose the clerks, assistants, and confidential men. They must be selected by the responsible parties themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Very well; I will withdraw the amendment and send another one to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I wish to make an inquiry. Does not the order under which we proceed provide that when any special matter is reached which gentlemen desire to discuss there may be an extension of the time?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not so informed. The gentleman from California withdraws his amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the Commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, $8,000.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, I have an amendment which I wish to offer to that paragraph.

Mr. HUNTER. I offer my amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HUNTER] that the amendment of the gentleman from California will be first in order, as it is an amendment to perfect the text. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 31, on page 22, amend by striking out the words "six thousand dollars."

Mr. HULL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. If the vote on this is negative, will it then be in order to move to strike out and insert another number?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment simply to bring to the attention of the committee the facts. I have not in five minutes' time to read these statements, but there is not a member here who does not know that this Civil Service Commission or law does not keep one employee in office anywhere if his principal does not want him there. He makes life a burden to him, and can do it, and he gets out. This civil-service annex to the Government has changed the rule only in one particular. Formerly the employee went out because his party went out. Now they go out all the same, but if one kicks or protests against going you simply have to make a charge against him under this law that he is "inefficient" or dishonest or something of that kind. That is all the Commission has accomplished, and it is wrong, entirely wrong. You should hold no man responsible for the administration of an office unless you allow that man to run it. You, in your mercantile business, know that no merchant would ever submit to have outsiders determine whom he should employ. By means of this civil-service-reform business you have deceived thousands and thousands of people. All over the country young men and young women, believing that there was something in the civil-service-reform business, not knowing that it is an absolute humbug from beginning to end, have been cheated by it. No private business could stand the application of this principle. This great, rich Government may endure it. It is a political humbug all the way through; it is useless and growing, and you are going to create another class of "Justice Shallows." The system is growing every day, and appropriations are being made for clerks and more places for them.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will state to the gentleman from California that it has not grown for several years. It is exactly the force we have carried for several years.

Mr. BOWERS of California. It has got to be pretty bad already, and it can not grow into a bigger humbug than it is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was speaking of the clerical force. That has not increased.

Mr. BOWERS of California. It is something that is carried on at an expense of $97,000 to this Government, and the people of the United States can dispense with it with profit and honor to themselves. It is simply another part of the plan to make places for employees and furnish appropriations for them. Every one of you gentlemen knows what I am telling you is true. We know that in not a single case has the Commission power to do anything to put a man back if his principal does not want him. As I said before, he will make such a man's life a burden to him. The whole business is useless and a deceit, but it is one of these patented humbugs that has been persistently advertised.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the argument made by the gentleman from California is against the law creating civil service rather than against the principle of civil service. I believe that in place of cutting down the amount appropriated we should increase the appropriation for this department. The Civil Service Commission has no power to carry out its findings. The criticism seems to come from this fact. It can only investigate and report. I know personally of cases which have occurred where they have made full investigations and the facts have been reported to the Departments. That the Departments have persisted in violating the purposes of the law should not be charged against the Commission.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I know of cases where they have refused to investigate and do not do it.

Mr. HULL. I believe I have the floor, and can show that failure to investigate was caused by want of funds.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I yield you the floor.

Mr. HULL. These investigations will furnish valuable information for future legislation. The gentleman speaks about his cases where no investigation was had. The trouble has been that the Commission is not furnished with funds sufficient to make an investigation at every place where an investigation should be made. In my town an investigation was had and the Civil Service Commission found that letter carriers had been discharged because they would not contribute to the Democratic campaign fund. If there was no law on the subject I would say that was all right; but there is a law, and the fault does not lie with the Civil Service Commission. It lies with the administration of the different Departments of this Government. The Commissioners sent a man to Des Moines to investigate—a Democratic special agent. He reported the facts—that these men were removed without cause; that they were efficient in the discharge of their duties and dismissed without cause. He reported that he found that they had discharged their duties faithfully and well. The fault with the system is that the Civil Service Commission can only report the facts and leave it to some other officer of the Department to say whether the wrong shall be righted or not.

In the cases reported the Commission performed its full duty in reporting all the facts and demanding the restoration of the men discharged. That this law continues to be violated is not to be charged to the civil service. I should like to see this fund increased from $6,000 to $10,000, so that in the next two years we could gain information as to what has been done in the different Departments of this Government—in the Post-Office, in the Interior, in the Treasury, and in all the other Departments of the Government—as to whether they have enforced the law upon the statute books. It is true that the law should be amended so that when the Civil Service Commission finds that there has been a violation of law they can remedy it by going into court and having the men reinstated who have been removed without cause.

The gentleman is mistaken when he states that the character of the man turned out is blackened. That is not the case. Every man in the community has his character established; so that his removal is known to be simply a political removal, unless he is a man of bad character, and then the facts should be known. I believe that finally this law must be amended so as to make it more effective; so that every Administration, no matter of what party, will be compelled to obey the civil-service law or it will be repealed. The law can not stand with one party obeying it and the other ignoring it. Let us give it a fair trial, and amend it so as to make it effective. Let us get the information. Then if it can not be made to work equally with all parties repeal it. This commission has not funds to send men to California for the purpose of making investigations. Increase the appropriation and they will give the people of the United States a valuable amount of information as to the method of administering this law by this Administration. Mere pretenses of loyalty to civil-service reform will not save this Administration, and especially the Cabinet officers, from condemnation of friends of the principles of civil-service reform if continued violations of the law are permitted and the men committing flagrant outrages are upheld. I want the Commission strengthened so that all the facts in every case complained of can be collected and preserved for future use.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Would you apply this principle to your own business? If you were running a factory, would you not want to select your own assistants?

Mr. HULL. The civil-service law does not reach the higher grades of officers, the confidential men charged with the administration of these duties; it simply reaches the clerks. Furthermore, the public business is not the same as a man's private business. It belongs to all the people and not to any individual, and I want to say to the gentleman from California that the method of competitive examination, properly applied, selects a class of clerks who give the Government better service than it ever got under any other system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

[Mr. STOCKDALE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. Say fifteen minutes.

Mr. HUNTER. If the committee will give me the privilege of printing some remarks on this subject I will not occupy any time, and probably the objection will not be insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] and in defense of the Civil Service Commissioners.

I have never posed as a reformer, nor do I ever intend to do so; but I have watched with considerable interest the working of the Civil Service Commission under the present Commissioners. I have had some cases of complaint from my own district and have brought them before the Commissioners, and have always found these gentlemen active, ever ready to unearth any wrong that is believed to exist or that has been done, and to correct the evil so far as within their power to act.

The defect or trouble in regard to this matter is not with the Commissioners themselves, but is with the law under which they are operating. They find, for instance, that a person has been removed from office for purely political reasons; they so find on an examination and so report, and ask that the removed official, clerk, or whatever he may be, be restored. But they are utterly powerless to carry into effect their own recommendations, and there the matter is compelled to rest.

So far as I am concerned, I would like to see the arm of the Commissioners strengthened. I would like to see the law so amended that they shall have the power, when they find that there has been a violation of the law, and an official has been improperly removed, to restore that clerk or that official to the place from which he has been improperly removed in defiance of the intent and purpose of the law.

That there is fraud in connection with some of the cases of removal I certainly believe; but it does not rest with the Commissioners, and they ought not to be charged with it. It rests in the various Departments; and, therefore, I think the gentleman from California should qualify very materially the charges he has made against the Commissioners, because it goes out to the country that there is rottenness, corruption, or inattention to duty on the part of the Commissioners, when as a matter of fact they are handicapped by the law under which they are operating, and find it impossible to undo wrongs committed or restore officials improperly removed.

In defense of the Commissioners, and that they may not stand in an improper light before the country, I have made this statement. The law provides a way for clerks to get into place. The way is narrow and thorny, and is as easily traveled by an incompetent as by a competent person, so far as real business capacity is concerned. But when the places are filled by those who have passed the necessary ordeal they may be removed at any time by a head of Department for any cause and the law affords no remedy. The law, therefore, operates only as a restraining power upon the heads of Departments. They do not often make removals when it can be clearly demonstrated that the removal is for political reasons alone. But it does permit and encourage the preferment of unfounded and false charges, and as these are not often investigated the discharged employee rests under a false imputation and suffers in his standing at home as well as abroad. The law is defective and ought to be amended and made efficient and effective.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the floor for a minute or two in justice to myself.

In the remarks I made I have in no respect intended to reflect personally upon the Commissioners themselves.

Mr. LOUD. And you did not.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Nor did I reflect upon them as far as I know. Certainly it was not my intention; and I do not think that anything I have said can fairly be construed as a reflection upon them.

But I have nothing to take back. My objection is against the system as a system, and my complaint is that it is useless. The Commissioners themselves are powerless. The Administration has the power, and the Commissioners can not help themselves. They are absolutely useless; they are the fifth wheel to the coach. So far as I know personally they are estimable gentlemen, and have always tried to do the very best they possibly could; but they can not do anything, situated as they are, they can only recommend persons for appointment—there their functions cease. They ought not to be allowed to do this, because every man who is put in charge of an important Department of the Government ought to be held responsible for its proper management, and he certainly can not be held so responsible if others are to appoint his assistants over whom he can exercise no control, and he is and must, in the nature of things, be the best judge.

Mr. RAY. Allow me to ask if the gentleman does not believe that this Commission operates at least as a restraining power on the different Departments of the Government in making removals?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Not a particle. The evidence is that there is not a particle of restraint anywhere, and the papers of the country have made that plain to all the people. There is not a member here who does not know it. Why, how was it in your own State but a few days ago? Have you forgotten that? The law only requires the heads of Departments to make charges, and the Commission may investigate them; but if they do, and the charge is found to be unwarranted, they have no power to reinstate the official who has been dropped from the rolls, and even if the party is reinstated his chief or head of division can make it so uncomfortable for him that he can not possibly stay.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Is it not true that when the heads of Departments bring charges against an official they have declined not only to allow a defense from any character of charges, but that the party charged is not permitted to know the nature of the charges? I know that to be true myself.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I have the facts here to substantiate all of these things. Here they are from the people who have been dismissed, signed with their own names, and they have in many instances not been allowed an investigation, their appeals to the Department having been entirely unheard. That is a common thing. Nor do I think the chiefs of Departments of the Government should be bothered with such appeals. There are hundreds of thousands of employees in the different Departments, and if everyone that is discharged may appeal and have a hearing, you would have thousands of cases; it is impracticable, it is useless. No matter how long a member may have served here, how useful he may have become, he is discharged every two years, and must present his claims for reappointment. I believe that every man should have a fair chance, every avenue opened to him. I do not believe in setting apart a class of officeholders. If the Civil Service Commission could carry out its plans it would become a vast irresponsible machine, and the real power behind the throne, a President maker. It is bad as it is, but fortunate that it has no more power.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I now offer is for the purpose of striking out of this bill all the appropriation providing for the execution and carrying out of the civil-service law. However, I would be willing to provide for a board of examiners whose duty it should be to examine and ascertain the necessary qualification of applicants for office; but not one cent to continue this insidious assault upon representative government, the Civil Service Committee of this House having peremptorily declined to report any bill to remedy the many known defects of this law or to even report back any of the bills referred to them in order that such action as the people demand might be considered by this House.

I am free to say that I desire to do now by indirection that which this Congress has failed to do by direct enactment; that is, to make no appropriation of the people's money for the continuance or enforcement of this civil-service law except in the case I have mentioned. Let us starve it out of existence, so that it may dissolve into its original mugwump element.

This law when it was first sprung upon the country was not considered with reference to its effects upon popular government or what effect it would have upon the established rights of the people to control public affairs. They did not presume at the time of the adoption of this law that they were actually setting up a new un-American device in government—a dual power in the administration of a common government. The very law itself and the reasons laid down by its authors at the time it was under discussion and passed show that the sole object of its friends was to relieve and exempt themselves from the importunities and demands of their constituents who desired places in the public service, or, to make it a little more specific, these members of Congress who by a little brief preferment received at the hands of the people, whom they now ostracise, presumed that they were, like Mercurio's soul, above the heads of these people, and should be protected from their rightful demands.

They sought by this law to draw the line on the people that had created them members of Congress. That one claim alone should have condemned the law at its very inception. Such puerile legislation should be beneath the indorsement of any man or Representative. It is a counterpart of the royal prerogative. It was never supposed to be a crime to ask the influence of Representatives or friends in procuring an honorable position until this law was enacted. However, it is a crime now, and almost certain defeat for any applicant to let his political convictions be known, and if a member of Congress should dare to speak a good word for an appointment or the promotion of his friend it would be taken as a circumstance against him under the restrictions of this law. Not that the official heads of the Departments desire to make such a test, yet it is imposed upon them, substantially, by the civil-service rules and the construction placed upon a law by the "holier than thou" Commissioners. The right of all American citizens to aspire to place and ask for office is one of the boasted privileges that belong to our institutions.

I wish to ask if the time has come that an American freeman has to cringe at the feet of his own creation, with bowed head, and supplicate for a freeman's rights? Are we to recognize the doctrine of master and servant, of emperor and subject, of imperialism in the shoddy garb of a mugwump trio? Has our station here lifted us above the people? I hold that it is one of the important obligations that all members are under to their constituents to cheerfully give such time and effort as the merits of the claimant deserve. Although a novice in the details of national legislation, I had always supposed that the highest and most important duty imposed upon a representative of the people was to secure the best possible service in the administration to all the people, select the men from his party in the district that he represents who would best serve the interests of all. However, it has been discovered of late that there is a higher and purer class of people who should have the right to select more than one-half of the officers of this Government, a class of men who are not responsible to the people for any of their official acts.

Have we forgotten that a member of Congress is the sworn agent and servant of the people? By what process did he become sovereign and the people subjects? Is a member of Congress to be removed beyond the touch of the people merely because they have intrusted him with their sovereignty for a brief season? Why should they be asked to abdicate their authority and have it conferred upon a commission? This Mugwump stamp of nobility can not stand in line with the principles of true Democracy; it must be repealed. The members of the Senate and House are held responsible by the people more than all other public officers for the character of the public service. Yet they are denied the right under this law to name or participate in the selection of the appointive officers of the Government, which duty is imposed upon them by our theory of government, which has existed for more than a century.

The power is now in the hands of a commission, and, strange to say, we have men upon this floor who call themselves Democrats that are willing to perpetuate this law that strikes down the fundamental principles of true Democracy. I am emboldened here and now in this presence to say that I shall not only vote to starve this hybrid spawn of antidemocracy to death, but, if we shall fail to destroy it to-day, continue the fight before the people until this Hall shall be filled with Democrats that dare to do their duty and effect its repeal. Make it one of the issues of the next campaign.

What higher and more important duty pertains to a Representative in Congress than it is to see that the public service is under the care and control of the most efficient men in the country? They are specially charged with that duty. Who knows better than the accredited representatives of the people the character, the qualifications, and the worthiness of the men who should fill the appointive offices in public places? They are presumed to be and are the people's representatives to do the people's business, and no commission should be allowed to intervene between the people and them.

While it is not my purpose to arraign any of our predecessors in Congress with improper motives, yet I am free to say that no man should be allowed to hold a certificate of membership upon this floor who seeks or desires to avoid these duties for which he is elected, and attempts to force such a law as we now have between him and his constituents in order that he may disport himself in ease and comfort as a pretended superior individual, when he, in fact, by virtue of his office, is called upon to make greater sacrifices and be more prompt in every detail of public duty than he would be under any other circumstances. There are some angelic members that think any effort on their part to secure place for a constituent is compromising to their exalted position. I do not know how this matter of trying to change men in the Government service has affected other members, but in my brief experience it has been a labor of love with me to turn a Republican out and turn a Democrat in.

But, Mr. Chairman, has this law accomplished the purpose for which it was enacted? I appeal to every member in this House for judgment. Has it protected you from the demands of your constituents for place? Certainly not. Every member knows that constant importunities of applicants continue; and why should they not? This is supposed to be a popular Government, based upon the will of the people, where every man may aspire to any office. When the electors decree a change of Administration—a change of policy which necessitates a change of party—they are entitled to that change, from the greatest to the smallest, in all the Departments. Can I not urge, with the utmost propriety, that a change of the appointive officers is just as essential to the change of Administration as the change of the elective officers? If this is not true, popular government is a failure. When we have changed less than one-fourth of the officeholders of this Government can we say truthfully that we have changed the administration in obedience to the will of the people that was expressed through the ballot box.

Some gentlemen have the boldness to claim that when we have changed the President and a few heads of the different Departments the decree of the people has been fully executed and that the masses of the people should be content. Mr. Chairman, that may be done when human nature has become wholly revolutionized and changed; when all of the honors and emoluments of office have been taken away; when this new Mugwump doctrine that the office must seek the man, and that in some way the desire of men for office must be abridged, that the masses of the people must lift themselves into a higher and purer atmosphere and regale themselves with the pernicious idea that this Republic can be administered on the delusion of nonpartisanship. This lofty and serene ideal has never been attained by any people upon this earth. The masses of the people know nothing of it. It only obtains with the gentlemen that have secured soft places and the political dreamer that never knew what popular government meant.

It is the recognized rule not only of the Federal but of the State governments that all elective officers shall be changed every two or four years, however efficient the men that they elect, recognizing a fixed term of office, but it is strongly insisted by many members, as well as by all the Mugwumps, that the appointive officers should hold their places for life. This doctrine was sought to be engrafted upon our institutions at the inception of this Government by Alexander Hamilton and the British aristocracy in this country that entertained the views of the Royal household of Great Britain.

That question was fought out between the British followers of Alexander Hamilton upon the one side, and by Thomas Jefferson with his Democratic friends upon the other. The principle of popular government triumphed in that day and the friends of a British Monarchy were completely overwhelmed, and from that hour until now the recognized doctrine of free government based upon the independent will of the people has been recognized by a very large majority of our countrymen. In this connection I wish it to be distinctly understood by the present incumbents in office as well as the whole country that I make no criticism upon them. I am glad to say and believe that the morals, the intelligence, and the character of our men and women in the different Departments of the Government are not only equal to the highest grade of our own people, but of a like number of people of any country in the world. But the great question is, Do these employees or agents of the Government take their high and important trusts from the people?

I presume there is no member here who will contend that they do. They are under no obligations to the popular will. They hold their office for life. They can defy all the power of the people. They are independent of all the duties of citizenship. They may or may not be in sympathy with the expressed will of the people. They are caused to be a mere machine under this civil-service law, owing obedience to the beck and nod of a Commission and not the people. They are not subject to the same laws and rules that govern citizens. They hold no place in the body politic. They are forced to be an uncomplaining piece of machinery that is fixed by arbitrary law.

It is not my purpose to make complaint of the employees or the service that they are required to render. It is honorable. It is necessary. But the present method of filling the stations is what I complain of. This law is vicious as well as monstrous. It goes far beyond the responsible limitations of the appointing power. It not only confers upon the President the power to appoint a commission who is responsible to no power save the will of the President, but it gives to the President the power to extend or limit its application to more than 100,000 officeholders. It arbitrarily gives to a commission the power to fix its own rules and regulations, by which American citizens alone can hold office. The elective franchise is unknown in this circle of political power. The representatives of the people are driven from its councils and told that the wishes of the people must not interfere with what the gentleman from Massachusetts calls "a beautiful theory." This Civil Service Commission is now exercising authority, and appointing more civil officers for the Government of this country than the 13,000,000 voters. There is not a Representative in this Congress but knows that this law is a fraud and that there has been jugglery in its execution; that there is no moral or political force to sustain it. It lives upon deception and feeds upon the credulity of a patient people.

I hold that we should have a civil-service law that ascertains simply the necessary qualifications and requires the fitness of all persons elected or appointed, however such a rule as that might depopulate this House. I still further hold that there should be a tenure of office fixed by law for all appointees as well as those that are fixed for elective officers. And when the people vote a change in favor of the Democratic party they should have the offices all filled by Democrats, and when the Republicans accede to power by the voice of the people they should have the offices also changed in their favor. Any other policy, in my judgment, is a denial of the right of the people to govern, and strikes a blow at the very existence of our form of government. I believe that the doctrine laid down by the fathers at the very inception of this Government should be observed as fundamental.

I believe that all appointive and elective officers should be required to go back at the end of a reasonable term of four or six years and take their places in the ranks of the people and assume the responsibilities of citizenship. What will be the conditions of thousands of men and women who are now booked for a life office in the public service? Their salaries are not sufficient to enable a large share of them to lay by a competency for old age. When they have become so old that they can not longer hold their places, what then? Will there be a retired list like those of the Regular Army? Or shall we adopt the false doctrine of paternalism and support them at public expense? If so, who is to pay the bills?

Mr. Chairman, it is to be regretted that there are gentlemen upon this floor, supplemented by the members of the Civil Service Commission, who are persistent in telling us that there are many places in the various Departments that it is impossible to fill by outside parties, that the present incumbents have become so efficient that their services can not be dispensed with. I do not question the sincerity of these gentlemen, but I am forced to deny their position. If their contention is true that there are no other persons competent to fill their places and perform the duties, we should confess that perfection has been attained, that the world has come to a standstill, and that popular government is self-destructive. We should enact a law at once to abolish these offices as fast as these perfect incumbents die and have the Government go out of business.

Mr. Chairman, this civil-service law is a cankerworm now in the body politic that is eating at the vitals of popular institutions. Its logical and natural effect upon the people of this country if permitted to continue as it is to-day is to establish a monarchy. It is a doctrine that comes to us from the monarchies of the Old World, where the despotic head can name the officers and employees of his dynasty without consulting the will of the people. This new application of the principles of an Austrian monarchy I do not think will take very deep root in American soil. Who are the friends of this foreign scheme of conducting the affairs of our Government? Not the men who are the sworn officers of the Government, who are charged with its enforcement; Mugwump organization, civil-service leagues, Miss Nancy clubs, that are continually finding fault with the established methods of carrying out popular government, men who think that the rights of the common people should be abridged.

Most of the appointive power believe as I do, that this law should be stricken from the statute books. The only excuse that is made for it by its pretended friends is that the business of the Government should be run as an individual corporation runs its own private business. It seems to me that it is perfectly apparent that this Government can not be run as a private corporation, where a common head employs all the labor; regulates its use and term of service. This Government is a popular government, where every man has a right to say how he wants it managed and controlled. He is a coequal partner with every other citizen in the control of public affairs. What would you think of a railroad company calling in all of its employees and submitting to them the question of the management of the road, how many trains to run, rate of speed, weight of rails, and rate of freight, all of which is to be determined by their votes, where the section hand has as much power in determining the question as the owner of the road; or some large manufacturing establishment leaving the general management or its financial policy to a vote of its employees?

Some men seem to think and argue that there is no difference between the conduct and management of a private business and a popular form of government like ours. A private business, as recognized under our laws, is an absolute despotism so far as the right to control its own existence, its property, and its creation. It determines the quality, the price, and the kind of labor it wishes, and disposes of it as it pleases. Our Government is substantially a voluntary organization, a mutual agreement between its citizens that they will enact laws to protect each citizen in his right to life, liberty, and property—a Government of the people and by the people. This Government belongs to all the people, not a part, not a few, not to a royal head, and they have the unquestioned right to change its policy and place its control in the hands of the friends of any change that they think best. To deny such right is to deny to the people the right to control their own affairs in their own way.

Under this civil-service law the will of the people is set at defiance and ignored. When they vote to change the administration of the Government no change takes place except in a few elective offices and heads of Departments. Men are not selected to carry out the will of the people who are in accord with their policy, but the man or woman who stands first on the eligible list, who in three cases out of four are avowed political enemies of the declared wishes of the people. Take for example a postmaster appointed by the present Administration. He takes the oath of office, gives his bond to the Government, to secure the faithful discharge of every duty and obligation for the good of the service. He accepts his commission and steps into the office. There he finds the stamp clerk a Republican, the postal-order clerk a Republican, and the ten carriers all Republicans, all political enemies of his. Not one of them speaks to him or he to them; no harmony, no common interests, but he is responsible for everything done in the office, and his business is in the hands of his enemies. That is what is called politely civil-service reform.

This same relation and condition exists generally throughout all the Departments in the public service. No such relation should exist, and it never was intended that it should be a rule in the transaction of public affairs. I believe that a term of office should be fixed by law for all appointees in the Government service, and the tenures should be no longer than the term fixed for our elective offices. Have the term expire on the 1st day of July succeeding each Administration. Then, if there were persons whose services were so exceptional that they could not be dispensed with at that time, let the appointing power reappoint them for such time as the necessity of the service required. This law violates every principle of even and equitable apportionment that should obtain in a country like ours.

An apportionment should be made out of the number of appointive officers that each Congressional district is entitled to, and then the members should have the right to name the parties to fill all the places, subject, however, to the necessary examination and qualification for the places to be filled. Apportionments are now made under this pretended civil-service law according to grade without reference to locality. They might all come from one State or community. I am advised that the District of Columbia has 11 per cent of the places now in the different Departments of the Government, when in fact they are not entitled to 1 per cent. I believe that patronage should be distributed according to population and representation, the same as legislative powers are given under the Constitution.

The present law as it now stands, with this manifest inequality, will never be acceptable to the masses of the people, for our Government is founded upon the right of the electors to go to the polls at stated periods and change the public officers for political reasons, and political reasons alone. And they also believe that the same rule and principle should be adopted with reference to all the appointive officers. The President can not to-day under this civil-service law appoint or remove a single officer in the Government for political reasons, while the people change the policy of their Government for political reasons alone. What a commentary is this upon popular government! What interest will the people of the United States take in a Presidential election when the only change is Cleveland for McKinley or McKinley for Cleveland every four years? I feel certain that they will become indifferent as to all questions of a national character.

All persons who are ambitious for preferment or official honor and that distinction which is accorded to people in a free Government will cease to have any interest in the perpetuation of a people's government. When that condition is established then the danger to free institutions is at hand. No republic can live when the people lose interest in its beneficence as well as its popular character. Self-interest will take the place of patriotism. Indifference will take the place of vigilance, and monarchy will take the place of democracy. I hold that this law is a long step toward the denial of the right of the people to govern this Republic through their own chosen representatives. The intent and effect of the law is to remove the control of the Government far away from the people and establish it in the hands of the few.

Can the people of the United States to-day by their votes elect a Democratic or Republican President and expect to have the Administration Democratic or Republican with this law in force? If they obey this law they are compelled to appoint about 140,000 officeholders whose political status, character, and purpose are concealed and unknown to them, men whose independence and manhood must be subordinated in order to be in favor with the appointing power. Such a demand upon free American citizens is an outrage and an insult in a Government like this of ours.

Under a Democratic Administration that is elected by the people, after the qualifications of an applicant have been ascertained by a proper examination, the only question then, that should be asked is, is he a Democrat? The same rule should obtain with the Republican party, if the good Lord should so far forget His duties here upon this earth as to permit the Republican party to succeed to power again. This law changes our whole system of political patronage, and is radically inconsistent with the true principle of Democracy, as well as the long-established rules of popular government and constitutional liberty. It is un-American as well as an insidious assault upon the well-defined teachings of the fathers. I am one who stands ready for its repeal, of all of its provisions, except that portion that provides for the necessary ascertainment of qualification for the respective places. I feel assured that as soon as the people are fully aware of the dangers that lie concealed like a poisonous serpent in every line of this law they will demand its repeal and assert their right to govern in all the Departments of the Government in accordance with the Constitution of their country.

Can this Government hope to live and perpetuate its existence outside and independent of the great principle of popular rights? Can the teaching of a century and the traditions of all time be effaced from the hearts and lives of the people in a day? It would seem that we have learned nothing from the long line of precedents that have come down to us through the ages. Democrats, I appeal to you this day to remember that this Government can not live should we surrender the right of the people to govern through their own chosen representatives. Free government must receive the breath of life as it is breathed through the ballot box. The voice of the people is the inspiration of free institutions, and this Republic can not live with an official class independent of their power. To surrender to a commission the authority to select a majority of the officers of the Government is an innovation upon popular government that is pregnant with alarm. It must be arrested or we will at an early day be compelled to accept a monarchical form of government.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some gentleman who is in favor of the law.

Mr. SNODGRASS. There is nobody, Mr. Chairman, who is in favor of the law.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I most cordially support the law, not so much for what it is as for what it ought to be. What ever just criticisms may be made against it they are solely on account of its insufficiency, and the true way to correct existing evils is to enlarge the powers of the Commission and to establish such regulations as will require obedience on the part of heads of Departments to the plain intent and meaning of the regulations.

I agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] that men should not be dismissed from office simply because charges are made against them. The amendment which has been recommended by the Civil Service Reform Association, that the accused shall be furnished with copies of the charges, and be given an opportunity for a hearing, and only be dismissed after full hearing, ought certainly to be incorporated into the law, and there are a number of other amendments which ought to be made.

There is no doubt that by and through this law, especially with such amendments as experience from time to time may dictate, we may have a far higher standard of qualification, and we may to a large extent remove the evils which now exist on account of the large number of persons who are drawn to this city in the hope of obtaining employment in the various Departments only to find their expectations disappointed.

We shall discover that there can be no injury to the public service by making fitness the underlying basis of appointment to position and to retention therein, but, on the contrary, its efficiency will be promoted and the public welfare greatly advanced.

Let us, therefore, uphold the Commission to the extent that existing law permits and remove the cause of objection by wise and intelligent improvement of its possibilities for usefulness.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I withdraw my last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California withdraws his amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask unanimous consent that where an amendment is agreed to to any paragraph in the bill which involves a change of the total of the bill that the Clerk be authorized to change the total to correspond with amendment adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the committee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HUNTER] to strike out, on page 22, all from line 8 to line 21, inclusive.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 32.

Mr. SNODGRASS made the point of no quorum, but subsequently withdrew it.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, namely: For care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness, rent of stable and wagon shed, care of clocks, telegraphic, and electric apparatus, and repairs to the same, and for miscellaneous items not including the foregoing; in all, $3,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "foregoing," in line 23 of page 23, "but including the expenses necessary in the judgment of the President to secure to American citizens under charges of complicity in the late revolt in the Hawaiian Islands, open and impartial trials by legal tribunals, and to prevent the infliction of capital punishment on any American citizen without such trial," and strike out the word "three" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order. I want to hear what this is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am constrained to make the point of order against this amendment, but will reserve it if the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not desire to have it reserved. If it is not in order I do not want to take up the time of the committee. If the Chairman will look at the provision on page 23 he will see what it is. I do not desire to say anything. This is for contingent expenses of the State Department; and it says for miscellaneous items, showing it is not for items named, but various items. Now, to that line I offer the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call the attention of the Chair and the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that this is for contingent expenses of the Department at Washington.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, it is contingent expenses; but under the control of the Secretary of State. Now, the proposition is whether it is in order to make the contingent expenses under miscellaneous items, any other than those of the character named therein. I want to be perfectly frank with the Chairman. I have some doubt, because, of the principle of a sociis noscitur—to be known from its allies or associates—and the item should be of the character named therein.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is perhaps obnoxious on that ground, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of stationery, printing, and blanks: For chief of division, $2,500; two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $900 each; two messengers; three assistant messengers; one foreman of bindery, at $4 per day; four binders, at $3.20 per day each; and one sewer and folder, at $2.50 per day; in all, $28,500.20.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, in line 20, strike out "two clerks" and insert "four clerks;" and in line 22, strike out "three clerks" and insert "two;" in line 23, strike out "three" and insert "two;" and on page 29, in lines 1 and 2, strike out "$28,520" and insert "$30,500."

Mr. DOCKERY. In support of that I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and accompanying papers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not desire to have it read?

Mr. DOCKERY. No.

Mr. DINGLEY. It simply makes it conform to the current law.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment will be agreed to, and the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1895.

SIR: Referring to the appropriation in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, for the year 1896, for the division of stationery, printing, and blanks of this Department, wherein two fourth-class clerks are dropped and one $900 clerk allowed in their stead, I have the honor to request that your committee will reconsider its action and appropriate for the division as estimated for by this Department, and in support thereof submit the following reasons:

First. This division has no assistant chief, and one of the fourth-class clerks has to discharge the duties of that position.

Second. The duties of this division are so varied as to require it to be separated into three subdivisions with a fourth-class clerk at the head of each, and the nature of the work is such as to require strict integrity and high capacity in them to carry it forward without loss of money or inconvenience to the Government.

Third. It has always been conceded by all my predecessors that an unusual amount of responsibility was attached to this division, and that the clerks were in no sense overpaid for the character of the service required of them.

In addition to the work of issuing stationery, books and blanks, customs stamps, check books, etc., the division has to pay by check bills amounting to about $30,000 annually, has about 30 books used in its bookkeeping, and has the auditing of all accounts arising from the purchase of stationery, postage stamps, departmental telegraphing, advertising of the Department, etc.; in fact, the designation of the division is somewhat of a misnomer and does not convey a very correct idea of the real character of its work.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1895.

BOOKS AND BLANKS SECTION.

First. Edits, proof reads, keeps on hand, and issues all books (including catalogues) and blanks to customs officers, custodians of public buildings, commissioners of immigration, shipping commissioners, assistant treasurers, national-bank depositors, receivers of public moneys, superintendents of life-saving stations, marine-hospital officers, revenue steamers, and inspectors of steam vessels.

Second. The above involves supplying about 1,000 officers with about 3,000 distinct forms, at a cost for printing of about $75,000 per annum; printing requisitions, about 2,000 per annum; books printed, about 150,000 per annum; blanks printed, about 8,000,000 per annum; requisitions filled, about 3,300 per annum (1 to 200 items each).

The above necessitates (1) careful and intelligent supervision of all printer's copy, including constant reference to law and regulations; determining the quantities of forms necessary, etc.; (2) a record of orders on the Public Printer; (3) a revision of all requisitions; (4) letters of transmittal and receipts; (5) a record of all forms issued; (6) charges to officers of cost of all forms issued; (7) correspondence; the character, quantity, and variety of which an inspection of the Department letter book for at least one year alone can show.

Fourth. The results obtained are uniformity in style and economy in cost; facilitates the examination of out-of-town offices by Department special agents by having the forms and records the same throughout the country, and makes it convenient in the Department to receive, examine, and file papers because of their uniform style, size, and shape.

Fifth. There are six large storerooms full of books and blanks, in which supplies are received daily from the Public Printer, and from which supplies are forwarded to all parts of the country daily. The above does not include the New York City customs and treasury blank forms, which are forwarded immediately upon their receipt from the printer.

Sixth. The present and only customs maps in existence were prepared under the supervision of this section.

Seventh. The present regulations for the government of customs inspectors, weighers, and gaugers were compiled (in connection with a special agent) by the fourth-class clerk having immediate charge of the books and blanks.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1895.

DEAR SIR: Please allow me to supplement in writing what I said to you to-day in reference to reducing the clerical force in the division of stationery, printing, and blanks.

The opinion was expressed that the number of fourth-class clerks in said division is out of proportion to the whole number of clerks employed, and in excess of other divisions. In reply, I would say in all deference that I think the questions should be: What responsibilities have these clerks? What is the character and quantity of their work? What judgment or discretion are they daily called upon to exercise in incurring expense and issuing Government property? I wish very much your committee might make a personal examination of the division and satisfy itself on these points. The more the committee probed the better I would like it. If after a thorough personal investigation the committee should decide against the division, I would feel a great deal better satisfied than to have a reduction made because of real or supposed difference with other divisions.

The work of the division is unlike that of any other division in the Department. If its work can not be compared with the work of other divisions, why attempt to bring its salaries to a dead level with other divisions?

I do not wish to bolster up the division at the expense of any other division, and would not now make any comparisons had not disparaging comparisons been first made against it. But as a matter of fact this division has no more fourth-class clerks in proportion to the whole number employed than four other divisions of the same office.

As to the intelligent and discriminating revision of requisitions, I might have cited many stronger cases than the one I did. For instance, upon one occasion a collector of customs (Shieldsboro, Miss.) made a semiannual requisition for books and blanks, and of the books ordered 644 (56 different kinds) were withheld, and of the blanks 9,210 (73 different kinds), aggregating a total cost (and saving) of $1,382.53. The cost of the requisition when filled was $170.62. As an evidence that the pruning was an intelligent one, I would say that no protest was made against it.

Respectfully, yours,

SAMUEL ROADS, JR.,

Chief Division Stationery, Printing, and Blanks.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,
House of Representatives.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for Treasury Department: For Auditor, $4,000; Deputy Auditor, $2,500; one law clerk, $2,000; four chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; eighteen clerks of class 4, including confidential clerk to the Auditor; fifteen clerks of class 3; thirteen clerks of class 2; twenty clerks of class 1; twelve clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $900 each; three assistant messengers; and four laborers; in all, $134,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, after line 22, insert the following:

"On and after April 1, 1895, each master of a vessel arriving in the United States from a foreign port shall, immediately upon landing and before entering his vessel at the custom-house, mail to the Auditor for the Treasury Department, Washington, a true copy of the manifest of his vessel, and shall on entering his vessel make affidavit that he has mailed such copy and that the same is true and correct; and he shall also mail to the said Auditor a true copy of the corrected manifest filed on any post entry of his vessel. Any master who neglects or refuses to mail to the Auditor the required copy of the original or corrected manifest shall be subject to the same fines and penalties fixed by law for his failure to deliver the manifest of his vessel to the collector."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I desire to ask the gentleman if this applies to ports where there is a naval officer?

Mr. DOCKERY. It applies to all ports.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then I make the point of order against it. It is not necessary where there is a naval officer.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will amend the section so as to make it apply to ports where there is no naval officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this shall not apply to ports where there are naval officers.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the following additional amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, after the amendment last adopted, insert the following:

"For additional clerical force from April 1, 1895, to June 30, 1896, inclusive, for the liquidation of manifests of vessels and cars arriving in the United States from foreign countries with merchandise for consumption, namely, three clerks of class 1, three clerks at the rate of $1,000 per annum, and three clerks at the rate of $900 each; in all $11,625."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn-out and defaced rolls and vouchers in the Second Auditor's Office, $21,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 22, line 12, strike out "Second Auditor's Office" and insert in lieu thereof the words "office of the Auditor for the War Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for State and other Departments: For Auditor, $4,000; Deputy Auditor, $2,500; one law clerk, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; nine clerks of class 4; eleven clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 each; four clerks, at $900 each; two copyists; one messenger; and three laborers; in all, $32,720.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 31, line 18, strike out "nine" and insert "ten."
Same page, line 22, strike out "eighty-two thousand seven hundred" and insert "eighty-four thousand five hundred."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For increased force in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, made necessary by the act of August 23, 1894, imposing a tax on incomes:

For one statistician, $2,500; one head of division, $2,250; six clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; seven clerks, at $1,000 each; one messenger; in all, $30,500.

For one stamp agent, $1,000, and one counter, $900; in all, $2,500, the same to be reimbursed by the stamp manufacturers.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a motion in relation to the paragraphs just read.

Mr. DOCKERY. These paragraphs relate to the collection of the income tax.

Mr. DINGLEY. There are two or three other places in the bill where appropriations are made for the same general purpose, and I may state at this point that the expense of the officials for collecting the income tax is about half a million dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. Five hundred and eight thousand three hundred and ninety dollars.

Mr. RAY. That does not include all of the additional expense that will be made necessary by the law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Everything except $15,000 for printing, which is carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, as there is another provision in this bill relating to the same subject, I ask unanimous consent that these paragraphs relating to the force for collecting the income tax be passed over for the present, with the understanding that when we shall have reached another provision relating to the same subject one motion may be made to strike out both.

Mr. RAY. That will be satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Navigation: For Commissioner of Navigation, $3,600; two clerks of class 4; one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 2; four clerks of class 1; nine clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $25,850.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 9, page 40, after the word "four," the following: "Additional to one clerk designated as deputy commissioner, $200."

Mr. DOCKERY. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Superintendent of Immigration: For Superintendent of Immigration, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; and two clerks of class 1; in all, $3,400, the same to be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 44, strike out all of lines 9 to 14, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION.

"For Superintendent of Immigration, who shall hereafter be designated as Commissioner-General of Immigration, and in addition to his other duties shall have charge, under the Secretary of the Treasury, of the alien contract-labor laws, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; confidential clerk, $1,200; statistician and stenographer, with power to act as immigrant inspector, $1,800; a messenger and one assistant messenger; in all, $10,500; which, together with other expenses of regulating immigration, shall be paid from the permanent appropriations for expenses of regulating immigration: Provided, That hereafter special immigration inspectors, not to exceed three, may be detailed for duty in the Bureau at Washington: And provided further, That the same salaries for persons occupying the same positions as those above specified may be paid for the present fiscal year from said appropriation."

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that this amendment is offered in accordance with the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is offered after consultation with the Secretary and the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. How much does it increase the force?

Mr. DOCKERY. It does not increase it at all. The reorganization, however, proposed as a result of the legislation of the last sundry civil bill did increase the force; but that reorganization was not approved by the committee. I ask that the letter of the Secretary be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1895.

SIR: Under existing law no person in any of the Executive Departments can be employed unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided for by Congress.

Section 7 of an act approved March 3, 1881, provides that the office of Superintendent of Immigration is hereby created and established, whose salary shall be $4,000 per annum, payable monthly; he shall have a chief clerk at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and two first-class clerks.

No appropriation, however, was made to carry this act into effect, and under an opinion of the Attorney-General, dated April 15, 1891, the Department was authorized to pay their salaries out of the fund known as the "immigrant fund," derived from the head tax imposed upon aliens entering the United States, act of August 3, 1882. Subsequently, in an opinion dated October 19, 1891, the Attorney-General, in answer to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated October 10, 1891, says that "if, in your judgment, it is necessary so to do in order to properly regulate immigration, or to carry the acts relating thereto into full and effective execution, you are, in my opinion, authorized to appoint or designate a supervising inspector, or a special inspector, to perform such duties in connection with the service as you shall direct, and to serve at such place or places as will, in your judgment, best promote the efficient administration of the immigration inspection service. The appointee may properly be paid from the immigrant fund."

Under the above opinion special inspectors and other employees were appointed, and as the needs of the service demanded their number has been from time to time increased.

In an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, approved July 31, 1894, the following language appears:

"Office of the Superintendent of Immigration: For Superintendent of Immigration, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; two clerks of first class; in all $3,400, the same to be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses regulating immigration."

Here we have a direct appropriation by Congress for the service, and in view of which, in my opinion, the Bureau can not act further under the opinion of the Attorney-General referred to above; and it will now be necessary for Congress, if the present force employed is to be continued, to make direct appropriation therefor, said appropriation to be immediately available.

I attach hereto a list of the officers now employed in the service at Washington, who, in my opinion, are necessary to properly conduct the duties imposed under the immigration acts of March 3, 1891, and March 3, 1893, together with a rough draft of a bill which, if incorporated into law, will enable me to carry on the Bureau as it is now organized.

Should this appropriation, however, not be made immediately available, the officers now employed must be discharged and the efficiency of the Bureau greatly impaired.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The above letter expresses my opinion of the proper construction to be placed upon the laws therein discussed.

HON. ALEXANDER M. DOCKERY,
House of Representatives.

R. B. BOWLER, Comptroller.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of 303 additional deputy collectors, including stationery, said deputies to be employed in the same manner as now provided by law, and are necessary in order to carry into effect the act of August 23, 1894, imposing a tax on incomes, $408,800.

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $1,900,000.

For salaries and expenses of 10 additional revenue agents to be employed and paid in the same manner as now provided by law, the same being necessary to carry into effect and enforce the act of August 23, 1894, imposing a tax on incomes, $30,000.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph commencing on page 38, line 20, down to and including line 7 on page 39. Then, on page 47, the paragraph commencing with line 19 down to and including line 25 on that page; and, on page 48, commencing with line 4, down to and including line 9.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman's motion, I understand, includes all the provisions in relation to the force that is required to collect the income tax.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I notice by these paragraphs of the bill, which I have proposed to strike out, that there is an additional expense involved, if my calculation is accurate, of $477,690.

Mr. DINGLEY. The total amount is a little over one-half million of dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. Five hundred and eight thousand three hundred and ninety dollars is the exact amount.

Mr. RAY. Then a portion of that is carried in another bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes. This bill carries a total appropriation of $493,390, and there is a provision for printing in the sundry civil bill amounting to $15,000 more, making the total amount, as stated by the gentleman from Maine, $508,390.

Mr. RAY. That is the additional annual expense to the Government for the collection of the income tax?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct.

Mr. RAY. Now, does that estimate give all of the expense that will be involved in connection with this matter?

Mr. DOCKERY. The committee so understands.

Mr. DINGLEY. All that is estimated at the present time. But there is no doubt there will be a deficiency presented to the next Congress. It will cost considerably more than that.

Mr. RAY. Is there anything added for the additional expense in the various districts throughout the United States where these deputy collectors will operate?

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that the amount of the appropriation, $508,390, includes every dollar that the Department at the time regards as necessary to collect the income tax.

Mr. RAY. Including the deputies, additional traveling, printing, and incidental expenses of all kinds?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the Department estimate at this time. I do not know, of course, whether it is correct or not.

Mr. RAY. I would like to ask further if any estimate is made of the probable income that will be derived by the Government from the operation of this tax?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the statement was made—I do not remember whether officially or not, or whether before the committee or in the newspapers, but I remember to have seen it or heard it—that the estimated revenue to the Government would be probably thirty or forty million dollars.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think no statement was made before the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was not certain whether it appeared in evidence before the committee or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. I remember asking the Commissioner myself his estimate of the probable revenue to be derived from the tax, and his reply was that the statistics did not warrant an estimate at that time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no doubt the gentleman from Maine is correct.

Mr. RAY. Of course I have not had time to figure it out for myself; but I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill the number of new employees created by the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Fifteen clerks in the office of the Auditor for the Treasury Department and 303 deputy collectors and 10 revenue agents—special agents—as well as a statistical board in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I do not recollect the exact number of clerks there—33, I think.

Mr. DINGLEY. Three hundred and fifty-two officials are estimated for to collect this tax.

Mr. RAY. How many are located here?

Mr. DOCKERY. I printed the statement in the RECORD on yesterday, but I have no doubt the gentleman from Maine is correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. Thirty-nine are provided for in the office in the city of Washington and 313 elsewhere throughout the country, 303 being deputy collectors and 10 special revenue agents, making a whole force of 352 persons engaged in the collection of this tax and provided for in the appropriation bill at an expense, including the printing, of $508,000, in round numbers.

Mr. RAY. And there is no provision of law directing from where the additional force are to be appointed?

Mr. DINGLEY. None whatever.

Mr. RAY. That is within the discretion of the officials. They can be appointed wherever they think necessary?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAY. I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to press my motion to strike out. I made it more for the purpose of obtaining this information and having it appear of record in this connection than for any other purpose, and I therefore withdraw the motion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am obliged to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

Mint at Carson, Nev.: For superintendent, $3,000; for assayer, and melter and refiner, at $2,500 each; cashier, $2,000; chief clerk and bookkeeper, at $1,800 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and weigh clerk, at $1,500 each; in all, $18,100.

Mr. HULL. I desire some information in regard to this paragraph. This mint at Carson City is, as I understand it, simply an assay office of no greater dignity than the one at Boise City, Idaho, and I do not see any necessity for so large a force.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is the force recommended by the Director of the Mint and is the force required for the purpose of assaying, as the committee was informed.

Mr. HULL. They do nothing but assay there, I believe.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is all.

Mr. HULL. And yet you have a force here two or three times as great as that at Boise City, and larger than the force at Denver.

Mr. DOCKERY. We followed the exact estimates of the Director of the Mint; and this force has been greatly reduced during the current year.

Mr. HULL. It seems to me that for an assay office this appropriation is excessive.

I have no information personally—

Mr. DOCKERY. The committee, of course, have no technical knowledge upon the question. We have followed the recommendations of the Director of the Mint. If the gentleman proposes to offer an amendment—

Mr. HULL. I do not propose to offer an amendment. I simply call attention to the force here. It seems to me to be larger than any possible requirement of the office can warrant, and to my mind is a marked instance of extravagant appropriation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, if it is, the responsibility is on the shoulders of the Director of the Mint, not on the committee. We have simply followed the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to line 11, page 50, under the head, "Office of assistant treasurer at — Orleans." It should read "New Orleans;" and if there be no objection that word will be inserted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read to the bottom of line 2, page 56.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RETURNS OF INCOMES FOR THE YEAR 1894.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894.

Resolved, etc., That the time fixed by existing law for the rendering of income returns, to wit: "On or before the first Monday of March in every year" (section 35, act of August 28, 1894, and section 3173, Revised Statutes, as amended by section 34 of that act), is hereby extended, with reference only to returns of income for the year 1894, so that it shall be lawful to make such returns for that year on or before the 15th day of April, 1895.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia for the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. REED. I should like to understand what this is. It has never been brought before the Committee on Ways and Means, has it?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. This was passed unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means this morning.

Mr. REED. It was when we were not there.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. All the Republican members were present except the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. PAYNE. I was not there.

Mr. REED. My colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], does not know anything about it. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain it?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. It is simply a resolution, passed at the request of the Department, to extend the time from the 1st of March to the 15th of April, during which time returns under the income-tax law may be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia for the present consideration of this joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 828) granting a pension to Julia E. Lock, formerly widow of the late Gen. Daniel McCook;

A bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Henry Halteman;

A bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine P. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, deceased;

A bill (S. 2433) to amend and extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the opening of certain abandoned military reservations, and for other purposes," approved August 23, 1894;

A bill (S. 2736) for the immediate relief of the suffering poor of the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 269) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of Kalamazoo River from Lake Michigan to Saugatuck.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

The following report of a committee was handed in at the Clerk's desk and referred to its appropriate Calendar, as indicated below:

EAST WASHINGTON BELT LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC HEALTH, ETC., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a short petition relating to the health and public improvement of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent to print the petition relating to the health of the District. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1895.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned were appointed a committee by a mass meeting of citizens held at the Shoreham on Saturday, February 2, and were directed to urge upon Congress the necessity of some early provision for the extension of the sewerage system and the improvement of the water supply in the District of Columbia.

The subjects referred to have been long under consideration by Congress and careful investigation has been made regarding them, not only by the municipal officers of this city, but by the committees on the District of Columbia in both the House and Senate, who have made elaborate reports to both Houses urging prompt and favorable action, realizing the imperative needs of the proper facilities for sewerage as well as absolute purification of the supply of water for this District.

The seriousness of the situation, so far as sewers are concerned, was recognized by President Harrison, and a board of sanitary engineers of the highest prominence and character was appointed by authority of Congress, to whom they reported in 1890. From that date to this the substance of the report has been constantly brought to the attention of the proper authorities, but without resulting in any action.

The necessity for action regarding the improvement of the water supply has been stated by the Chief of Engineers, and has also been demonstrated by the lack of water during the past few weeks.

That there has not been a greater mortality in the District of Columbia, in view of the contamination of the water, as well as defective sewerage, seems remarkable.

The national capital, where so many citizens from all parts of the country live during part of the year at least, is one of the most exposed so far as typhoid fever and other kindred diseases are concerned.

Pure water alone should be furnished and there should be an abundant supply, the use of which should be encouraged rather than restricted.

No private corporation or individual would be allowed to furnish a city with an insufficient supply of water, or where there was the least suspicion of danger that it was in any way polluted or tainted so as to endanger human health or life by the propagation or extension of disease.

No matter how great the supply of water may be, it can not be used to advantage or with safety without adequate sewerage.

Congress absolutely controls the revenues of this city. When it is not in session no officer can entertain an appeal involving the appropriation of funds. The taxpayers are compelled to meet charges for maintaining the municipal government and yet are absolutely powerless as to the expenditure of their contributions for this purpose. The only source of relief, therefore, is found in Congress.

This city has had a phenomenal growth within the last quarter of a century, and although wonderful improvements have been made, still they have not been rapid enough in the directions indicated to meet the demands of health and comfort. Thousands of new residents have located here from all quarters of the country, and are now looking for protection to the intelligent and liberal action of Congress, for they can look nowhere else.

There can be no question that any proper expenditure of money for furnishing every modern appliance for comfort and health would meet with the unqualified and vigorous support of a very large majority of our taxpayers.

So far as possible the urgency of speedy action has been set forth by the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, whose president has been most active and efficient in expressing the views of this body for many months past to both the Senate and House of Representatives, and also by the Board of Trade, an organization composed of more than 500 leading and representative citizens of the District of Columbia, and among them a large number of the heaviest taxpayers.

This committee, therefore, is not communicating any new information regarding the needs of the District or the dangers which attend the postponement of prompt action for relief. We do, however, feel that steps should be taken at once to remedy the dangerous condition and to remove causes which are liable at any time to result in a largely increased death rate and bring terrible disaster upon the national capital.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN M. HARLAN.
W. J. BOARDMAN.
J. M. SCHOFIELD.
JAMES G. BERRET.
CROSBY S. NOYES.
FRAN'S COLTON.
JOHN S. BILLINGS.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 5603) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TUCKER, for to-day, on account of sickness.

HOURLY OF MEETING ON MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the House meet at half past 11 on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that the House meet at 11.30 o'clock on Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin submits a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1890, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Add as a new section:

"SEC. 6. That the foregoing provisions of this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof and consent thereto by a majority of all the male adult Indians now located or residing upon the reservation, which acceptance shall be at once obtained under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. S. HOLMAN,
THOS. LYNCH,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES K. JONES,
W. N. ROACH,
R. F. PETTIGREW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Let the statement of the House conferees be read.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment numbered 1, page 1, lines 7 and 8: The words "disapproved and" stricken out as surplusage.

Amendment numbered 2, page 2, section 2, line 1: The words "ninety days" stricken out and "six months" inserted.

Amendment numbered 3, page 2, section 2, line 9: Strike out all after the word "entitled," down to and including the word "purposes," in line 12, and insert: "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated band of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same."

This amendment simply perfects the title of the bill.

Amendment numbered 4: On page 2, section 2, line 14, after the word "Indians," insert: "Provided, That Indians taking allotments as herein provided shall retain their interest in all tribal property."

Amendment numbered 5: Page 3, section 4, line 1, strike out "ninety days" and insert "six months."

Amendment numbered 6: Page 3, section 4, line 11, after the word "no," insert "homestead," and add a new section, to be numbered section 6, as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the foregoing provisions of this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof, and consent thereto, by a majority of all the male adult Indians now located or residing on the reservation, which acceptance shall be at once obtained, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The effect of this amendment is to stay all proceedings under this act until approved by the tribe.

W. S. HOLMAN,
THOS. LYNCH,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

THE LATE HON. MYRON B. WRIGHT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the second Saturday in February, 1895, beginning at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, be set apart for eulogies on the life and services of Hon. Myron B. Wright, late a Representative from the Fifteenth district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the resolutions I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Myron B. Wright, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business be now suspended, that his associates may be able to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the House shall, at the close of these ceremonies, stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, in the busy hours of a closing Congress again we pause to turn the leaves of memory and pay fraternal tribute to one who was present in his seat at the adjournment of our last session, but who before we reconvened had left us forevermore. He was in the prime of manhood, with every expectation of life, was filling a useful and honorable career, and his future was bright and promising. The sudden death of such an one is a rude shock to strong men and appalling to surviving friends, even though death itself can have no terrors if it is but an awakening of the mortal into immortality.

The Fifteenth district of Pennsylvania—Bradford, Wyoming, Susquehanna, and Wayne counties—was not prepared for the death of its Congressman on the 13th of November last, and greatly mourns his loss. Although ailing with throat trouble for a year past, so serious termination of his illness was not expected. While seeking restoration of health in Canada, he was elected for the fourth time last November by a largely increased majority despite absence from his district during the campaign.

Myron B. Wright was notably successful in all his undertakings. Nominally the cashier of the First National Bank of Susquehanna, to which position he successively rose from a clerkship, he was, in fact, the bank itself. He was largely interested in the manufacture of wood alcohol and acids, from which enterprise he amassed a large fortune. His political career was marked by the same successful characteristics as his business life. When first nominated for Congress, in 1888, he had never held office, except as school director, and was not even well known throughout his own county, although born, reared, and always a resident of it, while to the other three counties he was almost a stranger. But the Fifteenth district learned to appreciate his qualities of leadership, and in knowing him realized his usefulness and loved and swore by him. At the outset of his Congressional aspirations it was supposed he merely wanted perhaps the honor of a single term, or the regulation two terms at most. But under his influence and direction the hitherto discordant elements in the district became harmonious and he was honored as no Congressman from the Wilmet district since the days of Grow, before the war.

In his first—the Fifty-first—Congress he immediately took rank as a valued adviser in tariff legislation, and in consequence there arose between Wright and McKinley an intimacy which ripened into the closest friendship. It is characteristic of his generous nature that subsequently, when Governor McKinley suffered financial ruin through others, Myron B. Wright was one of a few moneyed friends who came to the great protectionist's relief by paying all his obligations, saving Mrs. McKinley's own estate and the Governor's personal credit. Mr. Wright was a close friend of Senator QUAY, whose attention he first attracted by the thorough work he did for Blaine in 1884 throughout the southern tier of New York and his liberal personal expenditures for the purpose. No one in the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation was personally more popular than he, while his friendships were equally strong with colleagues in other sections.

Myron B. Wright was in the zenith of manhood, 47 years of age, and while he has left a record and pleasant memories unattainable by many men of equal advantages whose years might double his, the thought is uppermost at this time, what a loss is a man of such promise! To him the accumulation of money was valued only as a means of doing good; he was generosity and honor personified, and many a recipient of his open-heartedness will cherish his memory in sorrow. Although without advantages of a liberal education and with no pretense to public speaking, during his career in Congress as a thinker, a student, and a writer he developed an aptitude for his surroundings and produced several excellent speeches and open letters expressing opinions upon public affairs which attracted much favorable attention and commendation, notably his reply to the sugar planters' appeal from Louisiana.

Mr. Wright owned his residence in Washington, and spent much of his time here during recesses of Congress, attending to the interests of his constituents. His predecessors, Jadwin and Bunell, were slaves to their district, especially in pension matters, but Wright eclipsed even their record in this respect—not an easy task. His summers of late years were largely spent on the St. Lawrence, among the beautiful Thousand Islands, where he entertained in princely manner in his own cottage, his private steam launch, etc. He had scarcely been a resident of his district for six years, and yet with each year he had grown steadily in the esteem and affection of his constituents. The Fifteenth district will miss him, his colleagues in Congress will miss him, and his large circle of valued acquaintances and many friends everywhere will miss him and mourn his untimely demise.

Who is this grim visitant that comes to our dwelling place? His mien is sinister, his countenance forbidding, his eyes are sad and somber. At his approach our flowers lose their fragrance, the air its freshness, our very skies their brilliancy. He comes and our happy laughter is changed into inconsolable tears; he comes and our joyous apparel is cast aside—we clothe us in the garb of grief. He wears the mantle of destruction; his glance is that of the conqueror; his lips are silent. And yet to some he appears with the glad look of an expectant lover; to some he appears as the harbinger of rest, as the angel of charity; he brings a gift—the peace of God which passeth all understanding. It is Death. It is Death, uncontrollable, insatiable, and inexorable, who has taken from among us a mark that has shone earnest and steadfast as a beacon light of example to those who love the precepts of manliness and virtue, and as a pillar of ominous cloud to those who love them not.

It is sad for us to know that never again we shall behold that genial face, that look of friendly welcome; that never again we shall feel the warm clasp of his hand, whose firm and kindly pressure betokened the singleness and sincerity of his character. And it is sad for him to pass from a world where its noblest and its fairest delighted to honor him—from a world that gazed from the laurels that marked his brow but yesterday to those even fairer ones which surely awaited his future. Yet can we grieve that he roams—as must so good a man—the halls of everlasting light; that he gazes with the eyes of divine content not upon the dingy beauties of human life, but upon those mansions whose walls in close unutterable happiness and eternal rest! Ours is the loss. Peace, brother, farewell!

Mr. CAUSEY. Mr. Speaker, after a brief illness Myron B. Wright, a Representative from the Fifteenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania, died at Trenton, Canada, whither he had gone in search of health, on November 13, 1894. In the prime of life, just when his sterling qualities were making him conspicuous among his fellow-men, "God's finger touched him, and he slept."

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that in my humble way I must weave some little garland to the memory of my departed friend, even though it be intertwined with those heart throbs and sighs which find their readiest expression chiefly in tears.

My first acquaintance with Mr. Wright began when I entered Congress, and during my first term there sprang up a warm and sincere friendship between us that continued until he was called to another world. It is almost impossible to describe how the friendships in Congress are formed. They are like those of school and college life, it seems to me. Almost imperceptibly that between our deceased brother and myself grew. He was a warm-hearted, sincere, genuine man. He received no especial educational advantages in early life but by sheer industry, honesty, and perseverance, rose step by step from an humble position to one of affluence and prominence. He had a just pride in his early achievements, but was as modest as a woman, and only after long intimacy could he be induced to speak of his success in life.

One of his well-marked characteristics was his generosity and kindness. He delighted in making all around him happy, and never seemed to enjoy himself more than when he was entertaining his friends. His acts of charity were many and always done so unostentatiously that he really made the recipients feel that they were doing him a kindness in accepting them.

At his funeral I saw the carpenter and the blacksmith, as well as the banker and the merchant, as they looked on the bier, shed bitter tears for him who had been the great strength of the town. More than once the expression was heard, while the whole town was in mourning, "Myron B. Wright was the friend of all that was good."

In the death of Mr. Wright his family lost a devoted husband and loving father, whose presence made home supremely happy; the churches a faithful supporter; his neighbors a kind and courteous friend, whose warm heart and cordial hand always gave them sincere welcome; his district and State an able and industrious Representative, who was true to every trust.

He has gone from the cares and trials of this life to the crowning glories of eternity, but his memory will live in the hearts of his friends and of the people he represented so faithfully and so well.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, three hundred and fifty-six men were elected to the membership of this House. During the two years of its existence eleven of these have died, and of these eleven more than one-third were from the State of Pennsylvania. Four times has the grim messenger come to our delegation with his sad summons. Four times has this House paused in its proceedings and laid aside its ordinary business to pay becoming tributes of respect to the memory of Pennsylvania's dead. The sturdy and strong Mutchler, the genial and generous Lilly, the amiable and attentive O'Neill, the modest and manly Wright, all men of high character, of distinguished services, of earnest purpose, and of winning qualities, have gone on before, and the places that knew them here shall know them no more forever. Pennsylvania is stricken and mourns, but the country shares in her loss, and the Congress of all the States joins in her expressions of sorrow and her tributes of respect. These men were Representatives of single districts and from but one State, but they were lawmakers for the whole of a great nation. No district nor State lines bounded their patriotism nor limited their loyalty, and their examples and their memories are part of the treasure of a common country.

Death is seldom welcome. We shrink from its cold touch. Its summons seems never kind, its presence never timely. We recognize the messenger of infinite power and infinite love, and we bow to its decrees, but to us they are still inscrutable. Why the nation must lose an experienced and faithful legislator, his constituents a trusted and efficient Representative, his family a loved father and husband, still in the flower of vigorous manhood, no one can understand. A mission is apparently unfinished, a work but partly done, a life quenched at the time of its greatest usefulness. Why is it? Only the voice of Omniscience can answer.

Myron Wright was my colleague and friend for four years, and yet I came to know him thoroughly and fully only during the later weeks and months of his service here. A common and special interest in certain features of the revenue legislation of last session brought us much together and gave me exceptional opportunities to learn the depth and the breadth of his mind and heart. He was quiet and unpretentious, seldom mingling in debate, never obtruding himself upon the public gaze, but he had a broad grasp of public questions and an intelligent comprehension of pending measures, and was always earnest and positive in his opinions and convictions and frank and outspoken in their expression.

He loved his country, was patriotic in all his impulses; but the interests of his constituents were his first care, and for them he labored with an earnestness and zeal that knew no weariness or flagging. He enjoyed, as he deserved to enjoy, their fullest confidence. From the historic district of Wilmot and Grow he was sent for three successive terms, and when he died he had been re-nominated without opposition and reelected by a greatly increased majority for a fourth term.

He was conscientious in the performance of duty, true to his word, true to his friends, true to himself. He was frank by nature, sincere and earnest in word and act. As a citizen he was enterprising and public-spirited, living close to the people among whom he was born and always had his home, mingling with them in their everyday life, sympathizing with their feelings and sharing in their aspirations. As a business man he was straightforward in his methods, honorable and upright in his dealings, energetic and successful in his enterprises. In his family he was affectionate, kind, and true, the light of their life, the guide of their action.

Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt no statement of the events of Mr. Wright's life, no detailed analysis of his character or achievements. That is the privilege of those who had known him longer if not better than I did, but I could not refrain on this occasion from adding my tribute of affectionate admiration of his many manly qualities, of appreciative respect for his character, his life and his work, of sincere sympathy for his widowed wife doubly bereaved in the loss of husband and son, for the orphaned boy who loses by the same cruel blow a father's guidance and a brother's companionship.

This House loses a valued member, the nation a faithful servant, his constituents a watchful, zealous, and true Representative, you and I a loved friend, but we can hardly appreciate the darkness and sorrow and desolation which came into the life of wife and son, of brother, father, and friends, when the light of that life went out in that foreign land. We can not lighten their burden, we can not lessen their sorrow, we can but tender in proper terms the condolence of associates who loved him and who sympathize with them.

Mr. Speaker, if I would sum up in a single sentence my estimate of the life and work of Myron B. Wright and grave upon his monument a fitting epitaph, I could not do better than quote the words of another:

He has done the work of a true man.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, death comes to all despite every tear that love may shed and every prayer that breaking hearts may force toward heaven. The world has grown old enough to view with some philosophy the death of the young and the old, but no human wisdom or faith, no hope or love, has ever yet fully reconciled us to the death of a friend in the very noon-tide of a successful and hopeful life; and we, his friends, stand to-day at the bier of Myron B. Wright overwhelmed by the sense of our loss. While the records of the proceedings of this body show much that he has done for his district, which he loved so well, and for his country, which he loved more, tempts me to enter into a full history of his service here, I feel constrained to speak of him as a man and a friend, leaving a review of his public service to abler hands than mine.

In my eight years' service in this distinguished body I have known with more or less intimacy almost every man serving in this House, and among them I have never found a truer or a kinder soul than that which animated our departed friend. With a heart as wide as man's universe, a faith as broad as the promises of God, he felt constrained in his benefactions by no creed, but gave freely to every deserving cause and rejoiced in every good work and kindly deed of man. I have never known a man of broader charity than he. There was nothing narrow or proscriptive in his nature. In all my intercourse with him I never heard a criticism of any human being's conduct fall from his lips. Let this not be considered as want of strength in him. I know he felt as strongly as you or I and would not hesitate to rebuke wrong whenever and wherever he met it.

I trust I may be pardoned here in alluding to an incident somewhat personal and recounted only to throw a glint of light on the hospitality of his character. In the Fifty-first Congress several friends of his concluded to go the Thousand Islands in the St. Lawrence River on a fishing excursion and he was, of course, the central figure and heart of the company. He came to me and in his inexpressibly cordial and sweet way asked me to join the party, to which I readily consented, being myself fond of the sport and well acquainted with the members of the party. Transportation was provided by Mr. Wright; boats, boatmen, and bait were likewise provided by him, each of us thinking that he was keeping account for settlement when our tour was ended. We never saw any item of that account. He laughingly said he had lost it, and no importunity could force him to take a cent from any one of us. He loved that beautiful river, and loved to take his friends to the sweet delights of its placid bosom. He was a rare good fisherman. I remember few days of more pleasure than his bright eyes have given me, when sitting opposite him in his boat, observing him as he watched his trolling spoon for a rise of the mighty muskellunge.

Myron B. Wright was a lover of God and nature. The deep forest gave him inspiration; the roar of ocean was music to him; the unwrinkled waters of the clear river was his delight. Every blossoming flower, singing bird, and leafing tree touched a sweet chord in his loving nature.

With all this tenderness was mixed a strength of purpose, a determination of will which raised the young school teacher from poverty to affluence, from obscurity to a prominent place on the floor of this House. Rarely have I seen such a combination of strength and loveliness united in a character.

He never made a brow look dark,
Nor caused a tear but when he died.

The shock of his death came not alone to his devoted wife, for he had scarcely passed the river when his son, in whom he took great and just pride, followed him into the great beyond, the double tragedy leaving a void in a happy home that even time's effacing hand can never hide.

As has been well said lately on this floor, "He is not gone, Mr. Speaker. All the developments and achievements of the future, like the coral isles in the Pacific, become beautiful because they are based upon the innumerable mausoleums which we help to make—that foundation on which the glory, the prosperity, and the immortality of all that is good will rest forever."

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, the melancholy satisfaction of paying tribute to the virtues of one who was in his life, as citizen and as Representative, an example meriting emulation, unites in this instance with the warmth of a high personal regard. Memory fondly lingers over those who held our friendship by the noble attributes of gentle courtesy, steadfast fidelity, and unfailing helpfulness, which were so richly manifested by our late colleague, the Hon. Myron B. Wright.

Unacquainted until a very few years since, a single meeting with him established a feeling of companionship as if of long existence and subsequent association increased its fervor and added to it the respect due his keen insight, sound judgment, and ripe experience, while his cordial welcome as a member of this body and generous proffer of assistance in acquiring familiarity with its methods of procedure and those of the Executive Departments of the Government won my lasting gratitude.

That he was of genial nature and the soul of honor all who met him felt; of patriotic fidelity to public duty his associates in this body, especially those of the committees on which he served, well knew; and of zealous devotion to the welfare of his constituents the latter had convincing proof in attention given to their wants and the achievement of gratifying results. If his remote predecessor, the distinguished author of the Wilmot Proviso, will be remembered for devotion to a national cause, his memory will be enshrined in the gratitude of his constituents for the added reason of unusual efforts for the success of their humbler personal interests.

On the comparatively few occasions when he spoke in this Chamber it was after careful preparation and with thorough knowledge of the subjects treated, in a logical manner, and with rich illustrations and cogent reasoning, giving to his addresses a permanent value and leaving them a storehouse of information to the student of political economy and general public affairs.

His success in the business and political world illustrates the possibilities for the American youth who combines with honesty and industry intelligence, enterprise, and courage. From an humble clerkship he rose to the position of cashier of the leading bank of his town, and was the originator and directing spirit of a number of important manufacturing and commercial enterprises; and in a district where the principle of rotation among counties in the selection of Representative in this body had long prevailed he was thrice reelected without controversy respecting the nomination.

Removed from among us by that grim reaper who harvests from every age and condition, our sorrow at the loss is softened by the fact stated in the language of the ritual of a fraternal order of which our lamented colleague was a member:

The memory of his virtues lingers in our remembrance, and reflects its shining luster beyond the portals of the tomb. The earthen vase which had contained precious odors will lose none of its fragrance though the clay be broken and shattered.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, on leaving my room this morning to come to this Chamber my eyes turned, as they had turned very often before, to a picture hanging on the wall. In the foreground were depicted the thoughtful, kindly, animated faces of Senator PROCTOR of Vermont, Senator GIBSON of Maryland, and Senator CALL of Florida. In a modest place in a group in the background of the picture was a faithful delineation of the compact figure and the open, manly face of Myron B. Wright of Pennsylvania.

It was the representation of a joint committee of the Senate and House instructed by Congress in 1893 to visit Cuba to examine into the matter of immigration in its possible relation to threatened infectious diseases. It was my great good fortune to be one of that joint commission, and I but voice the thought of every member of it when I say that the genial personality and the frank and hearty comradeship of Myron B. Wright formed most potential factors in making the entire journey most pleasurable. A previously existing friendship, already warm and cordial in character, was strengthened and cemented by the close companionship born of this journey.

We can all of us readily comprehend that in the Fifteenth Pennsylvania district, as in every other district represented on this floor, there are very many able and influential men properly ambitious of political distinction. It was creditable alike to Mr. Wright and the constituency that sent him here that this modest, unassuming gentleman, from whom all self-seeking was far removed as the earth from the sky, should have been elected and thereafter, as we have been reminded to-day, thrice reelected to hold the commission of his home people in this Chamber.

He was always an accessible, patient, laborious, conscientious Representative, and the large and important interests of his district were during his entire service here absolutely safe in his keeping.

He had no overweening ambition in the direction of exalted statesmanship. His political faith was firmly founded, and he was quite content to accept the traditions and teachings of his party without attempting to devise new policies or novel methods of governmental action. While he stood broadly upon the platform of Republicanism, his manly, genial nature made for him strong and devoted friends on the Democratic side of this Chamber. We of the opposition join with saddened hearts to-day in the expression of sincerest sympathy with his broken home circle and of deepest sorrow at the severance of the ties which bound him to us.

Myron B. Wright had all those manly qualities and gentle virtues that from all time have commended their possessors to the warm and tender regard of their fellow-men.

His faithfulness, his modesty, his kindness of heart—these were the attributes that brought his fellow-members to him and held them to him even as with bonds of steel. Above all things else he was faithful, and this one quality, faithfulness—involving devotion to duty and fidelity to friends—most surely forms the noblest attribute in the character of any man.

As Lowell grandly summarizes it in his Image Breaker—

Wealth and rule slip down with fortune as her wheel turns round;
He who keeps his faith, he only can not be disowned.
Little was a change of station, loss of life or crown,
But the wreck were past retrieving if the man fell down.

Through all his life the man whose memory we are met to-day to honor kept his faith with himself and with all mankind. In the performance of any duty, even though the slightest, he never fell and never even faltered.

Not with his eyes lowered downward to the earth, but with his gaze turned steadfastly to the skies, Myron B. Wright passed onward to his death, leaving behind him the record of a public and a private life each alike unspotted and unstained.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, to do proper honor to the memory and pay proper tribute to the labors of an active, earnest, painstaking, and conscientious member of this honorable and distinguished branch of the American Congress is a privilege I would not seek and a duty that I would not approach without hesitation and solicitude. The people of the great State of Pennsylvania stand with us to-day in doing honor to the memory, talents, energy, and industry of my late colleague, Hon. Myron B. Wright. "What a man does for others, not what they do for him, gives him immortality," says that great and distinguished statesman, Daniel Webster. And it is well written by another that—

He who loves his fellow-men the best,
His name on Heaven's immortal scroll leads all the rest.

In the light of these truisms and by this rule of the measuring of life's success, the success of my late distinguished colleague, Myron B. Wright, stands like a tower, and his memory to his people in the light of his unselfishness and his labor for others is like a sweet perfume, and his honesty, purity, and integrity stand in as bold prominence as do his native hills of northern Pennsylvania.

It was during our brief months of vacation that the never-failing and vigilant seeker after men overtook him, and our remembrance of his devotion to duty recalls to mind as but yesterday how faithfully he represented his district and State in all that pertained to its welfare and prosperity as he understood it; and how broad he made his platform of duty and of right; how deeply he cultivated and always maintained a high sense of honor and fidelity to his country. No personal interest or cause had weight with him when duty pointed in another direction. His delightful companionship, his social and friendly disposition and intercourse so endeared him to his fellow-members and to all who knew him that his death was more felt, and created more than an ordinary vacancy. In this busy Hall where all is life and energy it is rarely that the dropping out of a single member would be missed, yet in the death of our friend all who ever came in contact with him can not but miss his friendly face, his stalwart form, and the cordial greeting that characterized his intercourse with all of his fellow-members.

It is said that death seeks a shining mark, and this has been truly verified in the death of our friend, as none upon this side of the Chamber was more truly loved than he. To those of us who knew the affliction from which he suffered in the days immediately preceding the adjournment of our second session, and recollecting the solicitude exhibited by him for the interest of his district and State, and how faithfully he labored in protecting the same during the last days of the session, we can not find words sufficient to express our admiration of his devotion to duty; and when remonstrated with on account of his health and failing strength he answered, "My people expect me to care for them when I am here," and afterwards when upon the floor of the Senate in the performance of the same duty, he expressed the same thought to a fellow-member after being most earnestly entreated to first consider himself. Self was not a part of our friend's life—devotion to duty and to successfully labor for others was his daily, yea, hourly, care.

It was scarcely thought that so soon we would be called upon to mourn his departure upon that journey from which none ever returns; that journey which so many dread, but which to our friend exhibited no terrors. He entered the dark valley without fears or doubts. Yet Mr. Speaker, such is the uncertainty of human life—to-day alive, to-morrow forever silent. Surely our days are as the grass of the field, and our deeds alone are left to speak for us. How proudly we can point to the deeds of our friend, and in the light of them and of his many acts of kindness we realize that we have lost one of our noblest and choicest spirits and the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a distinguished statesman of broad mind, honest action, and pure and noble purposes, and his people whom he loved with such fervor and served with zeal and fidelity have lost a most faithful and devoted friend and Representative.

Said one of his neighbors, in writing of him:

Myron B. Wright was in the prime of manhood, 47 years of age, and while he has left a record and pleasant memories unattainable by many men of equal advantages whose years might double his, the thought is uppermost at this time what a loss is a man of such promise. To him the accumulation of money was valued only as a means of doing good; he was generosity and honor personified, and many a recipient of his open-heartedness will cherish his memory in sorrow. Although without advantages of a liberal education and with no pretense to public speaking, his career in Congress as a thinker, a student, and writer developed an aptitude for his surroundings and produced several excellent speeches and open letters expressing opinions upon public affairs which attracted much favorable attention.

Says another of his career:

Mr. Wright's career as a legislator, like that which marked his private business life, was brilliant and successful and characterized by inherent fidelity. His growing popularity among his constituents in the Fifteenth district, by whom he was reelected to Congress for a fourth term a few days previous to his death, is best shown by the increased majority given him over that received by him in the contest of 1892. In 1892 he received 4,555 plurality in the district; in 1894, 8,150—a gain of 3,616. This certainly may be considered a flattering compliment as well as a verdict of popular approval of his record as a Congressman by the intelligent voters composing the district.

And said his pastor, in his eloquent and impressive sermon eulogistic of our friend, commenting upon his personal traits:

Myron B. Wright was the pride of his Congressional district. On November 6 he was elected for the fourth time to represent the old Wilmet district, and in honoring him the district honored itself, for a man more faithful to what he believed to be his duty to his constituents was not to be found. And how much his laborious efforts for others may have contributed to his early death I am not prepared to say; but this much I do know, that night after night, week after week, and month after month this faithful servant of the people toiled for others; that no poor soldier appealed to him in vain. The defenders of his country's flag and honor were his special care.

One of the strongest characteristics of Myron B. Wright was his friendship. When he did you a favor it was with so much grace that it almost seemed that you had conferred a favor upon him in permitting him to do it.

Standing here to-day, I can sorrowfully voice the cry that comes up from all these interested hearts, why is it? No human being has the power to answer but He who is infinite in love, mercy, and compassion, who alone can tell, hides the answer in the depths of His own infinite purposes, and we bow before His will and say, "He doeth all things well!"

Our friend was a typical American, devoted to his country and its institutions; he loved them as he loved his life. He was like many other distinguished men of this great nation—he rose from the ranks of the people, and was honored by the people as one of them who developed traits of leadership, and when thus honored he was found in every respect worthy, and prided himself in keeping in touch with the people from whom he came. They knew his generous heart and noble instincts, and he never failed to respond to a worthy cause or a proper call. Thus was his public life.

Of his home life, all those who entered its sacred and loved precincts found happiness, contentment, and genuine hospitality, enjoying a fair share of the wealth of this world as the result of his own labors. He was without ostentation. We dare not venture to further comment here, nor bring to mind to wounded hearts the poignancy of a loved wife and mother's grief not only for the loved husband, but also a stalwart son, who, in his devotion to his father, was carried away by the same dread disease, and they were both entombed on the same day side by side.

It is pleasant to know, Mr. Speaker—

That not . . . with life's precarious fire
The immortal ties of nature shall expire.
These shall resist the triumph of decay,
When time is o'er and worlds have passed away.
Cold in the dust the perished heart may lie,
But that which warmed it once shall never die;
That spark, unburied in its mortal frame,
With living light eternal, and the same
Shall beam on joy's interminable years,
Unveiled by darkness—unassuaged by tears.

Our friend died absent from home in search of health and strength, attended by his beloved wife and his two sons, the eldest of whom died within a day or two after his loved and honored father. It was, however, his privilege and pleasure to receive, a few days before his death, the pleasing and gratifying news of his being for the fourth time chosen by the people as their honored Representative to this House. The large concourse of friends and distinguished citizens from all parts of his great State present at the last sad rites of his funeral attest and prove the affection and esteem in which he was held by those who knew him best. And in the presence of his neighbors and a vast concourse of sympathizing friends he was buried on one of the hills overlooking the beautiful waters of the Susquehanna that he so much loved and admired in his lifetime.

We can well say of him:

He had run his bright career
And served men nobly, and acceptance found,
And borne to light, and right, his witness high,
What can such better crave than to die
And wait the issue sleeping under ground.

To our friend death had no terrors, and with the record of a useful and honored life behind him he went forth into immortality, the life that is to come, with a certainty of receiving a reward for his devotion to duty and a rest from his labors.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, one of the first men that I learned to know in Congress was Myron B. Wright.

He was not an excitable man, nor was he given to much imagination. He always took as a foundation for his reasonings a fact instead of a theory. He was practical in all that he said and did. He did not aim to be witty, nor did he aspire to oratory, and yet the people who knew him would rely on his judgment and follow his leadership. He came here to represent his district faithfully, honestly, and sensibly, and he did it in each particular. The district was never better represented and never more closely looked after.

He impressed you at once as a practical, candid, truthful man. People would not lie to him, for they saw at once that if they did he would not believe them. He was shrewd, cautious, and conservative, but once got his confidence and he was as confiding and trustful as a child, but he never was deceived, and never trusted anyone who did not deserve it.

He knew human nature, and knew what men would do under given circumstances. He knew what his people expected him to do, and his course in Congress was very satisfactory to those who sent him here. He was a much safer and better Representative than many more brilliant men. He rightly understood that he was not sent here so much to make speeches as to vote the will of his constituents. He was invaluable on committees, where the Congressman principally does his work. He had no difficulty in finding which was the right side of every question, and his vote was always on that side.

He was a stalwart in all his public acts, and never dodged or hesitated to assume their responsibilities. Being a practical business man, he soon became a successful politician, not in the sense in which it is sometimes understood, but in the sense of a leader and guide among his party friends.

He was genial, kind-hearted, and popular among his colleagues. He had as many friends in the House as any man who ever sat in it for the same length of time.

Such a man was Myron B. Wright as I understood him. His death was a shock to me. I did not know that he was ill until I heard that he had passed away. Cut off in the prime of life, his untimely death illustrates the frail tenure by which we hold. In the midst of action, busy with plans for the future and partly matured plans of the past, he is suddenly and unexpectedly summoned; no excuse, no plea, would palliate the stern messenger.

It seems hard that a man like him, just in the height of his usefulness to his family and the people of his district, should be called; and yet death comes quite frequently in this way.

We, his colleagues, on this day set apart to him, can all faithfully say that in his death we have lost a worthy coworker, a valiant comrade, and a dearly loved friend.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, during this Congress with short intervals the funeral dirge has reminded us that—

The battle of our life is brief,
The alarm, the struggle, the relief;
Then sleep we side by side.

Myron B. Wright, our departed colleague, was elected four successive times, the last one just a week before his death, to represent the Congressional district in the State of Pennsylvania composed of the counties of Bradford, Susquehanna, Wayne, and Wyoming. The two largest counties of his district, Bradford and Susquehanna, with Tioga County, for more than a third of a century preceding 1860 had composed a Congressional district whose people in the stirring political events of that period acted no inconspicuous part in the history of the country.

The year Mr. Wright was born David Wilmot, then representing that district, offered an amendment to a bill pending in this House appropriating $2,000,000, to be placed at the disposal of the President, for concluding a peace with the Republic of Mexico of the war then pending by reason of the annexation of Texas. The proviso was adopted in this House by the unanimous vote of the Representatives from the nonslaveholding States, with three exceptions. But the bill thus amended was defeated in the Senate. Mr. Wilmot's amendment provided—

That as an express and fundamental condition to the acquisition of any territory from the Republic of Mexico by the United States by virtue of any treaty which may be negotiated between them, and to the use by the Executive of the moneys herein appropriated, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall ever exist in any part of said territory except for crime, whereof the party shall first be duly convicted.

This amendment has gone into history as the Wilmot proviso. The congressional action on this question was the beginning of the third epoch of what is recognized as the specific periods of slavery agitation in our country. The first was the adoption of Jefferson's proviso in the Ordinance of 1787, which prohibited slavery in all the territory lying northwest of the Ohio River. The second was the passage of the act of March 6, 1820, which prohibited slavery in all the territory of the Louisiana purchase north of the parallel of 36° 30' north latitude except what was in the State of Missouri. This act is known as the Missouri compromise. The third period was the adoption of this proviso near the close of the first session of the Twenty-ninth Congress, in 1846, and which culminated eight years later, on the 26th day of May, 1854, in the passage of the Kansas and Nebraska bill, which repealed the restriction on the extension of slavery in the act of March 6, 1820. This was the opening prelude to the mightiest conflict of arms in the history of the race. It caused the dismemberment and dissolution of old political parties and the formation of new ones. Within three months after the repeal of the Missouri compromise the first action anywhere of organized political parties was taken in this old Wilmot district for combining the political elements which a little later coalesced throughout the nonslaveholding States into the Republican party, whose banner, inscribed with "Free soil, free speech, and free men," was borne to victory six years later by its great standard-bearer, the unlettered child of the prairies, Abraham Lincoln.

Preceding the coalescence of the political elements in this Congressional district mass meetings, it is true, were held in other portions of the country recommending the formation of a new political party and suggesting fitting names for the new organization. But the political elements, Whig, Democratic, Free Soil, and Abolitionist proper, in this old district were the first anywhere to combine in the same political party. At the election in October, 1854, the Representative in Congress from this district, who had opposed the repeal of the Missouri compromise, was re-elected by the unanimous vote of the district. Franklin Pierce, for President, had received in 1852 2,500 majority, and Lincoln in 1860 received over 11,000.

In the midst of such a people Mr. Wright was born and surrounded by such political influences he grew to manhood. Like his boy associates of the neighborhood, his youth was passed in labors on the farm in summer and in attending the district school in the winter. The last year of his school education was spent at the academy in Montrose, the county seat of his native county. Afterwards for a short time he taught school in the neighboring townships until he found employment as a clerk at low wages (about $3 per week) in a bank at Susquehanna, of which subsequently he was elected cashier, which position he held until the time of his death.

Mr. Wright in his career illustrates in a marked degree the beneficent influences of the free institutions under which we live, where man is born to no rank or condition in life, and where all the highways to honorable distinction lead alike from the district schoolhouse and the lowly cot of honest toil, the same as from the gilded palaces of wealth or the halls of academic culture. Without any of the fortuitous advantages of family wealth or family influence, Mr. Wright by his own inherent force of character wrought his way to business success and to political positions of honor. By his fidelity to every trust and his laborious faithfulness in the discharge of the duties incident to his position he won the respect and esteem of the people among whom he lived and achieved that highly commendable, as well as most desirable success in life which comes to all who do well their part.

You may be tiller of the soil, or toiler by the day;
Remember, then, he does the best, the best in every way,
Who has a single aim in view, determined from the start,
In whatever he shall pursue, to truly do his part.
Tho' doctor, lawyer, teacher, priest, learn this command by heart:
They never fail, but all succeed, who simply do their part.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen who desired to make remarks on this occasion are unavoidably absent, and I ask unanimous consent that they be permitted to print their remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The House then, pursuant to the resolutions previously adopted (at 4 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.), adjourned until half past 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

Mr. PEPPER. I present a petition in the form of a resolution from the legislature of the State of Kansas. I can read it in perhaps shorter time than I can state its contents:

Whereas the experience of settling the Great Plains country has demonstrated a remarkably fertile soil, but a deficiency of water for agricultural purposes; and

Whereas the annual rise of the Missouri River causes great damage in the lower valleys, entailing great loss of property and the expenditure of vast sums of money by the Government to prevent damage by overflow: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be requested to cause to be made a thorough scientific survey to ascertain the feasibility of constructing a great national canal to be utilized in carrying off the flood waters of said river from some point near the base of the mountains, and utilizing the same for irrigation purposes on the Great Plains.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. I have another paper from the same source. While it is not a memorial or a petition, it is in the nature of one, and I think it appropriate to be presented to the Senate. It is a request from both houses of the legislature of Kansas asking their Senators to support an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be instructed and requested to use their influence in securing such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will confer upon the electors of the several States the right to choose their Senators at general elections.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, requested to forward one copy of this memorial to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress at as early a day as may be convenient.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I, Albert Berg, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy with the original joint memorial, being house file No. 150, in my office of house file No. 150, a joint resolution relating to the election of United States Senators by a popular vote, as filed February 6, 1895, and that said copy is a true and correct transcript of said original joint memorial and of the whole thereof.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

A joint resolution relating to the railroad pooling bill now pending in the United States Senate.

Whereas section 4 of Article X of the constitution of the State of Minnesota, providing that all corporations being common carriers, enjoying the right of way in pursuance of the provisions of this section, shall be bound to carry the mineral, agricultural, and other productions of manufactures on equal and reasonable terms; and

Whereas many of the railroad corporations chartered and endowed with munificent grants and valuable franchises, rights, and privileges by this State have, by their extension through growth and consolidation, become interstate common carriers, and as such claim freedom from State jurisdiction and regulation; and

Whereas all attempts at State regulation designed to protect the people of the State from such common misuse of railroad corporate power as rebates, pooling, and unequal and unreasonable traffic charges have proved insufficient by reason of the position of these corporations as being mediums of interstate commerce, as claimed by them; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States has recently passed and there is now pending in the Senate a bill called the "Patterson pooling bill," which is designed to repeal that portion of the interstate-commerce law which prohibits the pooling of business or earnings among competing railroad lines, and thus to legalize a gigantic trust and to destroy all competition among common carriers and entirely sweep away the only protection the people of this State and of the country have against such monopolies: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the legislature of the State of Minnesota, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use all their influence and all honorable means to defeat such bill and to prevent it being enacted into a law.

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolution be sent by the governor of the State to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I, Albert Berg, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy with the original joint resolution, being senate file No. 37 in my office of senate file No. 37, being a joint resolution relating to the railroad pooling bill now pending in the United States Senate, and that said copy is a true and correct transcript of said original resolution, as filed February 4, 1895, and of the whole thereof.

ENGROSSMENT AND ENROLLMENT OF BILLS.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That during the last ten days of any session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided for in the concurrent resolution adopted by the Fifty-third Congress, first session, November 1, 1893, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand when in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing it is deemed necessary.

REPORT OF STRIKE COMMISSION.

Mr. GORMAN. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], December 10, 1894, for the printing of the report of the United States Strike Commission on the Chicago strike of June and July, 1894, direct me to report it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed, bound in cloth, and properly wrapped for mailing, 20,000 extra copies of the report on the Chicago strike of June and July, 1894, by the United States Strike Commission appointed by the President July 26, 1894; 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 5,000 copies for the use of the Department of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXTRADITION OF GENERAL EZETA.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered. That the arguments of counsel and decision of the court in the extradition case of General Ezeta, together with the brief on behalf of the refugees as an appendix, be printed.

ABANDONED FORT M'KINNEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CAREY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2409) granting certain lands in the abandoned military reservation at Fort McKinney, Johnson County, Wyo., to the State of Wyoming for public purposes, to report it with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will not make that request. Let us go through with the morning business.

Mr. CAREY. I will inform the Senator from Florida that it will not take two minutes to pass the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CALL. If I should consent to the request of the Senator from Wyoming there would be a great many other Senators who would make similar requests, and I am anxious that the resolution heretofore submitted by me, which has been before the Senate for some time, shall be voted upon. The Senator can present his report at a later time and secure consideration of the bill.

Mr. CAREY. I am afraid the Senator's resolution will remain before the Senate for some time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ST. JOSEPH HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 261) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of the appropriation made in the river and harbor act of 1894 for St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor, to report it with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent that it may now be considered.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will not ask that.

Mr. FRYE. It will not take a minute.

Mr. CALL. I have objected in other cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida object?

Mr. CALL. I do not object in this case on the assurance of the Senator that the bill will not occupy time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "authorized," to insert "in his discretion," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is, authorized, in his discretion, to apply so much of the appropriation for the improvement of St. Joseph Harbor, in the State of Michigan, made in the river and harbor act of 1894, as may in his judgment be necessary to complete the connection between St. Joseph Harbor and Benton Harbor in said State of Michigan.

Resolved. That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, as now constituted, either by full committee or such subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee to continue during the coming recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolutions of May 13, 1890, and February 27, 1891, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolutions, and in the pursuance of such investigations to visit the several Indian reservations, Indian schools supported in whole or in part by the Government, and the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, or any reservation where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

Second. That said committee or subcommittee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses under oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at such place or places as they may determine; and the necessary and proper expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas subsequently reported the resolution without amendment from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and it was placed on the Calendar.

LITIGATION AGAINST PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. R. 132) authorizing the employment of counsel for the purpose of bringing suits against the directors and stockholders of the Union and Central Pacific railroads was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the employment of counsel for the purpose of bringing suits against the directors and stockholders of the Union and Central Pacific railroads.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc. That the President is hereby requested to employ counsel for the purpose of bringing suits against the directors and stockholders of the Union and Central Pacific railroads who received the stock of said roads without paying cash for the same; also to recover from the directors, officers, and stockholders of said roads such sums of money as were stolen by them or diverted and converted to any unlawful purpose, and therefore not placed in the sinking fund as required by law; and the President is hereby authorized to pay to said attorneys the sum of 5 per cent of all sums recovered from said directors or stockholders. The Attorney-General is also directed to foreclose the mortgage of the Government on said roads at the earliest possible date, and to take steps to pay off the prior incumbrance on said roads and to use the sinking fund for that purpose; to ascertain the amount of money belonging to the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads that has been invested in branch lines, and the amount of bonds and stock of other companies now the property of said roads, and to take steps to secure the Government interest therein; to ascertain the amount of land now the property of said roads and recover the same or protect the Government interest in connection therewith.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the joint resolution be printed and lie upon the table. I wish hereafter to submit some few remarks in connection therewith.

I wish to say at this time that I shall furnish to the Senate a list of the stockholders who have converted the stocks of these companies, and also the amounts for which they are liable.

I shall also furnish to the Senate a list of the securities, bonds, and stock of the branch lines which are the property of the Union and Central Pacific railroads.

I think that the management of these roads has been a disgrace to American civilization, and while I think it is not worse than the management of most of the railroads which have been built in this country, still I think that it is the duty of Congress in this case to correct the evil.

At some future time I shall undertake to show the Senate the methods practiced by other railroad companies in this country to rob their stockholders and bondholders in reorganizing corporations, and I think I can demonstrate that if there is any fear with regard to the bonds and stocks of American corporations it does not result from any fear in relation to our currency, but rather to the rascality of the manipulators of these properties, residing almost entirely in Eastern cities and having the center of their operations in Wall street.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table, at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

BIMETALLISM AND GOLD BONDS.

Mr. HILL submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved (if the House of Representatives concur), That it is the sense of Congress that the true policy of the Government requires that its efforts should be steadily directed to the establishment of a safe system of bimetalism, wherein gold and silver may be maintained at a parity, and every dollar coined may be the equal in value and power of every other dollar coined or issued by the United States; but if our efforts to establish or maintain such bimetalism shall not be wholly successful, and if for any reason our silver coin shall not hereafter be at parity with gold coin and the equal thereof in value and power in the market and in the payment of debts, then it is hereby declared that the bonds of the United States now or hereafter issued which by their terms are payable in coin, shall nevertheless be paid in standard gold dollars, it being the policy of the United States that its creditors shall at all times be paid in the best money in use.

Mr. HILL. I desire the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the resolution go over. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. STEWART. I am ready to make some remarks upon the resolution at this time.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING FUR SEALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

On the 8th day of January I received a copy of the following Senate resolution:

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate all reports, documents, and other papers, including logs of vessels, relating to the enforcement of the regulations respecting fur seals adopted by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the decision of the tribunal of arbitration, convened at Paris, and the resolutions under which said reports are required to be made, as well as relating to the number of seals taken during the season of 1894 by pelagic hunters and by the lessees of the Pribilof and Commander islands; also, relating to the steps which may have been taken to extend the said regulations to the Asiatic waters of the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea and to secure the concurrence of other nations in said regulations; and, further, all papers not heretofore published, including communications of the agent of the United States before said tribunal at Paris, relating to the claims of the British Government on account of the seizure of the sealing vessels in Bering Sea."

In compliance with said request I herewith transmit sundry papers, documents, and reports which have been returned to me by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Navy, to whom said resolution was referred. I am not in possession of any further information touching the various subjects embodied in such resolution.

It will be seen from a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, accompanying the papers and documents sent from his Department, that it is impossible to furnish at this time the complete log books of some of the naval vessels referred to in the resolution, but I venture to express the hope that the reports of the commanders of such vessels herewith submitted will be found to contain in substance so much of the matters recorded in said log books as are important in answering the inquiries addressed to me by the Senate.

HISTORICAL MUSEUM, DES MOINES, IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2589) granting cannon to the Historical Museum, Des Moines, Iowa.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will not press that. I must object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. If the bill takes more than a minute I will withdraw it.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator in charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill will not call it up for a time, I will give way.

Mr. ALLISON. I will agree to an additional minute.

Mr. CALL. Very well, then, I shall give way.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2589) granting cannon to the Historical Museum, Des Moines, Iowa, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "one," to insert "condemned;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to supply the Iowa Historical Museum, Des Moines, Iowa, on the request of the governor, with two condemned cannon and one condemned seacoast mortar from the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, N. H., the State of Iowa to pay all the expenses of transportation, etc.

MINERAL LANDS IN MONTANA AND IDAHO.

Mr. GORMAN. A few days since I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 3476, known as the mineral land bill, was passed. The Senator in charge of the bill and others interested in it desire to make certain amendments to it. I ask that my motion may be now considered.

Mr. CALL. I object to the consideration of anything other than morning business at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the Senator from Florida if he will not withdraw his objection for a few moments to the consideration of the bill? It is a very important matter.

Mr. GORMAN. My motion is only for the reconsideration of a bill.

Mr. CALL. I do not object to that.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator from Florida not to object.

Mr. BERRY. I can indicate where the proposed amendments should come in.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the bill will be laid before the Senate by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the motion heretofore entered by the Senator from Maryland for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was read the third time and passed?

Mr. PLATT. What is the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. It is House bill 3476, relating to mineral lands.

Mr. PLATT. The one relating to the Northern Pacific Railroad lands?

Mr. BERRY and Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho was read the third time and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. After the word "expenses," in line 20, section 2, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "expenses," in line 20, of section 2, on page 2, it is proposed to insert:

But the total amount of compensation to be paid to each commissioner annually shall in no case exceed the sum of $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. In line 16 of section 2, on page 3, after the words "provided for," I move to strike out all down to and including the word "party," in line 18.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, section 2, it is proposed to strike out all after the words "provided for," in line 16, down to and including the word "party," in line 18, as follows:

Not more than two of the commissioners in any one district shall be appointed from the same political party.

Mr. HOAR. Is that an office which is proposed to be created? I do not approve of putting such provisions in our statutes.

Mr. BERRY. It is to strike out the provision which has been read.

Mr. HOAR. I beg pardon; I thought it was to insert.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Kentucky very kindly yields to me to make a statement. I desire to give notice that after the disposition of the Post-Office appropriation bill I shall call up the resolution which I offered a few days ago to take up for consideration House bill 7273, amending the interstate-commerce law, with a view of submitting some remarks in reference to the matter.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the postal service for the next fiscal year.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will permit me to occupy the floor for the purpose of presenting the matter in regard to the late election in Alabama.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator from Nebraska how much time he wants?

Mr. ALLEN. I think I can probably submit all I desire to say by half past 3 o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the instructions I have from the Committee on Appropriations I can not, though I should like to, accede to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a very important measure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Three weeks from this day the present Congress dies. We have seven or eight general appropriation bills yet untouched by the Senate, the Post-Office appropriation bill being one of them, and my instructions from the Committee on Appropriations are to utilize every moment of time that can possibly be had until this bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896. The motion is not debatable. The Chair will hear the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, however.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to offer an amendment to the motion to the effect that we proceed now to the consideration of the resolution relative to the recent elections in the State of Alabama.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair can not entertain the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be considered and disposed of as they are reached in the reading of the bill and before other amendments are acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For printing facing slips and cutting same, card slide-labels, blanks and books of an urgent nature for the postal service, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, after the word "million," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

For railway post-office car service, $3,205,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose this increased sum is proposed by the committee in connection with the amendment which follows, inserting the words "said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General?"

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the estimate of the Department was for $3,205,000. The other House reduced it by $100,000. The Postmaster-General came before the committee and satisfied the committee that unless the amount estimated for was appropriated, that is, unless there was an increase of $100,000 made, it would cripple the service to that extent.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand from the Senator from Kentucky that the increase from $3,105,000 to $3,205,000 is merely to restore an estimate of the Department and has no reference to the extraordinary provision which follows this clause. That being the case, I make no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 16, in the provision for railway post-office car service, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Said sum shall be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and any provision of existing law in conflict herewith is hereby repealed.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order against the amendment that it proposes general legislation of the most extensive kind, repealing all existing laws relating to the Railway Mail Service, setting aside the present policy of establishing mail routes by law, and putting the whole matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It seems to me there could be no more general legislation than that. Without pausing to discuss the merits of the question, I simply make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation and is out of order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I desire to correct the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he will read the proposed committee amendment he will see his error. It does not propose to repeal the existing law in reference to fast mail service. The proposed amendment has for its object the repeal of no existing law except such as is in conflict with the amendment itself. If the Senator from Massachusetts will examine the subject he will find that it is not proposed to repeal any law or any part of a law except the act passed on the 3d day of March, 1873.

That act fixes a sliding scale of remuneration for the use of postal cars, but it fixes only the maximum which shall be allowed for the use of a 40-foot car, a 50-foot car, and a 60-foot car. The act of March 3, 1873, has these several provisions in the shape of maximum limitations which shall be allowed. In point of fact those maximum rates, as I am informed, have been allowed in all cases from then until now. The amendment proposes to repeal no law and no part of any law except those provisions which establish these maximum rates for the use of postal cars.

If the Senate will indulge me before it undertakes to dispose of the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I will state the reason the committee had for inserting the amendment. We are paying exorbitantly high prices for the use of the postal cars. It is claimed by some, and it will, I apprehend, be so asserted here in connection with this paragraph, that to-day the Government of the United States pays every twelve months for the use of postal cars as much money as it costs to buy the cars, keep them in repair, and light, heat, and operate them. I do not say this is exactly correct; I say it is claimed by some that it is true. The Postmaster-General stated to the subcommittee that it is true that the Government to-day, under the maximum limitations fixed by the act of March 3, 1873, is paying for the use of postal cars every sixteen months a sum equal to the cost of building, repairing, maintaining, lighting, heating, and hauling the cars.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If it be true that the only effect of the amendment is to repeal a provision of existing law which fixes the maximum rates that the Postmaster-General shall allow for service of this kind, how does that repeal remedy the difficulty alluded to by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Oregon had been a little more patient, I was trying to answer that in advance of his question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is nothing in the law now, I understand, which compels the payment of the maximum rates.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not a bit of it. That is just the point I was trying to get at when interrupted.

Now, the truth is it may be answered and said that the matter is now in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. I say it is; I admit it is. It is clearly competent for Congress to fix the rates of pay at a million dollars a mile a year or at one mill a mile if it wants to; but I am referring to the practical result tested for a period of more than twenty years. It must be borne in mind that there is no contract under which the Government is responsible to the railroad company for any compensation for the use of these postal cars. The Government makes a contract with a railroad company to carry, between two points, so much mail measured by the hundredweight for so much money. That is the contract the Government makes. It is the business of the railroad company to provide the vehicle in which to transport the mail. But the Government wants to send its postal clerks along to distribute the mail at the different points and post-offices along the route, and for that reason, outside the contract and by way of supplement to the contract, the Government does allow this extra compensation. It might with some show of justification be claimed that the Government allows a gratuity in the shape of compensation to the road for the use of its postal cars.

The committee does not object to that, but what the committee is objecting to is the payment by the Government of exorbitant rates—rates that result in the disbursement of a sum every twelve or eighteen months which equals the cost of building, repairing, and maintaining the cars. The committee think it is too much. Consequently the committee thought it was absolutely necessary to fasten the responsibility somewhere. In order to do that Congress must confer discretion upon somebody. I do not want to give unusual discretionary powers either to this or to any other Department of the Government, but the responsibility and the discretion are inseparable. If it be conceded that the Government is to-day paying rates that are too high, they ought to be reduced, and the committee thought the Postmaster-General ought to have that discretion lodged with his Department, and that we should say to him, "We give you absolute discretion to fix those rates upon a fair compensatory basis, and we mean to hold you responsible to Congress if you discriminate or act unfairly or make unduly large allowances."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Postmaster-General can reduce the rates now as the law stands, and if the proposed amendment is adopted then he can increase them, which he can not do now if the law is allowed to remain as it is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should very much like to see that man found who, as Postmaster-General, would be possessed of the temerity, if given the discretion and charged with the responsibility, to increase the rates paid for this service over any line of railway in the country. Congress has now, by the act of March 3, 1873, said that it is proper and fair that these maximum allowances shall be made, and the practical result has been that they have always been made. They are too high, in the opinion of the committee, and ought to be reduced. Will Congress undertake by arbitrary legislation to say what compensation shall be given to each and every one of the different railroads which haul postal cars over this country? This is absurd. It is impracticable; it is impossible; we can not do it. We can fix the total amount, which it is proposed to do in the pending amendment, by giving the Postmaster-General exactly the sum he estimates for this service, and then saying to him, "We now repeal those sliding schedules in the act of 1873 legalizing the allowance of the maximum rate therein stated, and leave it to you to make your contracts; and we mean to hold you responsible if they are not fairly made and the Government is not fairly treated and fully protected."

If Congress does not lodge this discretion somewhere, and if this or some other amendment is not incorporated into the pending appropriation bill, we are to go on as we have been going for nearly a quarter of a century, paying the maximum rates that are legalized by the act of March, 1873, and paying rates which the Postmaster-General asserts amount every sixteen or eighteen months to the cost of the building, repairing, operating, and maintaining the postal cars themselves. The only object the committee had in view was to reduce those rates, believing that they were indefensibly high; and the committee were not able to devise a plan that seemed to insure better results than the amendment which it has now submitted. If any Senator will come to the aid of the committee and propose an amendment to the amendment which will better accomplish the purpose in view, speaking as far as I have the right to do for the committee, I shall gladly accept it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the sections of law proposed to be repealed by this clause are the acts of March 3, 1873, and sections 4003, 4003, 4004, and 4005 of the Revised Statutes. That certainly constitutes general legislation, for it repeals a number of sections of existing law.

Mr. GRAY. What are those sections about?

Mr. LODGE. Those sections, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has said, relate to the cars, the length of the cars, the rates of compensation, etc. I have no objection at all to giving the Postmaster-General authority in regard to the rates, but that is not the point in the amendment, as I look at it.

Mr. PLATT. He has that now.

Mr. LODGE. I think he has sufficient authority in that respect already. But the amendment must be taken in connection with the next amendment, against which the point of order would not lie. The next amendment proposes to strike out the provision in regard to special facilities on trunk lines for fast mails. By striking out that provision and putting in this amendment, against which I have made the point of order, we put into the hands of the Postmaster-General the power to select the route by which the special fast mail shall go on the trunk lines.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Against which amendment does the Senator from Massachusetts make his point of order?

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order against the amendment on page 4, commencing in line 16 and going down to and including line 19.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I notice that the Senator is discussing the next proposed amendment, which begins in line 25.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Kentucky had been listening to me—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I heard every word.

Mr. LODGE. Then I failed to express myself clearly. I said the point of order laid against the pending amendment, and that the importance of the amendment was when taken in connection with the next amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest that we have not reached the next one yet.

Mr. LODGE. I can not argue as to this amendment without pointing out what the effect of the next amendment will be, because it is the next amendment joined to this one which makes the pending amendment objectionable.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then it is a double-barreled point of order which the Senator makes.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. My point of order does not lie against the next amendment, and it can not, as the Senator from Kentucky is well aware.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator admit that the point of order is not good against the amendment in lines 16 to 19, unless it be considered in connection with another amendment which we have not reached?

Mr. LODGE. The effect of this amendment combined with the next amendment is to throw into the hands of the Postmaster-General the right to put the special facilities for the fast mails where he pleases. To that I strongly object. I think it should be settled by Congress. I make the point of order against this amendment because I want to stop that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I understand the Senator from Massachusetts makes his point of order against the amendment now pending—

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And argues in support of the point of order, predicated his argument upon another amendment which the Senate has not yet reached.

Mr. LODGE. I argue the point on this amendment because the effect of the amendment, if carried, with the next amendment—

Mr. BLACKBURN. We have not got to the next amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Will be to throw into the hands of the Postmaster-General discretion as to the whole of this fast railway mail.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the Senator's permission, I merely submit that the point of order made against the pending amendment must stand or fall upon this one amendment, and not on any other amendment which has not been considered.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order does not lie against the other amendment at all, and no point of order can be made against it, in my judgment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am afraid the Senator from Massachusetts fails to understand me. The point I make is that neither the Chair nor the Senate can, in determining the point of order made against the pending amendment, consider any other proposed amendment that has not been reached.

Mr. LODGE. I was making the—

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Massachusetts is stating his motive for making this point of order, which is that he connects it with another amendment. There are other Senators here who would make the point of order from other motives.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order against this amendment (and I think it is a good one) that it is general legislation repealing existing law and putting in the hands of the Postmaster-

General new powers. That is the point of order I make against this amendment.

My reason for making the point of order—my motive, I should say in making it—is because I think the effect of the provision will be to put in his hands the fast railway mail routes. But that is wholly distinct from the point of order. I want to beat both amendments, and the reason why I desire to beat both amendments is because I do not care to throw into the hands of the Postmaster-General the control of the fast-mail routes which have been arranged by Congress with a view to fast-mail service for the different sections of the country.

There is one fast-mail route provided for in the paragraph which has been stricken out by the committee which is of immense importance to all the great business of the Eastern part of the country. If the first amendment is adopted it will leave the Postmaster-General power to alter or change those routes in any way he desires. That is my motive for taking both amendments; but my point of order against the pending amendment has nothing whatever to do with the second amendment. It is confined entirely to the objection to the amendment that it is general legislation and therefore contrary to the rules of the Senate. I was simply taking occasion, as I had the floor, to explain why I am against both amendments, and I could not discuss the first amendment without also discussing the second.

To the second amendment I am very strongly opposed. No point of order lies against it. I am very much averse to taking away the authority of Congress in settling the fast-mail routes and putting them into the hands of the Postmaster-General. They are well settled now, as it seems to me, and I think that is the general belief of the people whom I represent. I do not want to see them destroyed, as is proposed by the second of these committee amendments, and thrown into the control of the Postmaster-General, as is proposed by the first amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator please allow me to ask him a question before he leaves the floor?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator insists on discussing an amendment that the Senate has not yet reached, and I am bound to follow him there with a question. If the suggestion of the committee should be adopted and the paragraph which has not yet been reached, beginning with line 25, should be stricken out, does the Senator mean to say that that would leave it discretionary with the Postmaster-General to give out contracts for fast mails to any lines that he might please?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, if the second amendment is adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Upon the contrary, if the second one is adopted, there is not a penny of money appropriated for any fast-mail facilities anywhere on any road.

Mr. LODGE. No; they will all have to come under this one clause.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This clause does not provide for any special facilities for fast mails.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky that it is the proposal of the bill to abolish special fast mails?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do, for the reason that there is only one road in America to-day getting this mail subsidy of $196,000 and more, and that the Post-Office Department never did recommend it, but for two years the Postmaster-General sent reports to Congress asking Congress to abolish it, for the reason that it was a positive detriment instead of a benefit to the postal service.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What line is that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is the line down the Atlantic coast. I think they call it the Southern line now. The railroads change their names so rapidly that one can not keep up with the changes unless he is identified with the roads. It is the only line from Boston on down the Atlantic coast. I do not mean the Atlantic Coast Line, which is the line that had it for years. Two years ago another line came in and got it. It used to be called the Richmond and Danville system. I think it is now called the Southern system. That is the only line on this continent which gets a penny from the Government in the shape of a subsidy, and it gets one hundred and ninety-six thousand and odd dollars every year, running with a parallel line that does not get a penny, and between New York and Atlanta there are less than sixty minutes' difference in the schedules of that subsidized fast-mail line and the competing parallel line known as the Sea Coast Air Line that does not get a penny. So it is the purpose of the committee on this bill to strike out that subsidy of $196,000, and that is the only effect of the proposed amendment, which begins on line 25, at the foot of page 4, which amendment has not yet been reached.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am speaking now in the time of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. I understood the Senator from Kentucky to say there is but one railway line in the United States that gets the benefit of this appropriation of $198,000.

Mr. ALLISON. But one railway route.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said one route. There are different lines that use parts of the same route.

Mr. HUNTON. I understood the Senator to especially mention the Southern Railway Company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I stated the terminal points, beginning in Boston and running down to Atlanta.

Mr. LODGE. It begins at Springfield, Mass.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me read the provision in the bill which the committee propose to strike out:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., by way of New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $100,614.22.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the line established by the last Post-Office appropriation act, and there is no other line to which the Government is paying for what are called special facilities.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not a penny.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave to call attention to the proviso, which meets very many of the points made by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That the money shall only be expended when the Postmaster-General may deem it necessary.

Mr. HUNTON. It reads:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Exactly; and yet every year that a dollar of money has been appropriated for this service it has been paid to that road. That is true of the two years in which the Post-Office Department officially advised Congress that the special service ought to be repealed and abolished, and that it was a positive detriment instead of a benefit. Yet the Post-Office Department paid it.

Mr. HUNTON. And yet the Department could have withheld every dollar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And yet the Postmaster-General did not withhold a single dollar, and he never will as long as the appropriation is carried in the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, just one word in regard to these lines. I know nothing about the lines which have received the subsidy. I do not even know their names. I do know that the fast-mail service has been of great value, certainly to my part of the country, and I do not want to see it abolished.

Under this provision the Senator from Kentucky says that the line, he is informed by the Department, is of no value; that we gain nothing from it, and we spend a great deal of money. There is a provision in the clause that is stricken out by the committee which gives the Postmaster-General absolute discretion if the line is of no value, and why that can not be left to his discretion as well as leaving the whole three-million-dollar appropriation to his discretion I do not see.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest, Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will excuse me one moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. That fast-mail route is of great importance. I should be very sorry to see it abolished, for I believe it is of great value to the business interests of the Northeast, who have large dealings with the South. I do not want to see it abolished. I think that a route established like that by Congress is of great value and ought to be retained. That is why I resist putting it so absolutely in the hands of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But the Senator is well aware that he is now discussing an amendment which has not been reached and which is not before the Senate at all.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that, and I have tried to explain to the Senator from Kentucky that the two amendments are really linked together. One comprises my motives and the other is amenable to the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I opposed the amendment now under consideration, believing that it is a radical and unwise change of existing law, and that it does not in any sense reach the suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Kentucky as respects the question of compensation or the reduction of compensation. It does not wholly repeal section 4004 of the Revised Statutes. It does repeal that section so far as it may be inconsistent with the provisions of this amendment, and it therefore places under the control of the Postmaster-General, without qualification, the power to use the appropriation of $3,000,000 in his discretion for such fast mails as he may think wise to establish or continue.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator says that it does not repeal entirely the section of the statute alluded to, by which I suppose he means that with this amendment in the appropriation bill it would still be the duty of the Postmaster-General to send the mails in railway postal cars as at present.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I do not say that it would still be his duty to do so. In that sense it may repeal section 4004, but it only repeals section 4004 so far as to limit the price the Postmaster-General may pay.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa whether, with this amendment adopted, the Postmaster-General can not then purchase cars, as was proposed in an amendment which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] was going to submit to the bill? Does not the amendment, if adopted, allow the Postmaster-General to buy postal cars and put them on the road?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt if he chooses so to expend this money he can do that, but the point I make as respects the absolute repeal of section 4004 is that if the Postmaster-General sees proper to pay a higher sum, and a much higher sum, for the postal cars he has under the pending amendment the power to do it.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Iowa permit an interruption for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am in very serious doubt as to how it is my duty to vote as to the amendment, and I wish to ask the Senator a question or two, if I may. In the first place, is it not reasonable to presume that if the Postmaster-General desires to strike out the provisions of law which say that for use of postal cars he shall pay a maximum rate he asks this because it is the inevitable result of such a provision that the maximum rate becomes the rate? Is not that possibly true? In the second place, no matter what are the vicissitudes or changes of parties, we always believe in the integrity and character of our Postmasters-General. We must say that, no matter whether we are of the same political faith with them or not. We know they are trying to make the greatest number of trips in the quickest possible time for the least possible expenditure of money. Every Postmaster-General of the United States is trying to make that sort of a record.

Now, is not this departmental and not legislative work, and is it not really a better and more intelligent way that the Postmaster-General should himself determine as to what railroad lines shall carry the mails rather than that the two Houses of Congress, who necessarily proceed in a lumbering sort of fashion, should enact that every particular road shall carry a particular mail? It is with a view of getting the Senator from Iowa to enlighten me on these subjects that I ask the questions. That I apprehend must be the purpose of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator's questions are of course pertinent to the debate, but I submit that it is not the custom in these appropriation bills to leave wholly and absolutely the discretion in the hands of the head of a Department. On the contrary, it is the practice of Congress in all the appropriation bills to carefully limit, or to limit as carefully as we can, the expenditure of money under the various heads of appropriation. So we have a law that fixes the compensation for the transportation of mails by two or three provisions. One is by weight, another by speed, another by the use of postal cars. All these are elements in the compensation that is to be paid for this service.

Now, the Senator from Kentucky says the compensation paid is too much. If it is too much it is wholly within the power of the Postmaster-General to reduce the compensation. It is not, I think, a fair interpretation of a statute to say that because we fix a maximum rate beyond which the Postmaster-General shall not go, he is therefore under any sort of compulsion, implied or otherwise, to pay that maximum rate in every instance; and as a matter of fact he does not do so. I do not know about the present Postmaster-General, but I know that former Postmasters-General have exercised free discretion in limiting the pay upon these postal cars.

Mr. PLATT. The compensation has been twice reduced by law.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Connecticut says, the schedule of pay has twice been reduced by law, at one time 10 per cent and at another 20 per cent. I submit to those who are in favor of this provision that instead of providing, as is provided here, that this sum shall be placed in the hands of the Postmaster-General without limitation, either as to what he shall pay or as to what routes he shall select, if this compensation is too much we should proceed as we have proceeded heretofore and reduce the compensation 5 or 10 per cent; whatever reduction ought to be made.

This postal-car provision enters into and becomes a part of the compensation paid to these railroad lines. I dissent from the view expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts as to the second amendment, and I feel called upon to discuss that somewhat in connection with the pending amendment, as has already been done. The reason why the committee struck out the provision beginning in line 25 was not in any way connected with the pending amendment, but it was because we believed that if the Postmaster-General was true in his statement in regard to the excess of compensation paid to other railway lines, it was not wise for us to allow this railway line to receive all the compensation that other lines receive and in addition to that the extraordinary sum provided for in the bill.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that if the pending amendment as it stands in the bill is adopted by the Senate and passed by Congress it will be within the province of the Postmaster-General to reinstate at once the provision which we have stricken out and which we believe ought not to exist, because he can use the appropriation of $3,000,000 in his discretion for postal cars upon that route. Therefore it is that I am in favor of striking out the whole provision in order that when the appropriation of $3,000,000 is expended it shall be expended under existing law until we change that law by some affirmative provision; and if it is too much, as I know the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin thinks it is, let us reduce the compensation by a general scaling down of the allowances to railway lines.

But there can be no question that the amendment is out of order. I do not wish to debate that question. If we can repeal the provisions of the Revised Statutes here referred to, we can on an appropriation bill repeal any provision respecting any of the sections of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would it in anywise obviate the Senator's objection to add to the proposed amendment, after the word "repealed," in line 19, page 14, the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars, or for special facilities on fast-mail trains.

Mr. ALLISON. That would help it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I intend to offer that amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. That would help it some.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask leave to submit that amendment to the amendment right now.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, without objection.

Mr. ALLISON. That would prevent the purchase of postal cars.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; and it would do more. It would prevent the purchase of postal cars and prevent the expenditure of a penny of the appropriation of $3,205,000 for the securing of special facilities on any fast-mail trains in this country.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. What was the order made by the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be stated, if the Senator from Iowa will yield for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I asked the consent of the Senator from Iowa to submit it now, thinking it might change the current of debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add, after the word "repealed," in line 19, page 14, the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the purchase of postal cars or for special facilities on fast-mail trains.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a modification proposed by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. Does it require unanimous consent to so modify it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask consent. Of course I can offer it when we get through with the committee's amendments, but I asked consent to submit it now—

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As it might probably change the current of debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the order of the Chair. The Chair heard no objection, and the amendment to the amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. PLATT. There is no objection that it shall be submitted as a pending amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all I have asked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the order of the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course that amendment improves the provision as respects the purchase of postal cars, but it absolutely by its terms prohibits any fast mails hereafter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is the object of the next amendment anyway.

Mr. ALLISON. No; it is not. The object of the next amendment is to prevent special appropriations for fast mails.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator will admit—

Mr. ALLISON. All the fast mails are provided for under the provisions of sections 4002, 4003, and 4004. Now the Senator proposes to provide that none of this money shall be used for that purpose at all.

Mr. PLATT. That is it.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is prohibited we might as well strike out the whole appropriation, practically, because a great portion of the $3,000,000 is used on the great trunk lines for the purpose of securing speed and for the purpose of securing special trains.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator from Iowa mean to be understood as telling the Senate that the greater portion of the three million and odd dollars, or a single penny of it, has ever been used for the purpose of securing special facilities on fast-mail trains? If so, he is not supported by any report made by the Post-Office Department, I am sure.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator misunderstands me. I say that unless this appropriation is used for the promotion of fast-mail trains the fast-mail trains can not go, because they will not go under the ordinary appropriation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The language I have submitted does not touch the case.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It simply says that the money shall not be expended for the purpose of securing special facilities on fast-mail trains. I undertake to say, speaking in the light of the official reports of the Department, that there never has been a dollar of Government money used for the purpose of securing special facilities on fast-mail trains, except in the case of the Atlantic Coast Line, and then in the case of the present line that is to-day receiving this money. That is stricken out by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator and myself—

Mr. BLACKBURN. We agree.

Mr. ALLISON. We agree, except that I understood from the phraseology of his amendment that it would prevent the use of this money.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No. I ask that the amendment be read again.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not necessary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, this appropriation constitutes a great part of the compensation of all the railways that transport mails upon special mail trains, such as are started from New York, Chicago, and other cities of the United States. Therefore, unless it be the purpose of those who are in favor of this provision to destroy these rapid mails, practically, this appropriation thus limited will place it within the power of the Postmaster-General to curtail or destroy the service on fast-mail trains. But under this provision and under the general provisions he can now make arrangements whereby the fast mails can be secured; and in that way they have been secured.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to disturb it.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the Senator does not, nor did the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, the Senator from Wisconsin introduces an amendment specifically providing for the purchase and use by the Government itself of the postal cars. He does that for the purpose of getting rid of this appropriation. I was at first inclined to think that there was very much in his suggestions respecting that question, but on further examination I find that the postal-car service is so intertwined with the entire postal system of our country that that will be endangered if we allow the purchase of the cars by the Government itself. Yet the Committee on Appropriations have unconsciously or intentionally provided for the same thing practically by the amendment that is here proposed. I merely want to say that I regard the pending amendment as unwise. I think it is a change of existing law which ought not to be made now and in this form. Therefore I shall vote against it when I have an opportunity to vote upon the question.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Committee on Appropriations, after hearing quite an able argument in favor of an amendment to the general law providing that the Government of the United States should either purchase or build its own postal cars, some members of the committee for the time came to believe that the charges upon the Government on account of carrying the mails were much greater than they ought to have been or ought to be at this time. So the result was that a majority of the committee undertook to amend the law so that the Postmaster-General might in some way reduce the expense of carrying the mails to the Government of the United States. The result of it was that a majority of the committee voted in the bill the amendment which is now under consideration. The amendment, as I take it, is subject to the point of order that it is new legislation, but as we have got into the habit in the Senate of debating everything upon which a point of order is made upon its merits, and if the question is to be submitted to the Senate—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that by unanimous consent the unfinished business, without prejudice, be informally laid aside, temporarily, that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the pending appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. CULLOM. I have just said, Mr. President, that I was of the opinion that the point of order that this amendment was new legislation, and therefore not in order on the bill, was a good point, but that as we had got into the habit of debating the merits of a question, and then passing upon the point of order as we thought the merits justified, I suppose that course will be taken in this instance.

Upon carefully looking into this question I think that the Senate of the United States ought not to agree to the amendment. It is contrary to what has been the policy of the Government heretofore, and it seems to me that it is an attempt to place this whole subject in the hands of the Postmaster-General, and to abdicate, so far as Congress is concerned, any control over the question of carrying the mails, except to make the appropriations for which the Postmaster-General asks. While I am in favor of amending the law, if necessary, so that we shall not pay a nickel more than we ought to pay for carrying the mails, I am not in favor of putting the whole subject in the hands of one man, whoever that man may be, to determine what the policy of the Government shall be with reference to that subject.

Let me say, Mr. President, that, so far as I know, the Postmaster-General, Mr. Bissell, has made no recommendation upon this subject. On the contrary, his report, as I understand it, does not refer to it at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think it but fair to the Postmaster-General to make a statement just there, with which I know the Senator from Illinois is not acquainted.

Some weeks ago, during the absence of the Senator from Illinois from this city, his place as a member of the subcommittee having this bill in charge was temporarily taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. The Postmaster-General appeared before the subcommittee, consisting at that time of the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and myself, and in a long interview, covering all the points involved in the consideration of the bill, he did express himself as very decidedly of the opinion that the rates paid for this postal-car service were enormously high and should be reduced.

He went further and told the subcommittee that he was sure that efforts upon the part of his predecessors had been made in that direction, as well as by himself since his coming into office, but that by one method or another they were frustrated, and that practically no reduction was coming, as no reduction ever did come unless it was in obedience to the positive legislative action of Congress. It was in that interview that he said he thought about every sixteen or eighteen months the Government would pay as much for the use of these postal cars—a matter altogether separate from the transportation of the mails, by the way, for that is paid for under another contract—that the Government every sixteen or eighteen months, in his judgment, was paying about as much for the use of these postal cars as it cost to build, repair, maintain, and operate the cars.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator has finished—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have. I know the Senator was not here when this interview occurred.

Mr. CULLOM. I was informed that the Postmaster-General either voluntarily or by request—I do not know which—had appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and made a statement with reference to some provisions of the bill. I am not advised that the Postmaster-General's statement was put in writing by the subcommittee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was not.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, before I advocate a general change of policy with reference to the conduct of the Government in supplying mails to the people of this country I should like to have the Postmaster-General say in writing what he is for and what changes in the law ought to be made, and the reasons therefor, if he has any. I think that if the Postmaster-General had been so impressed with the importance of a change of the statutes on that question, when he made his report he would have said something about it; but the truth is that, in my opinion, scarcely anybody in this Senate or out of it ever thought of a change of policy with reference to this question until the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] introduced an amendment here proposing to purchase or build all the postal cars of this country.

It is stated truthfully by the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill that the Government pays probably every sixteen or eighteen months for carrying the mails, or for the use, if you please, of a car, the price of it. That statement technically is true, but, as a matter of fact, it is not simply a question of running the postal car or paying rent for the car. The fact is that the postal cars are great traveling post-offices, equipped by the railroad companies for the conduct of the post-office business as the trains speed over the country from one side of it to the other. The mere rent of the car is of very little consequence compared with what the railroad company does in equipping it, transporting it, making it a post-office, and carrying the men who conduct the post-office as it is run from one side of the country to the other. The Senator perhaps knows that there are between six and seven thousand men engaged in this postal-car service, conducting the mails and distributing them as the train goes from one section of the country to another. Who pays for their transportation? The railroads carry them, and if the railroads were to get 2 cents a mile for carrying the postal clerks they would get between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 for that service alone. The men are regarded under the law as passengers; and as such the common carrier which transports the mail is liable for damages which may occur to those persons, just as it is liable for damages to any other passenger upon the train.

So while it may seem from the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, or the Senator from Wisconsin, when he comes to make his statement, that we are paying enormous rents—and I do not know but we are—there are more things to be taken into account in connection with this service than simply the car itself.

Besides that, if we are paying more money than we ought to pay, let us have a hearing either before the Postmaster-General or by the Post-Offices and Post-Roads Committee of the Senate and find out exactly what the trouble is with the law and whether we are paying too much or too little.

The amendment was inserted in this bill without any hearing being given to anybody. The railroads have not been called upon to state whether this proposition is reasonable or not. It is proposed simply to leave it to one man to change the whole policy of the Government, and leave it to one man to determine whether the Government is now paying more than it ought to pay for this service.

Let me say another thing, Mr. President. I contend, and I do not think anybody will dispute it, that the law as it is gives the Postmaster-General the right to reduce the amount which is paid for a 40-foot, a 50-foot, or a 60-foot car. He can do it now, and yet I am informed that the Postmaster-General comes in here for the first time, after he had made his annual report, and says that we ought to change the law, in order to prevent him from paying more for the postal cars than the postal cars are worth. I do not desire to be put in the attitude of wanting to give one cent more for the postal service than it is actually worth to the Government, but I am unwilling to favor any policy which is likely to cripple or break down the postal service as we have it to-day.

Let me say that the postal service of the United States, as has been stated by Postmasters-General, is the best perhaps that can be found anywhere in the world. For instance, Postmaster-General Dickinson said in 1888:

Statistics are given showing that in cheapness of postage, gross revenue and expenditures, number of post-offices, extent of mail routes, mileage of mail service, and volume of mail matter transmitted the postal system of the United States is the leading one of the world.

I am prepared to believe that that statement is true, and it is one of the glories of the American nation to-day that our postal service is the best perhaps of any service which is given to us by any branch or Department of the Government. I want to see it improved instead of broken down. I want to see the people of the United States, who are interested in the postal service more than they are in any service which we have in the Government, furnished facilities as cheaply as possible and as thoroughly to their convenience as it can be done consistent with the revenues of the Government. The Post-Office Department connects itself more closely with the great body of the American people than any other Government service. The mails go to the doors of our people.

There will perhaps be an attempt made before this bill is disposed of to cut off nearly all the free-delivery offices of the country. There are 602, I believe, now. There is a proposition—it is not in this bill, but it will probably be made—to reduce those free-delivery offices from 602 by four hundred and eighty-odd—I forget the exact number, but leaving 120 only—which would save, it is true, $2,000,000 to the Government. That sounds very well, especially in these times when we have a scarcity of money, but I am opposed to any such measure as that.

Only a few years ago it was the policy of the Government not only to extend free deliveries to the large cities of the country, to all cities having 10,000 inhabitants, I believe—I do not remember the exact number—but also to extend it into the country beyond the towns, and thus accommodate the farmers as well as the people who live in the cities.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion on that line?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator has very properly spoken of our splendid postal service, but it is in line with his remarks to say that it is well to remember that Great Britain undertakes to carry, and always does carry, the letter actually to the man's door.

Mr. CULLOM. That is done not only in Great Britain, but in France, I think, and in some other countries as well. It was the policy of this Government two or three years ago to reach out in that way, but the proposition now seems to be to go backward, and not only not to keep the free-delivery offices we have, but to drop nearly all of them out for the purpose of saving a few million dollars.

Mr. President, I am for cheap postage, and I am for the policy which will give the greatest possible accommodations to the great masses of the people who do business among themselves. I think myself—and I am talking outside of the record a little—that we ought to reduce letter postage to the great body of the people of this country to 1 cent instead of keeping it at 2 cents, as it is now. Think of it, Mr. President!

The Post-Office Department costs in round numbers between eighty-nine and ninety million dollars, as I remember it. I will give the figures here somewhat in detail:

The amount of this bill as it comes from the House is $89,442,997.86; the amount of the estimates by the Department, $91,059,283.64; amount of estimated postal revenues, $86,907,407; amount appropriated by the law of 1895, $87,236,599.55.

Mr. President, there is the estimated amount required to continue this mail service on the basis of the law as it exists to-day.

The people who enjoy the mail service pay substantially for all of it. There is a little deficit of a few million dollars this year, and so there has been a slight deficit in years previous, but substantially the masses of the people who buy the stamps and put them upon envelopes are paying the cost of this service which is of such enormous value to the great body of the people. Now it is proposed to inaugurate a policy which may cripple that service.

I am unwilling to favor any amendment to this bill which may have the effect of crippling the service as we have it to-day. Let the Postmaster-General take the money which he estimates is necessary to run the postal service of the country and proceed to run it, and if he, in the administration of his office, finds that he can save money, consistent with giving as thorough a postal service to the people as that which is given to-day, let him propose to Congress such reforms as he thinks proper, and if he deems a change of the laws necessary, Congress will take up that subject and proceed to enact any law which it may deem to be necessary in harmony with the great interests of the people. But, instead of doing that, suddenly it turns out that the committee come in here simply upon an informal conference with the Postmaster-General, upon a suggestion from him that we are paying more for postal cars every year than they are worth, and they propose to change the entire law so far as to give the Postmaster-General absolute power to exercise his own judgment in the expenditure of three or four million dollars. I am not willing to do that, no matter who is Postmaster-General. I insist upon adhering to the policy of the Government as it has been carried on heretofore in relation to the mail service.

It will be seen, as has already been stated, that Congress has reduced the amount to be paid for carrying the mails on two or three occasions. First, there was a reduction of 10 per cent, then a reduction of 5 per cent on the railroads carrying the mails, and a reduction on the Government roads of 30 per cent at one time, and so the reductions have gone forward under the control of the legislative power of the Government.

If the Postmaster-General suggests to Congress that he thinks we are paying too much, let him send here a report showing exactly wherein the system ought to be changed from that which now exists under the law. The Postmaster-General ought not to be the embodiment of the law as the sole distributor of this money. Let him suggest such changes of the law as will be in harmony with existing law, under which we have been reducing the cost of this service, if he thinks the cost ought to be reduced. Then we will take up his suggestions and consider them. Committee after committee has been in session in this and in previous Congresses considering the subject of whether the Government has been paying too much or too little for this postal service, and they have investigated and continue to investigate it, and reports have been made, the result of which has been that two reductions have been made in the cost of carrying the mails.

The mails are, however, carried not only in postal cars—for there are very few of them comparatively, five or six or seven hundred, I suppose—but the vast amount of the mail is carried by weight over the country, and under the law the mail is weighed every four years, I believe, and then the railroad companies are paid wholly on the basis of weight ascertained at a given time, and they go on and carry the mail for four years under that arrangement. In 1890, for instance, the mails were weighed, and whether the mail increases fourfold or not between that period and 1894, precisely the same rate of compensation continues to be paid. So there is a fairness about this thing which ought to be observed, in my judgment, by the Congress of the United States.

As to the question of striking out the special facility clause of this bill as it came from the House of Representatives, I voted in committee to strike it out. I tried to have that provision of the law repealed some years ago. I did it then because it seemed to me, from all the evidence I could get, that it was giving no special accommodations to the people. The evidence before the Committee on Appropriations is to the effect that under that provision the railroad lines which carry the mails only get into Atlanta, for instance, going south, fifty-six minutes earlier than the competing lines running along down the coast. The committee do not think, and I understand the Postmaster-General does not think, that that provision ought to be retained in the bill, and I shall vote to strike it out because, in my judgment, in that case we are paying about $200,000 a year to a number of railroads making a general line from Springfield, Mass., to New Orleans that we ought not to pay.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I fail to appreciate the argument of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If the postal railroad cars should be owned by the United States Government and be used as post-offices, we should simply place that branch of the postal service on the same footing with the post-office buildings of the United States. We now are making large appropriations for post-office buildings, in which the officers of the Government distribute and receive the mails of the country. If these cars are ambulatory post-offices, why should we not own them?

The Senator conjures up, I think, a phantom as to the expense of hauling the postal clerks in these cars. Can we not make a contract in regard to the hauling of the cars and then put as many officers in the cars as we see proper to put there? What objection can there be to a system of that kind if it saves money to the people of this country?

Where does this opposition come from? Mr. President, it is astonishing with what unanimity the railroad companies of the United States fight every proposition to place cars which do not belong to them upon their rails. I had a very remarkable exemplification of this a few years ago when I was chairman of the committee of the Senate upon meat products, and had occasion to examine into the way in which meats and cattle were hauled upon the railroads, especially going in and coming out of Chicago. If any Senator will examine that sworn testimony of the railroad officials he will find that upon all the railroads running from Chicago to New York no cattle owner was permitted to put a car that he had rented or bought or built, unless it was the large packing houses in the city of Chicago, who built their own refrigerator cars and ran them upon these railroads, and received a rebate upon every ton of meat that they hauled from Chicago to New York and to the seaboard. But when a cattle owner from Iowa or Wisconsin or Missouri or Kansas or Nebraska proposed to rent a car or to build a car to go through from Omaha, for instance, to New York, when he arrived in Chicago he was coolly informed that he must drop his own car and pay for a car that belonged to the railroad companies that owned the lines from Chicago to the seaboard. That was the unquestioned state of the case, and it remains so to-day.

We reported from that committee a bill to do away with this outrageous oppression and monopoly, but I was never able, on account of some subtle influence in this body, to get that bill considered, and it is now here ready for action. We can not get it considered. The railroad companies were determined that all the cattle shippers should put cattle upon their cars, take them off at Buffalo, and pay for the cost of feeding and watering the cattle in the stock yards at Buffalo and Chicago, they being the property of the railroad companies.

I endeavored, sir, as chairman of that committee, to get hold of the books of the Chicago Stock Yards companies, to see who owned those yards, but they refused to produce those books and they spirited away their witnesses and their employees, so that they could not be brought before the committee; and here to-day when we propose, in the interest of the people of the United States, to build our own cars, as we build our own post-office buildings, we are told very coolly that we can not do it, that it is throwing away money, that the Post-Office Department should not have this discretion. Suppose you give this discretion to the Postmaster-General, does that put him off this continent? Does that take him away from the jurisdiction of this Congress? Can we not supervise his expenditures? Can we not look through his discretion? Does it remove him from the control of the representatives of the people of this country? No, Mr. President.

These railroad companies seem determined to control absolutely all the transportation that goes over their roads, and that no private citizen, and not even the Government of the United States, shall build and own cars and pay a reasonable compensation for their being hauled.

Mark the difference between the Pullman Palace Car Company and the great meat shippers of Chicago, and the ordinary people of the United States. Whenever these corporations come in contact with other corporations with so much money that they can neither terrorize them nor drive them away, then they immediately make terms. Messrs. Armour, and Swift & Co., at Chicago, with their enormous capital, coerced these railroad companies into allowing them to put their own cars upon the tracks that run east from Chicago to the seaboard. Mr. Pullman, with his enormous capital, is able to coerce these railroad companies into making terms with him, and then he proceeds to put his own price upon the people of the United States for sleeping facilities on his cars, and when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] undertakes here in this body to limit the enormous charges made by Mr. Pullman, we are told that we have no right to do it, that we are invading private property, and that Mr. Pullman has a right to charge what he pleases!

These railroad companies to-day—and I assert it, and they do not dare to deny it—are giving rebates to meat shippers in the city of Chicago. When one of my constituents who brings a bunch of 50 head of cattle to be shipped abroad from New York gets to Chicago he is made to unload his cattle and water and feed them in stock yards which belong to the railroad companies. When he wants to ship on to New York he can not put the cattle in his own cars, but he must put them in cattle cars belonging to the railroad company and reship them to Buffalo and pay these expenses again in the stock yards there, which also belong to the railroad companies.

I do not care whether the Postmaster-General recommends this or not. I am willing to take the word of an ex-Postmaster-General, now a member of this body, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who is the author of this amendment. I am willing to take his opinion, and I wish to seize every opportunity to make everything in the way of transportation in this country cheaper to the Government and to the people. It is absurd beyond description to tell us that the Postmaster-General, if the amendment is adopted, will escape the jurisdiction of Congress and do as he pleases. We have not yet come to that sort of autocracy in any department of this Government, and for one I am not willing to admit that it can be done.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to submit a suggestion or two upon the pending bill, and probably this is as good a time for me to do it as any other. The remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] make what I have to say particularly applicable at this time.

I will preface what I have to say by the statement that the post-office business of the United States now amounts to about 20 per cent, or nearly 20 per cent, of the entire business of the Government, and that the cost of the Railway Mail Service equals about 10 per cent of the total passenger traffic of the country. While I have not investigated the subject in all its fullness, yet I understand that practically the railway companies which carry our mails dictate the terms upon which the compensation is based, that there is no competition among bidders for carrying the mail.

The late Postmaster-General, Mr. Wanamaker, was of opinion that the carrying of the United States mails cost the people of the United States three or four times as much as the transportation is actually worth, and that it is because of the fact that the railway companies themselves dictate the terms. I remember that in a conversation with that officer once I asked him why he did not propose legislation or why Congress did not act, having such information, and his reply was that the railway companies of the country see to it that the representatives in Congress in both branches take care of the interests of the railway people, and that it is practically impossible to procure legislation in the way of reducing those expenses.

Mr. President, I believe the time has come when it is important that we shall begin at least to consider whether or not the Government itself, acting independently of the railway companies if need be, shall transport its own mails. It is my intention at the proper time to propose an amendment, on page 4, in line 15, to insert between the first and second words in that line the following:

The purchase, equipment, and furnishing of railway post-office cars, ——— dollars.

So that it will amount to an appropriation of whatever sum the Senate sees proper, if it sees proper to name any amount, for the purchase of railway cars. Then we will be somewhat in the position referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as to whether or not we can place our cars upon the railway tracks of the country; and when the time comes, if it ever shall, that there is a conflict between the railway companies and the people of the United States acting through their Government, then we will begin the solution of the question of Government ownership and control of railway property. So the object I have in view in proposing the amendment and submitting these remarks is to suggest to the Senate the consideration of the question whether the time is not here when the people themselves shall look after the carrying of their own mails. Ninety-one million dollars are proposed to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, for the carrying of our mails, enough in ten years at that rate annually to build a mail railway along all the principal railway routes of the country. This will be an entering wedge in the great question of Government control of all our transportation.

Now, I have no doubt it is true, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] says, because he has given the subject more examination than I have, and as repeated, if I remember correctly, by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that every sixteen or eighteen months we pay enough for the use of the railway postal cars which we are now using to build and equip them. My amendment proposes that we shall buy the cars outright and furnish and equip them as our own cars. Then, whether we are permitted at a reasonable rate to use them upon the railway tracks now laid is a matter to be determined in the future.

The amount of money to be expended, as has been stated, is very large; but, going into details, it is wonderful what our railway postal service means. The different lines or routes that are now run over by our post-office cars number 1,136 and the mileage is 149,141.45. The number of cars under the control of the Post-Office Department that are now in use for the carrying of mails, cars upon which clerks are detailed to perform duty the same as they do in an ordinary post-office which is stationary, is 3,162. Then there are apartment cars besides these which carry the mails in sacks and packages and by weight.

The total number of apartment cars in use is 1,911; in reserve, 521. The total number of whole cars in use is 550; in reserve, 175. The total distance traveled by the crews that separate the mails of these traveling post-office cars is 155,932,942 miles; equal to a continuous line six thousand times around the earth at the equator. The number of clerks employed was 6,256 and their salary the last year amounted to $6,871,926.99.

The pieces of mail handled in transit amount to 10,033,973,790, and this does not include the matter redistributed for immediate delivery, which amounts to 483,667,275 pieces. During the last year, in addition to this vast amount of matter handled, the clerks also received, receipted for, recorded, and properly dispatched 15,253,536 registered packages and pieces, and 1,333,457 through registered pouches and inner registered sacks. The cost of simply the railway car service alone, separate and apart from the other matters, for the year ended June 30, 1894, was $2,921,957.18, and the appropriation proposed in the paragraph which we are now considering is $3,205,000. It is increasing continually. The total cost of the Railway Mail Service, including the different items for the year 1894, was $27,103,091.16.

As to the growth of the business, I have here the report of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service. I find on page 5 a table which shows the rapid and steady increase in the mail business. I find that in 1884, ten years ago, the total number of pieces of mail distributed was 4,519,661,900, and in 1894, ten years later, the amount had increased about 240 per cent, to 10,033,973,790, and so the table goes on referring to different items showing a continual increase. Then, as to the increase of cost, I find on page 29 of the same report, taking a period of fourteen years beginning in 1881, the amount expended that year for railway mail service was $1,268,221, and in 1894 the amount I gave a moment ago, $2,933,203. So that continuously from year to year we are increasing these expenditures. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the expense will be $91,000,000. In five years from now, by the time the twentieth century comes, it will cost us for postal facilities a round $100,000,000.

It was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that we could easily reduce the cost of carrying our letters from 2 cents to 1 cent apiece. If that be true, we can reduce expenditures in other directions; but before we can procure this reduction, it will be necessary for the people to take charge of the matter themselves.

This is all I wish to say. I want to submit to Senators, it may seem a little odd and yet it ought not to be, considering the source it comes from, that a member of this body should suggest at this time, under present circumstances, the public control of the railways. But, Mr. President, the railways are highways. They are public highways, and the people have a right to control them. They ought to go further; but, at a more appropriate time I expect to refer to that particular branch of the subject again. The point I now submit to the Senate is, whether it is not time for us to make preparation for taking charge of the carrying of our own mails ourselves.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] upon the proposed amendment making an appropriation for the purchase of cars by the Government for postal purposes bring into view one of the questions that is being agitated by members of the Populist party. It is a step in the right direction, in my judgment. The time is rapidly approaching when the Government must take charge not only in the sense of supervision, but in the sense of absolute ownership, of postal cars, as well as of the engine that draws them and the track upon which they run.

The remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] are a revelation to me. I have known in a general way, of course, that the railroads are controlling the shipments of stock, that they are exacting from the people unusual sums of money, and resorting to many devices to do so; but I have never known that we had reached that point in the history of this country with reference to railroads where it was to be openly confessed that the Government is unequal to the emergency of controlling them, and where the railroad companies themselves not only dictate our policy to a large extent with reference to the railway postal service, but where they completely dictate the policy of the carrying commerce of this country and openly defy any attempt on the part of Congress or any legislative body to control them in that respect.

This brings me, Mr. President, to observe that the true starting point with reference to the management of the affairs of this Government lies, not so much in attention to these matters of detail at this time as it is for us to enter on and settle the question whether the people of the United States and of the different States of the Union shall have a republican form of government, a government such as is guaranteed to them by the Constitution of this country. Mr. President, this country's success, its prosperity, and its endurance are dependent upon a government administered strictly in accordance with our Constitution.

While upon this topic I desire to call attention now, it being as well to do so at this time as any other, to the condition of political affairs existing in the State of Alabama. It is a delicate matter for me to speak of, and I shall speak of it as delicately as I can and at the same time produce facts to the Senate and the country which I think ought to be produced and which I think the people are fairly entitled to know. There can not be any doubt, if the evidence I have in my possession is to be believed, and I think it is, that the State of Alabama for at least two or three years has been deprived of a republican form of government. I do not mean that the State does not elect officers there at all, and that her people enjoy none of the forms of a republican system of government; but I do mean to say that the people of the State, or a very large portion of them, have been deprived of the substance of a republican form of government, which is the essential of our constitutional guaranty.

I have been the recipient of letters almost without number from prominent men of that State, the recipient of affidavits and different forms of evidence, calling attention to the deplorable condition existing there, and asking Congress to take some steps to secure the right of suffrage and the legitimate results of the right of the elective franchise in that State. Members of the legislature, numbering I think something like thirty-five, Populists and Republicans, recently met in a joint caucus and sent me resolutions reciting the fact that a republican form of government does not exist in that State, and urging upon Congress an investigation with reference to that matter, and then legislation based upon such investigation necessary and essential to secure them their rights. I have many of these letters with me at this time, and some of the resolutions, to which I will briefly refer.

I introduced in the Senate on the 19th day of December last a resolution covering this question, which I will read:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, not more than two of whom shall be members of the same political party, shall, on the adoption of this resolution, be appointed by the Vice-President, whose duty it shall be to make inquiry into whether there is, and for the last two years and a half just past has been, a republican form of government in the State of Alabama, and inquire into the manner of the election of United States Senators and Members of Congress from said State, and whether there was any fraud, force, intimidation, or other unfairness in the elections in said State; inquire into the election of State senators and members of the legislature, in so far as their election might affect the election of a United States Senator, and into all other matters and things in any manner pertaining to or affecting the political autonomy of said State, and the status of its membership in the United States Senate and the Congress of the United States, and the fairness of the elections by which the selection of the United States Senators and Members of Congress was brought about.

A large portion of the people of that State, numbering many thousands, claim that a republican form of government does not exist there and has not existed for many years and that it is impossible under the existing condition of affairs for them to give expression to their sentiments upon any political question at the ballot box and have those sentiments carried into execution as thus expressed. I will at this time read a letter I have received from R. A. Moseley, jr., upon this subject:

ROOMS REPUBLICAN STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Birmingham, Ala., January 30, 1895.

SIR: I am glad to see that you are leading in a movement before the Senate to send a committee of five to investigate the Bourbon Democratic election methods in this State. I do not believe we have had a free ballot and an honest count in this State since the administration of Governor D. P. Lewis, twenty-three years ago.

Yours, very truly,

R. A. MOSELEY, JR.,

Chairman Republican State Executive Committee.

HON. WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

In connection with the letter of Dr. Moseley, who is the official head of the Republican organization of that State, I will read a letter of recent date, sent to me by Hon. R. F. Kolb, who has been twice a candidate for governor of Alabama upon the Populist ticket, and who claims, and whose friends claim, that he has been twice elected:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., January 7, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I write to thank you for the interest you are taking in our Alabama contest.

The evidence of frauds in our last August election is being formulated and will soon be forwarded to you by Col. W. S. Reese. When all this evidence is published to the world it will cause the organized Democracy of Alabama and their election methods to stink in the nostrils of the nation.

I mail you to-day copies of the last two issues of the People's Tribune.

I am, very truly, yours,

R. F. KOLB.

HON. WILLIAM V. ALLEN, Washington, D. C.

I will read a letter from Hon. S. M. Adams, of Blocton, Ala., who is chairman of the State Populist executive committee:

BLOCTON, ALA., January 10, 1895.

DEAR SIR: Please accept many thanks in behalf of the People's party and all honest citizens in the State of Alabama for the effort that you are making in the Senate to have restored to the people of Alabama a republican form of government, for as it now stands we do not have it.

Very respectfully,

S. M. ADAMS,

Chairman State Executive Committee, People's Party.

HON. WILLIAM V. ALLEN, Washington, D. C.

I read a letter from Hon. A. C. Nixon, chairman of the People's Party Congressional committee of the Eighth Alabama district:

NEW DECATUR, ALA., December 28, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to thank you, in behalf of our people in the northern district of Alabama, for your interest in our behalf in presenting the resolution in the United States Senate for a committee to investigate the elections of this State. Believe me that all the people of this State who are opposed to ring rule will appreciate your efforts and energy in giving our people a chance to prove that high-handed anarchy has possession of our State government, and that the most fraudulent methods have kept not only the State government but the Representatives in Congress in the possession of a vile and unprincipled ring.

We have evidence that has never been yet presented, even that Captain Kolb and W. S. Reeves have not yet figured upon. The methods have been various. What methods were used in the black belt could not be used in the northern part of the State, but other methods were resorted to. In the August election here in Decatur 200 voters went to the polls in one body, all in favor of Captain Kolb's ticket. They asked for one of the clerks to be appointed who would represent their side, as a guaranty that they would have their votes honestly recorded. The request was refused, and they said they would not vote and have the votes counted opposite to or against the side that they were cast.

In some beats we can show by sworn evidence of the voters who testify that they voted against the "organized" double the number there was given for our candidate. Were the votes counted as cast both representatives of the legislature from Morgan County, who voted for General MORGAN's election, would have been defeated and the two votes would have been cast for W. S. Reeves. Not only that, but Col. Lee Crandall would have received the certificate of election instead of Gen. JOSEPH WHEELER. And what is still worse, many of our people here say, "What is the use?" and refuse to vote, believing that they will be robbed of their vote anyhow, and stay at home. In fact, the spirit of liberty is about crushed. The writer of this letter has always been a Democrat, and still believes in the platform as pronounced by the Democratic convention of 1868 that nominated Seymour and Blair; but, Senator, I am now with the People's Party and I believe I am still for the same platform of 1868. Permit me again to thank you for your interest and energy.

I am, most truly, yours,

A. C. NIXON,

Chairman People's Party Congressional Committee, Eighth District.

HON. WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

I have in my possession many dozens of such letters, which I forbear to read.

The resolutions which I have read were resolutions adopted by a joint caucus of members of the People's Party and the Republican members of the general assembly of Alabama, now in session, held on the 26th of January. The following preamble and resolutions were offered by Hon. R. T. Ewing and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

At a meeting of the caucus of the People's Party and Republican members of the general assembly of Alabama, held on the 26th of January, the following preambles and resolutions were offered by Hon. R. T. Ewing and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Whereas the Hon. W. V. ALLEN has introduced a resolution in the United States Senate which, if adopted, would assure an investigation that would develop the fraud perpetrated in the August election in 1894; and

Whereas this movement may involve the restoration of the rights and liberties of the people of Alabama; and

Whereas this consummation is most earnestly desired by every adherent of right and every advocate of justice and every devotee of freedom and liberty of this State; and

Whereas this action on the part of Hon. W. V. ALLEN is most heartily approved and indorsed: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the sincere acknowledgment and most earnest thanks of each senator and representative in this caucus are hereby tendered to Hon. W. V. ALLEN for this exhibition of broad-minded statesmanship, which would protect freedom and liberty and vouchsafe the enjoyment of every right and privilege to every citizen of this great Republic.

Resolved further, That we request Hon. W. V. ALLEN to abate no effort, to relax no zeal, and to tire not, nor grow weary in the praiseworthy undertaking in which he has embarked, but, encouraged by that love of liberty which inspires every patriot, and stimulated by that devotion to duty which has ever characterized all his public efforts, to go forward and onward, until the people of our beloved State shall be disenthralled from the slavery imposed by fraud manipulators and perpetrators, by corrupt officers, and our people shall have restored to them their lost liberties.

Resolved further, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be transmitted to the Hon. W. V. ALLEN as a feeble recognition of the deep gratitude held by every member of this caucus for his unselfish, patriotic, and noble efforts in our behalf.

A. T. GOODWIN, Chairman.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that when a question so important is being discussed, the question whether a sovereign State of the Union has a republican form of government, there ought to be a quorum present in the Senate Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Fifty-two Senators are present. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the particular condition of affairs in the State of Alabama, which is borne out by the testimony in my possession, and which I will read.

I have had prepared by competent authority a brief statement showing the condition of the actual vote in that State at the August election in 1894, as well as the fraudulent votes cast, and which it is claimed were counted, showing conclusively a change in the result of the election in consequence of this method. There are certain counties in the State of Alabama known as the black belt counties. I know nothing of them except as I look upon them on the map, and as I am able to gather evidence of the condition of the people and the election machinery in those counties. Here is a paper which contains the vote of the black belt counties, which I will read:

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator excuse me for asking what is his authority for stating that there are 34,000 fraudulent votes out of fifty-some thousand?

Mr. ALLEN. I will show the Senator as I proceed the authority for that statement. I think I will be able to make it plain.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator has not been well heard on this side.

Mr. ALLEN. I stated that I have evidence covering several of these counties almost completely. I did not have the evidence so completely, however, as to some other counties, but have estimated that the same frauds ran through them that we found to exist in the counties of which we have evidence. This result is produced in many of these counties. This estimate is based upon actual evidence in my possession, and I had this table made for the purpose of putting it in a form so that it can be readily understood. Take, for instance, the county of Bullock, Fitzpatrick's election beat, as it is called in that State. The votes counted there were votes at the gubernatorial election in August, 1894. Oates was the Democratic candidate and Kolb the Populist candidate for governor. There were counted for Oates 331 votes, for Kolb 22; total, 353. As a matter of fact only 104 votes were actually cast. Two hundred and forty-nine were fraudulent votes. I will read a copy of an affidavit, the original of which is in the possession of Mr. Skaggs, a prominent citizen of the State of Alabama, regarding this matter.

Here are the names of 104 persons who voted at that beat at that time:

In Lowndes County there were counted for Oates at that election 4,995 votes, for Kolb 361, making a total of 5,356. Of this number 3,048 were fraudulent. To establish this assertion, I read the following affidavit of L. Reese:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Lowndes:

Before me, H. R. Williamson, a justice of the peace in and for the said county and State, personally appeared L. Reese, who is personally known to me as a man of good reputation for truth and veracity, and as a prominent and influential citizen of said county, who, after being duly sworn, says under oath, that at the State election held in said county and State on the first Monday in August, 1894, the supporters of Ruben F. Kolb, candidate for governor, had inspectors at fourteen of the precincts or voting places in said county, as required by law, at which voting places or precincts William C. Oates, candidate for governor, received 555 votes, and Ruben F. Kolb, candidate for governor, received 355 votes.

That at the other six voting places or precincts in said county the supporters of Ruben F. Kolb, candidate for governor, were not allowed an inspector as provided by law, and that William C. Oates, candidate for governor, had returned for him 1,617 votes, and Ruben F. Kolb, candidate for governor, had returned for him 6 votes, as having been cast at said election in said six precincts.

Affiant further states that he was present at Hayneville, the county seat of said Lowndes County, on the Saturday following said day of election, when the county board of supervisors canvassed the vote of said county; and affiant witnessed the canvass of the official vote of the county of Lowndes, at the same time taking down on paper the vote by precincts as called out by the sheriff of said county, said sheriff being one of said board of supervisors; that the total vote of said Lowndes county, as canvassed by precincts by said board of supervisors, and as called out by said sheriff, and noted down by the clerk and others present, was 2,272 votes for Oates for governor, and 361 votes for Kolb for governor.

That in the official declaration of the result of the State election in the different counties, as made by the speaker of the house of representatives of Alabama, the result in said Lowndes County was given as 4,995 votes for William C. Oates for governor, and 361 votes for Ruben F. Kolb for governor.

L. REESE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this, the 3d day of January, 1895.

H. R. WILLIAMSON,
Justice of the Peace.

In Dallas County the total vote counted was 6,517. Fifteen hundred and seventy-seven were actually cast; 4,940 were fraudulent. In support of that, I read the following affidavit:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Dallas [Senator MORGAN's home county]:

Before me, R. O. Blakey, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared David Lloyd, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That he is a citizen of Dallas County, Ala., and has been residing in said county for ten years, and is now engaged in business of a general merchandise and commission merchant.

Affiant further states that he is well acquainted in Dallas County, Ala., knowing personally and in a business way a large number of the citizens of said county; that he took an active interest in the campaign preceding the election for State officers and members of the general assembly in this State, held on the 6th day of August, 1894; that, by correspondence and personal interviews with prominent citizens from every precinct in said county, affiant became well informed as to the number of voters actually registered prior to the said August election; that he has been informed and has good reason to believe that there were not exceeding 2,000 voters actually registered; that the negro voters residing in said county had been advised not to register, and that, in his opinion, and to the best of his knowledge and belief, not more than 5 per cent of the negro voters in said county registered for said election.

Affiant further states that he was chairman of the executive committee of the Jeffersonian Democracy of said county during the recent campaign in the State election, and that, in this way, he undertook, prior to said August election, to perfect an arrangement by which he might be informed as to the number of votes actually cast in said county at said election; and for this purpose he, as chairman of said executive committee, requested and had reputable citizens in nearly every precinct in said county to remain at the different polling places on the day of said election from the opening to the closing of the polls; and from the reports of such citizens who did remain at such polling places he obtained what he believes to be accurate information as to the number of votes actually cast in the different precincts in said county at said election; and such information, so obtained, is corroborated by current reports from various sources, and is generally believed by reputable citizens in Dallas County.

Affiant further declares that the following is a full statement, in detail, of the votes actually cast in the different precincts in said county at said election:

Affiant further states that there are actually 36 voting precincts in Dallas County, Ala., but that 5 precincts are included in the city of Selma, in every one of which precincts, in municipal elections, a voting place is provided, but that in county, State, and Federal elections all voters residing in the 5 precincts included in the city of Selma vote at precinct No. 36.

Affiant further states that at Cahaba precinct No. 16, the polls were not opened, and no election was held in said precinct on the 6th day of August, 1894.

Affiant further states that the grand jury of Dallas County recently undertook to investigate frauds in said election, held in said county; and, for that purpose, sent a committee from said grand jury to wait upon P. G. Wood, judge of probate of said county, and to request of him the registration lists as returned to his office from the various precincts of said county. Such request was refused by said judge of probate. Said committee waited upon said probate judge a second time, and requested to be permitted to inspect said registration lists, and that after the second refusal on the part of said probate judge said committee was informed by said judge of probate that the registration lists could not be delivered to them without an order from the judge of the circuit court. After said second refusal a conference was held between the foreman of said grand jury and said judge of probate and no further effort was made on the part of said grand jury to investigate said frauds and irregularities.

I may as well state in this connection, Mr. President, that according to the law of the State of Alabama the judge of probate in each county is the legal custodian of the registration books of the different beats in his county.

I will read another affidavit:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Dallas [The city in which Senator MORGAN lives, beat 36].

Before me, R. O. Blakey, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared S. P. McIlwain, who is known to me, and who, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That he is a citizen of Dallas County, Ala., and has been a resident of said county for sixty-five years; that there are 36 precincts in the county of Dallas, and that the city of Selma includes 5 of these precincts; that in the municipal elections there are 5 polling places in said city of Selma; but in the county, State, and Federal elections all electors residing in the 5 precincts composing the city of Selma are required to vote at precinct No. 36, at the court-house, in the city of Selma; that he was at the polling place of precinct No. 36, in the city of Selma, on the 6th day of August, 1894; that he was at said precinct before the opening of the polls on the day of said election, and remained at said polls continuously, from the opening to the closing of the polls; that he saw every man who entered the polling place at said precinct No. 36, and saw that only 719 voters, including the election managers, clerks, and the returning officer, entered said polling place from the time the polls were opened until they were closed on the day of said election.

Affiant further states that he was within 75 feet of said polling place, and in a position to see every man who entered said polling place, and no man could enter said polling place without said affiant seeing him, as affiant did not leave said polling place on day of said election from the time the polls were opened until they were closed, and that 719 voters, and no more, entered said polling place on said election day, the 6th of August, 1894.

Affiant further states that he was present at the court-house on the Saturday following said election, at a canvassing of the returns before the county supervisors, and that the following is a statement in detail of the votes as announced by the county supervisors, and alleged to have been returned from the various precincts of said county, to wit:

Affiant further states that having lived in said county of Dallas for many years he is well acquainted with the people of said county, and is well informed as to the public sentiment and political movements in said county; that he is informed and has reason to believe, and does believe, that very few of the negro voters in said Dallas County registered during the year 1894, and that at least 75 per cent of the voters of said Dallas County are negroes; that he has seen a statement published showing the actual vote, by precincts, of Dallas County on the 6th day of August, 1894, to be a total of 1,577 votes; and that he is informed and has good reason to believe, after a personal investigation, that 1,577 votes is the total number of votes cast in said county of Dallas on the 6th day of August, 1894.

W. Berry, registrar of said precinct; that the registration certificate given affiant was No. 227; that up to the time affiant registered there had not been registered exceeding 50 voters; that affiant inquired of a large number of negroes whom he saw in and about or near to the residence of said registrar, where registration was being made, and that he did not meet one who did not tell him that he had not registered.

Affiant further states that he requested a number of negroes, whom he saw after affiant had registered, to go immediately and register; that after being registered said parties, who had registered at request of affiant, came to affiant and exhibited their registration certificates, and said registration certificates were numbered above 227, that being the number of affiant's certificate of registration.

Affiant further states that on the inside of the polling place at said election, in said precinct, there were four men, three white men and one negro; that said white men were W. W. Berry, T. J. Lock, and — Dudley, and the negro aforesaid was Simon Armstrong; that said four men acted as inspectors and clerks at said election in said precinct, and that they were all the men who were inside of said polling place for the purpose of managing said election.

Affiant further states that all of said inspectors and clerks were members of the "organized" Democratic party, and that the opposition to the "organized" Democracy had no representative at said polling place at said election.

B. Martin, on said morning, said Martin, so affiant is informed, being one of the inspectors of said election at Martin's beat, No. 7, said Bamberger said to affiant that the total vote cast at said Martin's beat, No. 7, on the 6th day of August, 1894, was 77+ votes, and no more, and that said votes had been counted and returned as cast.

This much, Mr. President, upon the evidence of instances of specific fraud with reference to the State ticket in the State of Alabama at the August election of 1894.

At Hollow Square beat, in Hale County, the votes counted were 368; the votes actually cast, according to the affidavit, were 52; there being 316 fraudulent votes counted for Oates. I read the following affidavit:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Hale:

Before me, J. M. Jefferson, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared H. T. Stringfellow, who is known to me, and who, by me being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says as follows:

That he is a resident of said Hale County, Ala., and over the age of 21 years; that he was present at Hollow Square beat, No. 6, in said county and State, at the election on the 6th day of August, 1894; that the inspectors of said election at said precinct were S. W. Walton, Jim McCrory, and Alf Johnson; that the clerks of said election were J. W. Stephenson and Jim Wilson; and affiant further states that all of said inspectors and clerks at said election in said precinct are well known as members of the "organized" Democratic party.

Affiant further states that before the opening of the polls at said election, said inspectors, at the suggestion of S. W. Walton, held up their hands and said substantially as follows: "We agree to hold this election for the best interest of the country."

Affiant further states that there was at the opening of the polls no magistrate present, but that A. J. May, magistrate of said precinct, appeared at the polls about 10 o'clock a. m.

Affiant with his son, B. M. Stringfellow, who was over twenty years of age, and not twenty-one on the 6th day of August, 1894, and W. H. May, were present when said inspectors opened the polls; that affiant with his son, B. M. Stringfellow, remained at said polling place, or within 70 feet of the same, continuously, from the opening of the polls until they were closed; that said W. H. May remained with affiant and his son at the polls until about 12 o'clock noon, when W. H. May went to dinner.

Affiant further states that from the time the polls were opened until they were closed at said precinct in said county and State, the total number of voters who entered said polling place was 52, and no more. Affiant states that he saw every man who entered said polling place from the time said inspectors opened said polls for holding said election until the close of said polling place, and that there were 52 men who entered said polling place within said time, every one of whom was personally known to said affiant.

Affiant further states that there were about 308 votes returned from said precinct at said election, of which 5 were declared for Kolb and 303 for Oates, the nominees for governor, respectively, at the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894.

Affiant further states that during the month of November, after the election for Congressman was held on the 6th day of November last, he, with three other citizens of said precinct, No. 6, went before A. J. May, a justice of the peace in and for said precinct, and stated that they desired to make oath as to irregularities which occurred at said election in said precinct, held on the 6th day of November last; and that said A. J. May refused to affiant and those who were with him the privilege of making oath before him as magistrate, stating that he, A. J. May, was afraid to take the oath of affiant and those who were with him, for the reason that other parties, who were "organized" Democrats, were friendly to said A. J. May, and that it would injure him to take the oath of affiant and those who were with him.

The law of the State of Alabama requires, "when it is practicable"—I think I use the exact language of the statute—that where there are candidates representing two opposing political parties, one of the judges or inspectors of the election shall be selected from the opposite political party.

In Pin Hook beat the votes counted were 163; the votes actually polled were 49; 113 were fraudulent. In support of that I read the following affidavit:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Hale:

Before me, J. M. Jefferson, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared before A. J. Mayfield, who is known to me, and who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

That he is over 21 years of age, and is a citizen of Hale County; that he was present at Pin Hook beat, No. 2, in said county and State, at the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894; that he was at the polling place at said precinct at the time the polls were opened on said day of said election, and remained there until they were closed, with the exception of about two hours at noon, while he was at dinner; that during his absence of two hours he left F. T. May in his place to keep tally of the votes cast; that while affiant was present at said polling place on said day of said election there were only 44 votes cast, and that F. T. May told said affiant that while affiant was absent and said May was acting in his place there were only 5 votes cast, making a total of 49 votes cast in said precinct at said election, including the votes cast by election managers, clerks, and returning officer.

Affiant further states that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that there were 49 voters, and no more, who entered said polling place on said day of said election; that while he was present, as stated, there were only 44 voters, including the election managers, clerks, and returning officer, who entered said polling place.

At Cedarville beat, Hale County, the votes counted were 504; votes actually polled, 48; fraudulent, 456. In support of this statement I read the following affidavits:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Hale:

Before me, J. M. Jefferson, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared James M. Hobson, who is known to me, and who, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That he is a resident citizen of said county and State, and is over 21 years of age; that Tom Wilburn was one of the inspectors in Precinct No. 1, Havana, in said county and State, at the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894; that the other two inspectors of election in said precinct were members of the "organized" Democratic party.

Affiant further states that he was present at the court-house on the Saturday following said election at a canvassing of the returns of said election; that when the box of Precinct No. 1, Havana, was opened, the returns were signed by only two inspectors, both of whom were "organized" Democrats, and that before the vote in said precinct was announced, a motion was made by affiant before the supervisor of said election to throw out said box on account of the failure of one of the inspectors to sign the returns, whereas the law required that all three of the inspectors should sign the returns, and because of gross irregularities in the nature of intimidation, perpetrated by certain officers holding the election; and the affiant offered to prove by the inspector, who was there present, and who declined and refused to sign said returns because of such irregularities and intimidation which said inspector could not prevent, that such irregularities were perpetrated. Motion of affiant was overruled.

That he is a resident citizen of said Hale County, Ala., and over the age of 21 years; that he is personally acquainted with W. C. Christian, judge of probate of said county; that said W. C. Christian, judge of probate, officially stated to each of said affiants, after the close of the registration period, but before the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894, that the total number of votes registered at Cedarville beat, No. 7, in said county and State, was 58, and no more. And the affiants further state that the registrar, P. H. Waller, of said Cedarville precinct, No. 7, stated to each of said affiants, after the registration period had closed, but before said election, that the total number of voters registered in said Precinct No. 7 was 58, and no more.

And said affiants further say that the total number of votes, as shown by the returns of said election, held on the 6th day of August, 1894, and as counted by the board of supervisors, was 504 as having been cast in said precinct at said election; and that all of said 504 votes were returned as having been cast for William C. Oates, nominee of the "organized" Democracy.

In Jefferson County the charges of fraud in the management of Bessemer beat and other voting precincts are supported by the affidavits of T. T. Huey, J. M. Crook, C. H. Spencer, H. J. Palmer, T. R. Rollins, T. W. Lloyd, J. M. Farrell, J. J. Sullivan, James Moore, and John McEniry. One hundred and sixteen voters were denied the right to vote (see affidavit of James Moore).

STATE OF ALABAMA, Jefferson County:

Before me, J. H. Reville, a justice of the peace in and for said county and State, personally appeared J. M. Crook, C. H. Spencer, T. T. Huey, and H. T. Palmer, who are known to me, and who, being duly sworn, depose and say, each for himself, as follows:

That he is a citizen of Bessemer precinct, No. 33, in said county and State; that he was at the polling place of said precinct at the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894. That they were informed, and have just reason to believe, that an agreement had been reached between C. H. Spencer, president of the Jeffersonian Democracy of said precinct, and James Trotter, president of the organized Democracy of said precinct, and other leading and representative men of both political factions, that at said election the Jeffersonian Democracy should have one clerk and both the Jeffersonian and organized Democracy should have thirteen fixers each.

Affiants further state that they were present at said polling place when the polls were opened on day of said election, and that at the opening of said polls the managers of said election gave notice that only three fixers would be allowed the Jeffersonians and that the organized Democracy would have six fixers, against which arrangement, affiants are informed, Z. T. Carwile, Jeffersonian manager, protested.

Affiants further state that about one hour and a half or two hours after the polls had been opened in said precinct the managers of said election agreed to there being four fixers for the Jeffersonian Democracy and eight fixers for the organized Democracy, and thereupon affiant H. J. Palmer began to act as fixer for the Jeffersonian Democracy.

Affiants further state that at said polling place on said election day there were provided 12 booths; that at the opening of the polls the managers administered the oath to illiterate voters, as required by law, 12 at a time, and that this method continued for about one hour after the polls were opened, and that during said time said election progressed satisfactorily, and there was no disorder or confusion at said polling place, but that about one hour after the polls were opened the managers announced that only one illiterate voter would be permitted to appear and qualify at a time; that following said announcement said managers, to wit, W. R. Henderson and T. P. Waller, organized Democrats, in various improper and illegal ways, interrogated illiterate voters by asking them many useless and unnecessary questions, such as their names, places of residence, etc., and permitted deputy sheriffs and ticket fixers, who were organized Democrats, to bulldoze, intimidate, and confuse illiterate voters who appeared at said polling place and declared their inability to mark their own tickets and presented their certificates of registration.

Affiants further state that deputy sheriffs and fixers were permitted inside of the polling place at all times, and that said deputy sheriffs and fixers joined with the managers in asking illiterate voters many questions tending to retard the voting and confuse and embarrass illiterate voters, said questions being unnecessary and irrelevant, such as where do you live, what is your name, etc.

Affiants, J. M. Crook, C. H. Spencer, and H. T. Palmer, further state that one J. M. Perkins, an employee of the T. C. L. and R. E. Co., and an "organized" Democrat claiming to be a deputy sheriff and fixer at said election, was inside said polling place, leaning over the table on which the ballot box was placed; that Z. T. Carwile, one of the managers of said election, called upon Deputy Sheriff Burgin to cause Perkins to move from said table. Said deputy sheriff refused, saying that he had no authority to remove said Perkins. Affiants further state that said Perkins would go to the booths while tickets were being fixed for illiterate voters, and listen to the conversation between the illiterate voters and the fixers.

Affiants further state that about 11 o'clock in the morning on day of said election at said polling place, Officer — arrested W. D. Brown, one of the fixers selected from the Jeffersonian Democracy, under warrant issued by William Jackson, notary public and ex officio justice of the peace, upon complaint of E. A. Little, said Jackson and Little being members of the "organized" Democracy; that Officer Burgin also arrested affiant C. H. Spencer, fixer, and Z. T. Carwile, Jeffersonian manager, under warrant issued by said Jackson, on complaint of said Little; that upon being arrested said Spencer and Carwile offered to give bond, but said Burgin refused to take bond, stating that he had no authority to do so, and that parties arrested must go to Birmingham. Affiant Spencer states that he went to the telephone and telephoned to Sheriff Morrow, at Birmingham, Ala., and asked said Sheriff Morrow if he had given orders that affiant and other parties arrested should not be allowed bond. Said Sheriff Morrow asked affiant what he (affiant) had done. Affiant replied that he had done nothing. Said Morrow then asked what that fellow Carwile had been doing. Said affiant told said Morrow that said Carwile had been doing nothing but his duty. Said Morrow then telephoned said Spencer that he (Spencer) should be allowed bond. Affiant Spencer further states that when he returned to said polling place said officer had left and bond had been fixed.

Affiants further state that, when the polls were opened at said precinct on day of said election, the booths were arranged so as to obscure the view of the election managers, clerks, and the general public from occupants of said booths, for the front of said booths were turned in an opposite direction from the managers and clerks at said election, as well as from the public; but about 11 o'clock in the morning of said election day one of the deputy sheriffs reversed said booths so as to have said election booths facing the election managers, clerks, and the public, and thereby giving full view of the occupants of said booths, said occupants being seen by the election managers, clerks, and the general public.

Affiants Spencer, Palmer, and Crook further state that one E. A. Little, an "organized" Democrat, who was present at said polling place, directed said deputy sheriff to change said election booths.

Affiants Spencer, Crook, and Palmer state that E. A. Little, William Jackson, and L. Y. Lyscomb, all "organized" Democrats, and said Lyscomb being the nominee for representative from said county on the "organized" Democratic ticket, were within 15 feet of said polling place, calling out to illiterate voters who entered said polling place, telling them what fixers to call upon to fix their tickets, and said Little was cursing, using loud and boisterous language, and in many ways intimidating and bulldozing timid and illiterate voters.

STATE OF ALABAMA, Jefferson County:

Before me, J. H. Reville, a justice of the peace in and for said county and State, personally appeared J. M. Crook, C. H. Spencer, J. J. Sullivan, Henry Palmer, James Moore, John McEniry, T. R. Collins, T. W. Lloyd, and J. M. Farrell, who are known to me, and who, being duly sworn, depose and say, each for himself, as follows:

That he was present at the polling place of Bessemer precinct at the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894; that there were about twenty-five deputy sheriffs, or men claiming to be deputy sheriffs and wearing the badges of such officers, at said polling place on the day of said election.

And affiants are informed and have good reason to believe that all of the deputy sheriffs aforesaid were members of the "organized" Democracy, and that the action of such deputy sheriffs tended and was in the direction of bulldozing and intimidating illiterate voters who were supposed to favor the Jeffersonian ticket; that said deputy sheriffs, by bulldozing and intimidation, prevented a large number of voters from entering the polling place and casting their votes; that the ropes about said polling place were so arranged as to enable such deputy sheriffs and police officers to favor those whom they wished to favor in entering said polling place.

And affiants saw said deputy sheriffs and police officers push many negroes away, although said negroes were trying to enter said polling place in regular order, and said deputy sheriffs and police officers permitted men known to be "organized" Democrats, and who were wearing Gates badges, to crawl under the ropes, and thus reach the polling place ahead of those who were in regular line; that many voters secured badges of police officers and deputy sheriffs, and in that way entered said polling place ahead of those who were in line and cast their votes; that all such voters who obtained badges from police officers or deputy sheriffs were supposed to be "organized" Democrats, and such voters, so affiants are informed, obtained said badges from deputy sheriffs and police officers who were "organized" Democrats, by stating to such officers that they intended to vote the "organized" Democratic ticket, and thereby said voters secured said officers' badges for the purpose of entering said polling place ahead of voters who were in regular line.

Affiants Spencer and Crook further state that, among many other acts of bulldozing and intimidation, — a negro, when he entered said polling place to vote was immediately arrested by Jim Perkins, a deputy sheriff as well as an "organized" Democrat, and said voter was taken outside of said polling place; but in a few minutes said Perkins came back with said negro and stated that he (Perkins) was mistaken, and that said negro wanted said Perkins to fix his (— negro) ticket; that said Perkins entered the booth with said negro and held a conversation with said negro, which affiants could not hear, but said negro indignantly left said polling place and declared that he would not vote; and said negro did not vote.

Affiants Spencer and Sullivan further state that they saw Jim Tate, A. A. Randall, and Charlie Gurst (Randall being an alderman of the city of Bessemer, and Gurst and Tate being police officers of said city) outside of the ropes violently pushing and shoving negroes away, and aiding white men to reach the polling place ahead of such negroes whom they had pushed away, although said negroes were in regular line when pushed away by said officers.

Before me, J. H. Reville, a justice of the peace in and for said county and State, personally appeared James Moore, who is known to me, and who, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That he is a resident of Bessemer precinct, No. 33, in said county and State, and was present at the voting place in said precinct at the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894; that at the time the polls were closed there was a large number of voters who had not voted at said election, but who had been present at said polling place for the purpose of voting at said election; that, with other citizens of said precinct, he examined the registration certificates in the possession of some of the voters who were denied the opportunity of voting, and counted 116 registration certificates in the possession of that many voters, who declared that they had been outside of the polling place for the purpose of voting, but were prevented on account of not being able to secure access to the polls before they were closed; that the confusion and disorder which prevailed at said polling place on said day was the cause of their not being able to gain access to the polls.

Before me, W. M. Blakey, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared S. S. Belser and A. J. Simmons, who, being by me first duly sworn, doth depose and say:

That upon Monday, the 6th day of August, 1894, they were at Pike Road, in the county of Montgomery, Ala., at 7:30 o'clock on the morning of said day, and remained within sight of the polls in said beat during the entire day; that when they arrived at said polling place at 7:30 said polling place was not open, but that while they were unhitching their horse the managers of said election, before 8 o'clock, opened said polls and allowed voters to commence depositing their ballots.

Affiants further aver that at said polling place in said beat there were, during said election, only 130 votes polled during the entire day, though the official count of the county aforesaid shows that 504 votes were polled at said box.

Affiants further aver that they remained within sight of the voting place during the entire day. Affiants further aver that the managers of election did not announce that the voting polls were to be closed at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and did not make any announcement at all of the fact.

K. Ponder, who kept the number of voters in box 2, beat 4; that up to the time B. K. Ponder arrived 20 voters went into the polling places of boxes 1 and 2, and to the best of his knowledge and belief a majority of them went into box No. 1, beat 4; that these persons were exclusive of the inspectors, fixers, and returning officers. That at about 9 o'clock A. B. Brassell relieved him for an interval of probably an hour or more, when he returned and kept the number of votes cast until relieved by E. R. In Wilcox County, Pineapple beat, the votes counted were 393; votes actually cast, 142; fraudulent votes 251. I read the following affidavit in support of that charge:

STATE OF ALABAMA, Wilcox County:

Before me, C. M. McLean, a justice of the peace in and for said county and State, personally appeared J. J. Sessions, who is known to me, and who being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

That he has resided in Wilcox County, Ala., from the time of his birth, in 1844, with the exception of about four years; that he is well acquainted with the condition of the people in said county, and their political affiliations; that during the campaign immediately preceding the election for members of the general assembly and State officers, held on the 6th day of August, 1894, he took part in political affairs, and was in a position to have correct information as to the political condition in said county; that the negroes, who were largely in the majority in said county and represented about four thousand of the voting population of said county, had been advised not to register; and affiant, after diligent inquiry and careful personal investigation, has reason to believe, and does believe, that not exceeding eight per cent (8%) of the negroes registered in said county for the elections of 1894.

Affiant further states that about ten or fifteen days after the registration period closed in 1894, he called at the office of the judge of probate at Camden, the county seat of Wilcox County, Ala., for the purpose of inspecting the registration list from Pine Apple precinct, and making a copy of said list; that the judge of probate was absent, but that affiant asked — Ratcliff, the clerk in the office of the judge of probate, the privilege of seeing the registration list returned from Pine Apple precinct, and was informed by — Ratcliff, the clerk, that no list from Pine Apple precinct had been filed in the office.

Affiant further states that he was at the voting place in said Pine Apple precinct on the 6th day of August, 1894, and remained at said voting place from the time the polls opened until they closed, with the exception of about one hour; that when he left said polling place, at his request his brother, W. B. Sessions, remained at said polling place for the purpose of keeping a count of the number of men who voted, and that the number who entered said polling place while affiant was present and the number who entered said polling place while affiant was absent, as shown by the list furnished him by his brother, made a total of one hundred and forty-two, including the election inspectors and clerks, who entered said polling place on said election day.

And affiant further states that the inspectors at said election were Alex Kyser, John Knight, and Sol McIntosh; and that Sol McIntosh is a negro, who, affiant is informed and has reason to believe, can neither read nor write; that the clerks at said election were A. C. Luckie and Thos. Stanford.

Affiant further states that he has been informed by several citizens of Wilcox County, particularly by two negroes who reside at Gees Bend precinct, in said county, that no election was held at said Gees Bend precinct on the 6th day of August, 1894; but that notwithstanding the polls were never open and no election was held at said precinct, as affiant is informed and has reason to believe, an alleged majority of two hundred and fifty-eight (258) for William C. Oates for governor was returned from said precinct.

That he was in a position at said voting place to see every man who entered said polling place, and that from the time the polls were opened until they closed there were fifty-three (53) men, including election managers and clerks, entered said polling place, and no more.

At Gees Bend beat, votes actually counted, 258; actually polled, none. The affidavit in support of this charge asserts that the polls were not even opened, there being no pretense of holding an election at that place. The affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF ALABAMA, Marengo County:

Before me, W. A. Bridges, a justice of the peace in and for said county and State, personally appeared J. H. Pritchard, who is known to me as a man of good character and an influential citizen of Wilcox County, Ala., and who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

That he was at Camden, the county seat of said Wilcox County, Ala., on the Saturday following the election held on the 6th of August, 1894; that with W. B. Rogers and John Chance he heard the vote as announced from the various precincts in said county before the board of supervisors, and that the vote as so announced was as follows:

	Kolb.	Oates.
Bethel beat, No. 6.....	14	457

Fox Mill.....	47	48

Mims.....	12	142
Ackerville.....	5	258
Snow Hill beat, No. 12.....	8	526
Total.....	131	6,300

Affiant further states that the foregoing tabulated statement, showing the total of (131) one hundred and thirty-one votes for Kolb, and six thousand three hundred for Oates is a correct and exact copy of the vote as announced by the county supervisors at the county seat of said county on the Saturday following the election held on the 6th day of August, 1894.

Affiant further states that he is informed, and has reason to believe, that at Gees Bend, where an alleged majority of two hundred and fifty-eight (258) was returned for Oates, no election was held and the polls were not opened on the 6th of August, 1894; and that after inquiry and careful investigation he has reason to believe, and does believe, that there were less than (1,200) twelve hundred votes cast in the county at the election held on the 6th of August, 1894, and that he is informed, and has reason to believe, that the total vote cast for William C. Oates and the ticket headed by him on the 6th of August, 1894, was not exceeding one thousand (1,000) votes. That the negro voters of Wilcox County, Alabama, were advised not to register, and that in opinion of affiant not exceeding eight per cent of the negro voters in Wilcox County, Alabama, registered in the year 1894. That there are only about fourteen hundred (1,400) white voters in said county.

Personally came before me, D. F. Myers, a notary public, Thos. S. Hylton and W. R. Jones, who, being duly sworn according to law, depose and say each for himself that they were both present at the election for Congressmen on November 6, 1894, at Laneville beat, No. 9, in said county; that they are well acquainted with both the white and colored voters therein, and that on said day they each took their position near to the polling place where they could and did see every person entering the polling place from the opening to the closing of the polls. And each for himself states that only thirty-three colored men and thirty white men went into the polling place that day. And that the vote returned as shown by the certified poll list shown us this day from the probate office of said county shows one hundred and five ballots or votes polled. And we each further state that there is a number of names of persons on said poll lists who do not and never did in the past reside in said beat that we ever heard of. At the present time in the senate of the State of Alabama there are 14 out of 33 senators known as "hold overs," 9 Democrats and 5 Populists. This method of holding an election in that State, according to the estimate I have made of the ratio of fraud running through these several counties, at places where I have not been able to obtain the exact figures, would completely change the complexion of the senate, and would give the Republicans and Populists combined 22 out of the 33.

In the house of representatives, which is composed of 100 members, the same ratio, according to the estimate I have made, would change the result. So that the Democratic party is in charge of that branch of the State government in consequence of fraud. These frauds have changed the result, which without fraud would have given to the Populists, Republicans, and Jeffersonian Democrats, all of whom were working together, 71 out of the total membership of 100.

The effect of this upon the Congressional representation can also be seen to some extent. I have here a table of the votes actually counted and cast, and the fraudulent vote, and the census with reference to the Fourth Congressional district. Perhaps I should say that a contest is pending before the other branch of Congress with reference to the election in this Congressional district, and that I have no purpose in the introduction of the evidence that has been printed here to in any manner prejudice or influence that contest. It is not my purpose to prejudice any rights Mr. Robbins, the contestee in that case, may have.

According to this table—and I will not stop to read it in detail, but insert it in my remarks—the total votes counted in that district were 26,821; the total votes actually cast were 6,104; the fraudulent votes were 20,717. In the same counties, at the November (1894) election, the votes counted were 17,900; actually cast, 4,074; fraudulent, 13,826.

I will read a letter received by me from Mr. Aldrich, the contestant, written January 17, 1895:

SELMA, ALA., January 17, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find copies of a number of affidavits taken in the matter of the Congressional election held on the 6th day of November last in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama.

The first to which I call your attention are those with reference to Dallas County. The affidavit of J. Gilbert Johnson shows that in Lexington precinct there were only 35 votes cast, yet from that precinct 250 votes were returned for Mr. Robbins and 1 for myself.

The affidavit of Mr. A. S. Jones shows that there were but 31 votes cast in Summerfield beat, yet the returns gave Mr. Robbins 100 and myself 2.

The affidavit of S. P. McIlwain shows that there were only 723 votes cast at the court-house in the city of Selma, which was the only voting place in that city, yet the returns show that Mr. Robbins received 2,014 votes and I 15 votes.

The affidavit of Mr. R. L. Grimes shows that there were but 6 votes cast in Union precinct, yet the returns gave Mr. Robbins 233 and none for me.

The affidavit of L. W. Mason shows that there were but 17 votes cast in Mitchell's beat, yet Mr. Robbins received from the returns 389 votes and I none. There are two affidavits in regard to the election in Martin's precinct, viz, that of Lee Bell and of William Bell, Jr. They both agree that there were only 60 votes in that precinct, yet the returns show that Mr. Robbins received 503 and I received none.

We also have the affidavit of E. M. Riley, who undertook to count the vote that was cast in Orrville beat, but who, by threats of personal injury, was made to leave the polling place about 11 o'clock in the morning, which shows that the election officers desired to manipulate the election, and that the presence of a witness would interfere with them. We feel satisfied from that and other testimony that there were not exceeding 35 votes cast in that precinct, although 308 were returned from there for Mr. Robbins.

I will next call your attention to the affidavit of J. H. Fancher and J. N. Allen in regard to the vote at Montevallo box, in Shelby County. This box is within 2 miles of my home, and it is the box at which I vote. I am justly proud of the actual result of the election in that precinct, although the returns show that Mr. Robbins received a majority of 9 votes at that box. The truth of the matter is that we were allowed neither a clerk or a fixer at that box, and therefore our only representative, an inspector, was frequently called from his position at the box in order to mark votes for the illiterate voters who desired to vote for me.

The "fixer," as I understand it, according to the Alabama expression, is not the "fixer" according to the New York expression. A "fixer" in Alabama is a man who is permitted to mark a ballot for an illiterate voter, and he is not recognized by the law by that title. I ask the Senator from Alabama how this is.

Mr. PUGH. No; that is the name they give it, but it is not the legal name. I forget the name.

Mr. ALLEN—

However, we had a tally kept on the inside by this inspector—

Inspector, is that it?

Mr. PUGH. Yes; I think so.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the names "fixer" and "inspector" are synonymous, so far as the office is concerned?

Mr. PUGH. I think so.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Aldrich proceeds:

However, we had a tally kept on the inside by this inspector, showing all the votes cast, and also a tally kept on the outside, showing all the voters who entered the polling place. These two tally sheets agreed in that there were 894 votes cast altogether at that box. We also had a clerk to keep a record of all the voters who voluntarily stated, after coming from the polls, that they had voted for me. In this way when the polls closed we were satisfied that my majority was not less than 180. Much to our surprise, however, the declared result showed that Mr. Robbins had a majority of 9. I have since that time obtained a sworn statement of 250 voters that they each and everyone voted for me.

I would further state that at the counting of the ballots after the polls had closed there were, as the affidavit of Mr. Harrison will show, 14 more ballots in the box than there were names on the poll list; and I have just learned through an official letter from the probate judge of Shelby County that the poll list of the November election last in Montevallo beat has never been returned to his office, as is required by law. Out of a total vote of 304 cast at that box I did not receive less than 200 votes, which is proven by the above-mentioned affidavits, and my majority at that box should not have been less than 186. This majority, added to the 9 votes credited to Mr. Robbins, would make a difference of 195 in the total vote of the county.

I also inclose my own affidavit that I have the originals of the hereinmentioned affidavits.

You will also find inclosed a tabulated statement of the actual vote cast in Dallas County, as well as the vote as declared in that county.

I also send you a list of the inspectors asked for to represent my interest, and those who were actually appointed in Dallas County. These lists are set forth on two blanks. The first one shows that there were 15 beats from which correct returns were made, and that in 11 of these 15 beats there were appointed to represent me, and there did represent me, men whose appointment in the capacity of inspectors I requested.

In the other 13 precincts, from every one of which fraudulent returns were made, there was not a single inspector appointed that was asked for, and I had no representative at all at these boxes, unless it be some illiterate negro. Evidence of this will be found in River and Mitchell's beats, where the inspectors who were supposed to represent me were unable to write, and have signed the returns by their marks.

I am now engaged in taking testimony in my contest, and am developing other and equally startling facts which I will lay before you later.

Thanking you for your efforts toward securing a republican form of government in Alabama, I am,

Yours, very truly,

W. F. ALDRICH.

Hon. WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

In Union beat, votes cast, 6; counted, 293; fraudulent, 287. I have here an affidavit of Mr. A. L. Gilmer, which I will read in support of this charge:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of Dallas:

Before me, A. Kayser, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared A. L. Gilmer, who, being duly sworn, states as follows:

I am a citizen of the State of Alabama and the county of Dallas, and I was present on Tuesday, November the 6th, 1894, at the Webb place, which is the polling place for Union precinct, in said county and State, and was there continuously from the opening to the closing of the polls; that the said election was held for a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, from the Fourth Congressional District of Alabama; that I saw and counted every person who went into said polling place from the opening to the closing of the polls in said precinct at said election, and there were six (6) persons who went into said polling place from the opening to the closing of the polls, including the officials who were by law permitted to be in said polling place.

A. L. GILMER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this tenth day of November, 1894.

A. KAYSER, Notary Public.

In Boykins beat, thirty-fourth precinct, votes cast, 12; votes counted, 25; fraudulent, 13.

In Elm Bluff beat, thirty-second precinct, votes cast, 7; votes counted, 135; fraudulent, 128.

In Pence's beat, vote cast, 1; votes counted, 30; fraudulent, 29. I come now to consider the election law of the State of Alabama, commonly known as the Sayre election law.

The first section provides:

That the judges of probate shall superintend the registration of election in their respective counties.

They seem to be in charge of the list of registered voters.

The second section provides:

That the governor shall appoint, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, one competent person as registrar for each county; and such registrar shall hold office for four years and shall appoint a competent person as assistant registrar for each precinct or ward in their respective county, and the governor shall have power to fill any vacancy should any occur in office of registrar. And such registrars, before entering on their duties, shall take an oath of office as prescribed in section one, article fifteen of the constitution of Alabama, which oath may be administered by any officer authorized by law to administer oaths in this State, and must be filed in the office of the judge of probate of the county. Such registrars are authorized to administer the registration oath, and it shall not be lawful for any other officer or person to administer the same.

By the third section it is provided:

That it shall be the duty of such registrars within the several precincts or wards for which they are appointed, respectively, in each year in which any general, State, or Federal election is to be held, to make registration of the electors residing in such precincts or wards upon blank forms provided for that purpose, and shall not register in any other way or in any other form than that herein prescribed.

The fourth section provides:

That the registrars in each precinct or ward shall begin registration on the first Monday in May, and shall continue the same for eighteen successive days, Sundays excepted, except in cities of 10,000 or more inhabitants, where thirty days' time for registration shall be given.

The State election takes place in August. Section 5 provides:

That it shall not be lawful to register any elector in any precinct or ward in this State after the time herein prescribed for such registration; but the registrars shall be present at the polling places in the precincts or wards for which they are respectively appointed on the day of any general or special election to register such persons as may have reached the age of 21 years since the last registration, and none other.

I wish to call attention briefly to this section because its vice is apparent. Taken in connection with the preceding section (4), which compels all voters to register between the 1st and 18th days of May, and at no other time than between those dates, it is manifest that great injustice is done the voters of the State of Alabama. I can well understand why some time should be fixed, a reasonable time, before the opening of the polls and holding the elections in large cities and in the larger towns; but in the country precincts I know of no reason (and I think the State of Alabama is not different in that respect from any other agricultural and mineral State) why the voters should be compelled to register between the 1st and 18th days of May and at a time when probably nine-tenths of them are engaged in their fields and at their several occupations, and when they have reached the busiest season of the year.

I am not disposed to stand here and urge that there was any ulterior motive in the passage of this section of the law; of that I know nothing, and I certainly would not make a charge against the State unless I had some evidence in my possession that would warrant it; and then it would be very unpleasant to make it. But I can conceive of no reason in the world why the voters in country precincts, almost all of whom are farmers and planters or engaged in kindred occupations, away from centers of population, should be compelled to go to some registrar and register their names between the 1st and the 18th of May, at the precise time when they should be and are engaged in their industrial pursuits.

I can see, however, that if there were any purpose to prevent a portion of the people of the State from registering, and by that means keep them from attending the polls and voting, this would be a very successful way, indeed. But what is to be said of the fifth section, which does not give a voter an opportunity to register after the 18th of May? I think it will be found that in most of the States of this Union where there are registration laws provision has been made later along for the registration of persons who through sickness or accident or some unforeseen event have been prevented from registering earlier. Suppose a man should be detained at his home by sickness or be absent in some other section of the country at the time when he should have registered, according to the strict letter of the law, would it be right to deprive that citizen, when he should recover from his sickness or return to his home, of the privilege of being registered and casting his vote at the ensuing election? Yet that is precisely what this fifth section of the Sayre Alabama election law accomplishes.

That it shall not be lawful to register any elector—

So says the law—

In any precinct or ward in this State after the time herein prescribed for such registration—

Here is a direct inhibition. An elector can not be registered, it makes no difference what the circumstances may be, however equitable and just they may be, if he takes his chances. If he does not register between the 1st and 18th days of May he is absolutely deprived of his privilege except in the single and unimportant instance of a young man who has reached his majority and is to cast his first vote—but the registrars—

Says the fifth section of this law—

shall be present at the polling places in the precincts or wards for which they are respectively appointed on the day of any general or special election to register such persons as may have reached the age of 21 years since the last registration, and none other.

Mr. President, that has a direct effect in destroying the freedom of elections. I am not disposed to cavil about the election laws of the State of Alabama so long as they afford the voters of that State a free and full opportunity to cast their votes and have them counted. Whenever we give credence to the doctrine that a State can wipe out indirectly the right of citizenship, nullify or destroy it by legislation of this kind, we reach a period in the history of our Government where our Government is destroyed. The very foundation stone upon which this Republic is built, and upon which it must stand in the future, if it does stand—and we all hope it may—is a free, full, and complete right upon the part of every American citizen invested with the elective franchise to cast his vote, without unnecessary restraint, without intimidation or fraud, and have that vote counted as he may cast it. If we submit for one moment to the doctrine that elections in the different States can be manipulated in the interest of any particular political party, we submit to the introduction of a doctrine that will be destructive of this Union and destructive of the States themselves.

I have never been myself a believer in the Federal election law that was repealed by act of Congress a few months ago. I am not in favor of sending armed bodies of men into the different States of the Union for the purpose of controlling elections. I do not believe that the freedom of expression should ever be threatened or menaced by the bayonet of a soldier. But I do believe that this Government has power—and of that I have no doubt—and that it is its duty to follow every citizen of the United States into his home and protect him in the right of the elective franchise.

As a citizen of the State of Nebraska I owe my State certain duties; as a citizen of the United States I owe the General Government certain duties. These duties never conflict; they are always harmonious. As a citizen of the State of Nebraska that State owes me certain obligations; as a citizen of the United States this Government owes me certain obligations, which it must fulfill or be recreant to its trust, and chief among those obligations is the one that guarantees to me the right of giving expression to my sentiments in the choice of officers, State and national, and that protects my ballot and causes it to be counted as it is cast.

The next section of this law then provides—and I shall not go through it in detail—that a certificate of registration shall be issued to the voter, giving it a number, date, etc.

Then these sections follow:

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, That each registrar shall, at the time of his registration, furnish to each elector who may register a certificate of registration, which shall be in the following form:

State election, 189—

Federal election, 189—

I, ———, registrar, do hereby certify that ——— has this day registered before me as an elector in precinct (or ward) No. —.

Witness my hand this — day —, 189—

(Signed)

———, Registrar.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, That any person who shall purchase or offer to purchase, or in any way attempt to get possession of the certificate of registration of any voter, with the intent to use said certificate of registration in any manner to control the vote or manage the vote, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 and be imprisoned in the county jail for not less than thirty days.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That each registrar shall, within two weeks after the expiration of the time prescribed, make a true copy of the list of names registered, which copy, along with the original registration list, he must return to the office of judge of probate of the county.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, That the judge of probate shall, from the registration list of electors returned to his office, make a correct alphabetical list of the electors so registered by precinct or ward, which list shall be certified by him officially to be a full and correct transcript of registered electors as the same appears from the returns of the registrars in his office. One copy of said list for each precinct or ward the judge of probate shall deliver to the inspectors of election in each precinct or ward immediately preceding every election.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, That the judge of probate must furnish, previous to the 1st day of May of each year in which any general, State, or Federal election is to be held, to the registrars the books and blanks necessary for the registration of electors, and each page of such books shall be in the following form:

STATE OF ALABAMA, County of —.

We, the undersigned, registered electors, each for himself, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and maintain the Constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution of the State of Alabama; that I am not excluded from registering or voting by any clauses in section three of article eight of the constitution of the State of Alabama, and that I am a qualified elector under the constitution and laws of the State.

No.	Date.	Name.	Registration attestation.	White or colored.	Residence.	Employer and remarks.

I, ———, registrar for said precinct (or ward) No. —, in the county of —, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing names of registered voters, from number 1 to number —, inclusive, were duly registered by me according to law, and that each of said persons so registered took and subscribed before me the above and foregoing oath, on the dates set opposite to their several names.

Witness my hand this — day of —, 189—.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, That each judge of probate shall be paid for his services about the registration and certification of electors such reasonable compensation as may be allowed by the court of county commissioners or the board of revenue, in no event less than 2 cents for each elector registered and certified, and in addition thereto the necessary expense of printing the books and certificates herein provided for.

SEC. 11. Be it further enacted, That the compensation of registrars shall be 3 cents for each elector registered and certified, as herein provided, which shall be paid by the county.

SEC. 12. Be it further enacted, That if any registrar neglects, fails, or refuses to perform the duties herein prescribed, or if there is a vacancy in the office, the county registrar shall appoint some competent person to act in his stead.

SEC. 13. Be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful to register any person except in the precinct or ward in which such person is entitled to vote, and the registrar, when he has no personal knowledge of the identity or residence of the person offering for registration, shall examine him under oath touching the same, which oath shall be administered by the registrar.

SEC. 14. Be it further enacted, That in all elections hereafter held in this State on any subject which may by law be submitted to a vote of the people, and for all or any State, county, district, or municipal officers, the voting shall be by secret ballots, printed and distributed as hereinafter provided; and no ballot shall be received or counted in any election to which this act applies except it be provided as herein prescribed.

I will read the form of ballot prescribed by this Sayre law, which is found in section 21:

OFFICIAL BALLOT.—ELECTION, ———, 189—.

[Make a cross mark (X) before the name of the candidate of your choice.]

(Vote for one.)

For governor,

HENRY FISHER.
WILLIAM JONES.
JOHN SMITH.

(Vote for one.)

For secretary of state,
WILLIAM KING.
THOMAS MOORE.
JAMES SIMPSON.

(Vote for one.)

For sheriff,
THOMAS JONES.
GEORGE SMITH.
JAMES WHITE.

(Vote for two.)

For representative in the general assembly,
WILLIAM DANIELS.
JOHN DOE.

Constitutional amendment—Yes.
Constitutional amendment—No.

It will be seen that no other ballot is to be received or counted than the ballot in this form:

And no ballot shall be received or counted in any election to which this act applies except it be provided as herein prescribed.

So a form of ballot is given to the voter. Ordinarily, the most intelligent men, or amongst the most intelligent men of this country, need something on the ballot to designate not only the office for which a candidate is running, but something to designate the political party to which he belongs. There is nothing in this form of ballot to designate the political party to which these candidates, Henry Fisher, William Jones, and John Smith (which are mere fictitious names on the ticket to illustrate the character of the ballot) belong; nothing whatever to tell whether Mr. Fisher is a Republican candidate for Governor, or Mr. Jones a Prohibition candidate for Governor, or Mr. Smith a Populist candidate for Governor, nor is there the slightest thing to indicate the politics of these candidates.

Take the State of Alabama—and I say this with proper respect and without the slightest levity—where there is a large percentage of illiterate voters, it necessarily being so in consequence of the condition of certain classes of people there; there the advantage is all on the side of the man who can read and write. While I have no disposition to encourage illiteracy by making a ticket so broad and plain that it will stand out like the sign upon a fence, I think in fairness there ought to be something upon this ballot to indicate to the voter that a certain man is a candidate of a particular party, and that the other man is a candidate belonging to some other party.

I am not prepared to say, and I do not assert, that there was any purpose to mislead any portion of the people of that State by the formulation of a ballot of this kind, placing it within an iron case, or, if it differs from that form, I suppose by the failure to cross a "t" or dot an "i," it shall neither be received nor counted. Of course it is nugatory; its effect is destroyed; its legal vitality is gone. But if I wanted to draft a law that would shut out a portion of the voters of a State from exercising their elective franchise I should draft it in precisely this form, for that is its legitimate effect.

The remaining sections of the act are as follows:

SEC. 15. Be it further enacted, That the printing and delivery of the ballots and cards of instruction to voters hereinafter prescribed shall, in municipal elections, be paid for by the several cities or towns, respectively, and in all other elections by the several counties, respectively.

SEC. 16. Be it further enacted, That the probate judge of each county shall cause to be printed on the ballots to be used in their respective counties the names of all candidates who have been put in nomination by any caucus, convention, mass meeting, primary election, or other assembly of any political party or faction in this State, and certified in writing and filed with him not more than sixty nor less than twenty days previous to the day of election, which certificate shall contain the name of each person nominated and the office for which he is nominated, and shall be signed by the presiding officer and secretary of such caucus, mass meeting, or other assembly, or by the canvassing board of such primary election, and be duly acknowledged by one or more of them before an officer authorized by law to take the acknowledgments.

The judge of probate shall also cause to be printed upon said ballots the name of any qualified elector who has been requested to be a candidate for any office by written petition signed, in case of a candidate for a State or Federal office, by at least five hundred electors, and in case of a county or municipal office by at least twenty-five electors qualified to vote in the election to fill said office, when such petition has been filed with him not more than sixty nor less than twenty days previous to the election. And in addition to the name printed on said ballot, and whether there be any names printed on said ballots or no, there shall be printed under each office to be voted for at the election blank lines in number equal to the number of persons who may be elected to fill that office. The name of no person shall be printed upon the ballot who shall, not less than twenty days before the election, notify the judge of probate, in writing, acknowledged before an officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments, that he will not accept the nomination specified in the certificate of nomination or request of electors.

In case of any person to be voted for by the electors of the whole State or of an entire Congressional district or judicial circuit, such certificate of nomination shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state not less than thirty days before the day of election; and such secretary of the state shall thereupon immediately certify to the probate judge of each county in the State in case of an officer to be voted for by the electors of the whole State, and to the probate judges of the counties composing the judicial circuit or Congressional district in case of an officer to be voted for by the electors of such circuit or district, upon suitable blanks to be prepared by him for that purpose, the fact of such nomination and the name of the nominee or nominees and the office to which he or they may be nominated; and the name of such person shall be printed by the judge of probate upon the ballot in its proper place in all respects as herein provided for nominations filed in the office of the probate judge; and any secretary of state who shall willfully fail or refuse to certify such nominations as herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000; and in the event of such failure or refusal such certificate shall be made by the State auditor.

SEC. 17. Be it further enacted, That any person who shall falsely make or fraudulently destroy any certificate of nomination, or any part thereof, or file any certificate of nomination knowing the same or any part thereof to be false, or suppress any nomination which has been duly filed, or any part thereof, or forge or falsely write the name or initials of any inspector of election on any ballot, shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than five years.

SEC. 18. Be it further enacted, That the probate judge shall cause to be preserved in his office all certificates and petitions of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this act for six months after the election for which such nominations are made.

SEC. 19. Be it further enacted, That the ballots printed in accordance with the provisions of this act shall contain the names of all candidates nominated as hereinbefore provided who have not declined. The names of all candidates for the same office shall be printed together, arranged alphabetically, according to the initial letter of their surnames, irrespective of party. But the order in which the titles of the several offices to be filled shall be arranged upon the ballots shall be left to the discretion of the officer charged with the printing of said ballots.

SEC. 20. Be it further enacted, That whenever a constitutional amendment or other public measure is submitted to a vote of the people the substance of such amendment or other public measure shall be twice in the same language clearly indicated upon the ballot after the list of candidates, followed in one case by the word "Yes" and in the other by the word "No."

SEC. 21. Be it further enacted, That all ballots provided by the judge of probate of any county for an election shall be alike, printed in plain type, in straight lines, upon plain white paper so thick that the printing can not be distinguished from the back, with a slender line between each name and extending sufficiently to the left of the names to easily permit making before each name a cross mark (X), and in the appropriate place the words "Vote for one" (or two, or other number, as the case may be), to indicate the number which may be elected to each office, and shall be substantially in the following form, except the order in which the several offices to be filled are stated, namely:

SEC. 22. Be it further enacted, That all ballots for use in each precinct or ward shall be fastened together in convenient numbers in books or blocks in such manner that each ballot may be detached and removed separately. Each ballot shall have attached to it a stub of sufficient size to enable one of the inspectors to write or stamp his name or initials thereon, and so attached to the ballot that when the same is folded the stub can be detached therefrom without injury to the ballot or exposing the contents thereof.

SEC. 23. Be it further enacted, That there shall be provided for each voting place at least one hundred ballots for every fifty registered electors at said polling place.

SEC. 24. Be it further enacted, That the sheriff of each county, at the expense of the county, or in case of a municipal election the mayor or other chief executive officer, at the expense of the city or town, shall provide at each polling place a room or covered inclosure, and in such room or covered inclosure shall provide booths or compartments, one booth or compartment for each one hundred, or fraction of one hundred over fifty, electors registered for that election, and furnish each with a shelf or table for the convenience of electors preparing their ballots. Each booth or compartment shall be so arranged that it will be impossible for one elector at a shelf or table in one compartment to see an elector at another shelf or table in another compartment in the act of marking his ballot. Each voting shelf, or table, shall be kept supplied with conveniences for marking the ballots.

SEC. 25. Be it further enacted, That no person shall be permitted under any pretext whatever to come within 50 feet of any door or window of any polling room from the opening of the polls until the completion of the count of the ballots and certification of the returns, except as herein provided.

SEC. 26. Be it further enacted, That the judge of probate of each county shall cause to be printed in large type on the cards instructions for the guidance of electors in preparing their ballots. He shall furnish to the sheriff twelve, or more if necessary, such cards for each precinct or ward, and it shall be the duty of the sheriff to post one of such cards in each booth or compartment for the preparation of ballots, and not less than three in prominent places elsewhere about and outside of the polling place upon the day of election. Said cards shall be printed in large, clear type, and shall contain full instructions to electors as to what should be done; first, to obtain ballots for voting; second, to prepare the ballot for deposit in the ballot box; third, to obtain a new ballot in place of one accidentally spoiled.

SEC. 27. Be it further enacted, That any person who willfully, during or before an election, removes, tears down, or destroys or defaces any booth or compartment, or any convenience provided for the purpose of enabling the elector to prepare his ballot, or any card printed for the instruction of electors, shall be fined not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars.

SEC. 28. Be it further enacted, That except as electors are admitted, one at a time to vote, and except as the sheriff, or his deputy, the inspectors and clerks of election, and as many electors as there may be booths or compartments, no person shall be permitted within fifty feet of the polling room.

SEC. 29. Be it further enacted, That when the right to vote of any person who demands to be permitted to vote is questioned by an elector, the said challenge shall be communicated to the inspectors before the person is permitted to vote by the sheriff, or some other officer or person in attendance, and in charge of admission to the polling place, when his right to vote is determined as required by law.

SEC. 30. Be it further enacted, That when all the booths or compartments are occupied, and other electors are waiting to vote, no other electors shall occupy a booth or compartment for a longer time than five minutes. No elector shall be allowed to occupy a booth or compartment already occupied by another, nor to speak or converse with anyone, except as herein provided, while in the polling place.

SEC. 31. Be it further enacted, That after having voted, or declined or failed to vote within the five minutes, the elector shall immediately withdraw from the polling place and go beyond the prohibited distance, and not enter the polling place again.

SEC. 32. Be it further enacted, That each elector upon entering the polling room shall be given one ballot by the inspectors. Before delivering the ballot to the elector at least one of the inspectors shall write or stamp, or shall have already stamped or written or printed, his initials or name on the stub attached to the ballot. On receiving the ballot the elector shall forthwith, and without leaving the polling room, retire alone to one of the booths or compartments provided for that purpose, and there prepare the ballot with pen and ink or pencil in the appropriate margin or place a cross mark (X) before the name of the candidate of his choice for each office to be filled, or by filling in the name of the candidate of his choice in the blank provided therefor, and marking a cross mark (X) in the appropriate margin and likewise by marking a cross mark (X) before the answer he desires, in case of a constitutional amendment or other question submitted to a vote of the people.

SEC. 33. Be it further enacted, That any elector applying to vote, who shall declare on oath, which oath may be administered by any one of the inspectors, that by reason of his inability to read the English language, he is unable to prepare his ballot, may have the assistance of an inspector to be selected by the elector or a person to be appointed for that purpose by the inspectors of election, and the inspectors may appoint as many assistants as they may deem necessary in the preparation of his ballot, and the person so appointed or the inspector selected shall retire to a booth or compartment with the elector and there mark the elector's ballot by marking with pen and ink or stencil cross marks (X) before the name of each candidate for each office to be given to him by the elector without suggestion or interference from the assistant. The assistant shall then deliver the ballot to the elector and withdraw from the booth or compartment. In all other respects he shall vote as is required of other electors: Provided, That no candidate for election shall act as assistant to any elector in the preparation of his ballot.

SEC. 34. Be it further enacted, That any elector applying to vote, who shall declare on oath, which oath may be administered by any one of the inspectors, that by reason of blindness, or the loss of the use of his hand or hands, he is unable to prepare his ballot, may have the assistance of such assistant as may have been appointed or inspector selected; then the assistant shall retire with the elector who asks for assistance in the preparation of his ballot to a booth or compartment and there prepare the elector's ballot, so as to indicate the elector's declared choice of candidates as to each office to be filled, without suggestion or interference from the assistant. But in all cases any elector, before retiring to the booth, may have one of the clerks of election to read over to him the titles of the offices to be filled and of the candidates therefor.

SEC. 35. Be it further enacted, That before any elector applying for assistance in the preparation of his ballot, as provided in sections 33 or 34, shall be required or permitted to declare his choice of candidates, all electors, including those in the booths or compartments, after voting, shall be required to withdraw from the polling place.

SEC. 36. Be it further enacted, That in order to prevent repeating, no elector shall be allowed to receive a ballot from the inspectors nor to cast a ballot until he shall have produced and surrendered to the inspectors of election at the polling place the certificates of registration hereinbefore provided for; but if the elections are to be held for State (including county), then and in that event the inspectors holding the election coming on first shall, upon the production of the elector's certificate of registration, strike out, by drawing with pen and ink or stamp a heavy line through them, the words printed upon said certificate showing the election at which the ballot is cast, and return the certificate to the elector. But this act, so far as the registration of electors and the production of the registration certificates is concerned, shall not be so construed as to affect the ordinances now or hereafter ordained by any municipal corporation chartered by the general assembly providing for the separate registration of electors for municipal elections, nor shall it apply to any special or municipal election unless the same shall be held at the same time as the State or Federal election. In case of any special or municipal election held at a time different from a general election, unless under special registration laws applying to that city or town election only, all electors will be entitled to vote without producing or surrendering a certificate of whose names appear on the registration lists filed in the office of the judge of probate at the next preceding general election and those who have become qualified since the last registration, and who may register on the day of election, as herein provided.

SEC. 38. Be it further enacted, That any inspector who shall willfully deceive any elector in preparing his ballot shall be guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than five years.

SEC. 39. Be it further enacted, That any person who shall disclose how any elector may have voted, unless upon the trial of an indictment under section 38 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars.

SEC. 40. Be it further enacted, That any elector who shall by accident or mistake spoil a ballot, so that he can not conveniently or safely vote the same, may return it to the inspectors and receive another in lieu thereof. In no case shall any person be permitted to carry a ballot outside of the polling room.

SEC. 41. Be it further enacted, That after preparing his ballot the elector shall fold the same so as to conceal the face thereof and show the stub thereto attached, with the name or initials of the inspector, and hand it to the receiving inspector, who shall, after detaching the stub, deposit the ballot in the box in the manner now prescribed by law.

SEC. 42. Be it further enacted, That if the elector marks more names than there are persons to be elected to any office, or if for any reason it is impossible to determine the elector's choice for an office to be filled, his ballot shall not be counted for such office; but this shall not vitiate the ballot so far as properly marked, nor shall any ballot be rejected for any technical error which does not make it impossible to determine the elector's choice. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any elector from voting for any qualified person other than those whose names are printed on the ballots.

SEC. 43. Be it further enacted, That any elector who shall, except as herein provided, allow his ballot to be seen by any person, or who shall take or remove, or attempt to take or remove, any ballot from the polling place before the close of the polls, or place any mark upon his ballot by which it may be identified, or any person who shall interfere with any elector when inside the polling place, or when marking his ballot, or unduly influence any elector in the preparation of his ballot, or any elector who shall remain longer than the specified time allowed by this act in the booth or compartment after being notified that his time has expired, or who shall endeavor to induce any elector to show how he marks or has marked his ballot, or aids, or attempts to aid, any elector by means of any mechanical device or any other means whatever in marking his ballot, or shall print or secure to be printed or have in his possession any copy of the ballot prepared to be voted, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars, and any ballot marked by the elector for identification shall be rejected.

SEC. 44. Be it further enacted, That any officer who willfully and knowingly refuses or fails to perform the duties herein prescribed shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000; but this section shall not be held to apply to cases where a different penalty is prescribed by this act.

SEC. 45. Be it further enacted, That any judge of probate or other officer on whom the duties of the judge of probate may have been temporarily devolved, who willfully and knowingly neglects, fails, or refuses to perform the duties herein prescribed, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, except as herein otherwise provided, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000. And in the event the judge of probate of any county is unable or neglects, fails, or refuses to perform the duties herein prescribed, the duties, responsibilities, and authority of the judge of probate shall devolve upon the clerk of the circuit court of the county.

SEC. 46. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the sheriff of each county in this State, on each day of election, to be present in person or by deputy at all election precincts where elections are held in his county, and it shall be his duty to preserve good order, and to carry out the intent and purpose of this act such sheriff, or his deputy, may specially deputize a sufficient force to act at all election precincts on the day of any election that he may deem necessary, and in case of necessity may raise a posse comitatus to put down all riots or attempted riots or disturbances.

SEC. 47. Be it further enacted, That in case of any municipal election held at a time different from a general State or Federal election the duties herein prescribed for the judge of probate in respect to receiving nominations, printing and distributing ballots and cards of instruction, shall be discharged under the same sanctions by the mayor or other chief executive officer of the city or town.

SEC. 48. Be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

I want to call attention to two or three important matters in connection with this election law. In the first place, the rule has been laid down in Alabama that the officers whose names I have read do not act in a ministerial capacity, but as judicial officers, possessing judicial functions, and therefore that their action can not be controlled by the judiciary of that State. It would be presumptuous on my part, of course, to offer any opinion contrary to the judgment of the supreme court of Alabama, but I can and will call attention to the fact that that court has laid down two different rules within the last two years. For instance, in the case of Dudley against the county officers of Lowndes County, in 1886, the opinion not being reported, the supreme court decided the case on appeal, holding that the officers were performing a ministerial act and granted the writ of mandamus. I have that opinion, and I think I will read it, as it sets forth probably as fully as it can be expressed, or more fully than it can be expressed by me at least, the nature of the application and the acts of the officers.

The Hon. John Moore was a judge of the fourth judicial circuit of that State.

TO HON. JOHN MOORE,
Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit of Alabama,
in which is located the County of Lowndes:

Your petitioners, Joseph R. Dudley, V. H. Bell, and W. R. Polly, in behalf of themselves and a large number of other citizens of Lowndes County, in said State, respectfully show unto your honor—

1. That they and those they represent are now and have been for many years resident citizens of said Lowndes County, and are now and have been for several years qualified electors therein.

2. That since February last there have been two opposing political parties in said county, viz, those in favor of supporting the nominees for the several county offices nominated by a convention or a so-called convention held in Hayneville on the 8th day of February, 1886, and those supporting the nominees for said offices nominated on the 28th day of May, 1886, at and by a primary election held by the white Democratic voters of said county. The lines of distinction and opposition of these two opposing political parties were well drawn and known to all citizens of Lowndes County at and before the said primary election held on the said 28th of May, and these facts were known to the judge of probate, the sheriff, and the clerk of the circuit court of said county on and before the 28th day of June, 1886.

3. That heretofore, viz, on the said 28th June, 1886, the judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court of said county met together at the court-house of said county and acted under section 250 of the code of 1876, and appointed inspectors of election for each election precinct in said county for the election to be held on the 1st Monday in August, 1886, for State and county officers. The said section of the code of 1876 requires the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at least thirty days before any election in said county to appoint three inspectors for each place of voting in said county, two of whom shall be members of opposing political parties, if practicable, and one returning officer for each precinct in said county.

4. That in making said appointment of the said inspectors for Precinct No. 1, (Benton beat), the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court appointed Eli T. Robinson, W. H. May, and Jules Sterne, all and each of whom belonged at the time to the same political party; each and all of them were and are supporters of the nominees made on the 8th February, 1886, and each and all of them were opposed, and are now opposed, to the nominees made by the primary election held on the 28th of May, 1886. There was at the time, viz, the 28th of June, 1886, and before that time, a large number of intelligent white men, qualified electors of said precinct, belonging to the opposite party to that to which the said Eli T. Robinson, W. H. May, and Jules Sterne belonged, and these said intelligent white men of the opposing political party were well qualified to make inspectors of election, and these facts were well known to the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at and before the said 28th June, 1886, and at and before the appointment of the said Eli T. Robinson, W. H. May, and Jules Sterne. At and before the appointment of the said Eli T. Robinson, W. H. May, and Jules Sterne, the names of J. S. Edson and E. G. Maull, both good and true men, residents and qualified voters of said precinct, and well qualified to discharge the duties of inspectors of election, and belonging to the party supporting the nominees of primary election were suggested and presented to said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court, one of whom, viz, the said J. S. Edson, or E. G. Maull was asked to be appointed inspector for said precinct.

The said Maull and Edson, at and before the said 28th June, 1886, belonged to the political party opposed to the nominees of the said February convention and in favor of the nominees of the primary election, and these facts were well known to the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at and before the said appointment on the said 28th June, 1886. Yet the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court, well knowing that it was entirely practicable to appoint two inspectors of said election for said precinct of opposing political parties, refused to appoint either the said Edson or the said Maull, or any other person of the political party opposing the nominees of the February convention, 1886; and they appointed the said Eli T. Robinson, W. H. May, and Jules Sterne, all of whom belonged to the same political party. And the said Eli T. Robinson was at and before the said 28th June, 1886, a justice of the peace for said precinct, and was and is a candidate for reelection to said office at the election to be held on the said first Monday in August, 1886, and thus the said Robinson will become a judge in his own election.

5. That in Precinct No. 18, in said county (Loundesboro beat), the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court, at the same time and place, appointed for the said precinct L. H. McCurdy, Archy Douglass, and L. W. Hunter, each and all of whom belonged to the same political party, viz, to that party favoring the nominees of the said February convention and opposing the nominees made at said primary election. At and before said appointment there were residing in said precinct many white persons of intelligence and character, well qualified to make good inspectors of election, qualified voters of said precinct, who were opposed to the nominees of the said February convention and favoring the nominees of the said primary election, and these facts were known to the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerks of the circuit court at and before the 28th June, 1886.

At and before the said 28th June, 1886, and at and before the appointment of the inspectors of election for said precinct No. 18, the names of C. E. Reese, jr., and B. S. Powell, each of whom was well qualified to make a good inspector of election and each of whom was a well-qualified elector of said precinct, were suggested and presented to the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court as fit men to be made inspectors of election in said precinct, both of whom belonged to a different political party from the said McCurdy, Douglass, and Hunter, and these facts were well known to the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of circuit court at and before the 28th June, 1886, yet the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court refused to appoint either the said Reese or Powell or any other person who belonged to the party opposing the nominees of the February convention as inspectors of election for said precinct, although there were many resident qualified electors of said precinct belonging to said opposing parties, and all these facts were well known to said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at and before the 28th June, 1886.

6. That the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of circuit court of said county appointed as inspector of election of precinct No. 19 (St. Clair beat), J. W. Rast, C. M. Smith, and A. J. Harris, and each and all of whom belonged to the same political party, viz, the party favoring the election of the nominees made at said February convention and opposed to the nominees selected at said May primary election, and these facts were well known to said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at and before the time they made said appointment. There were at and before said appointment good and true men, qualified electors of said precinct, who belonged to the opposing political party, and this fact was well known to said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at and before the time of the appointment of inspectors of election for said precinct No. 19; and at and before said appointment was made the name of Frank Powell, a resident and well-qualified elector of said precinct and well qualified to be an inspector of election, and who was opposed to the political party which said Rast, Smith, and Harris favored, was presented to said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court as a fit person for inspector of election at said precinct No. 19, yet the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court refused to appoint the said Powell or any other person who favored the nominees of the primary election and opposed the nominees favored by the said Rast, Smith, and Harris as an inspector of election for said precinct No. 19.

7. There are in precinct No. 1 (Benton beat) about 250 qualified voters. There are in said precinct No. 18 over 400 qualified voters, and in precinct No. 19 there about 350 qualified voters.

8. That each of the said inspectors of election so appointed in said several precincts belonged at the time of their appointment to the Democratic party, and neither of them belonged to the Republican party. There was not then and is not now any contest in said county between the Democratic and Republican parties. The Republican party has no candidates for any office in said county, and the only opposing political parties in said county of Lowndes at and before the appointment of said inspectors of election were the two named, viz, the one favoring the election of the nominees of the February convention, and the other opposing the election of said nominees, but favoring the election of the nominees of the primary election in May, 1886. And the election of the nominees by these respective parties constituted at the time of the appointment of the said inspectors of election and now constitute the only contest in the election to be held on the first Monday in August, 1886; and they respectively are opposing political parties and were so, the only opposing political parties in the county of Lowndes at and before the appointment of said inspectors of election in said precincts, and these facts were well known to the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court at and before the said appointments were made.

The premises considered, your petitioners pray your honor to grant a writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ commanding the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court of Lowndes County to appear before your honor at an early day to be fixed by your honor, and at such place as your honor may appoint, to show cause why the appointment of inspectors of election for the said several precincts should not be vacated and why someone should not be appointed of the political party opposed to the party favored by the said inspectors or for such order as your honor may make in the premises; and your petitioners pray for such action as will speedily rectify the wrong perpetrated upon them and those whom they represent by the action of the said judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court; and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

WATTS & SON, for Petitioners.

Personally appeared before me, James Jackson, a notary public and ex officio a justice of the peace for precinct No. 4, for county of Montgomery, the State of Alabama, Joseph R. Dudley, V. H. JOHN MOORE, Judge Fourth Judicial Circuit of Alabama.

MARION, ALA., July 8, 1886.

Ex parte Joseph R. Dudley and Vincent H. Bell and W. R. Polley:

Application to John Moore, judge of the fourth judicial circuit, for a writ of mandamus.

On this day was presented to me for consideration and action the petition of Joseph R. Dudley and V. H. Bell and W. R. Polley, citizens of Lowndes County, Alabama, asking that a writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ be issued by me commanding the judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court, all of Lowndes County, to appear before me at a time and place, to be designated by me, to show cause why the appointment of inspectors of election appointed by them for the following-named precincts in Lowndes County, to wit, Precinct No. 1 (Benton beat), Precinct No. 18 (Lowndesboro beat), and Precinct No. 19 (St. Clair beat) should not be vacated, and why someone should not be appointed of the political party opposed to the party favored by said inspectors, which said petition is hereto attached and made a part hereof. Upon consideration thereof, it is considered that the same be, and it is hereby, refused; and the said Joseph R. Dudley, V. H. Bell, and W. R. Polley having applied for an appeal to the supreme court of this State from said decision, and having given an appeal bond, with good and sufficient security, which has been approved by me, it is therefore considered that said appeal be granted, returnable to the supreme court of this State on Tuesday, the 13th day of July, 1886.

Done on this 8th day of July, 1886.

JOHN MOORE,
Judge Fourth Judicial Circuit.

The case went to the supreme court in accordance with the prayer and of this petition. The following is the record in the latter court:

SUPREME COURT, Thursday, July 22, 1886.

The court met pursuant to adjournment.
Present, all the justices.

Second division, 580. Joseph R. Dudley et al. vs. H. W. Caffey, judge, etc., et al. Perry circuit court.

Come the parties, by attorneys, and argue and submit this cause for decision.

The court adjourned till Friday, the 23d day of July, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

SUPREME COURT, Friday, July 23, 1886.

The court met pursuant to adjournment.
Present, all the justices.

Second division, 580. Joseph R. Dudley et al. vs. H. W. Caffey, judge of probate, et al. Perry circuit court.

Come the parties, by attorneys, and the record and matters therein assigned for errors being argued and submitted and duly examined and understood by the court, it is considered and ordered that the demurrer interposed in said cause be stricken from the file. It is also considered that the order made by Hon. John Moore, judge of the fourth judicial circuit of the State of Alabama, refusing to issue the writ prayed for in said petition be reversed and annulled. And this court, proceeding to render the said judgment the said judge of the fourth judicial circuit should have rendered, doth consider and order that an alternative writ of mandamus be issued to the said appellees, returnable to the next term of the circuit court of Lowndes County, requiring them to show cause why the appointment of inspectors of election for the said several precincts should not be vacated, and why someone should not be appointed who is a member of the political party opposed to the party favored by said inspectors. It is also considered that the appellees pay the costs of appeal in this court and in said circuit court.

The court adjourned till Thursday, the 29th day of July, 1886, at 12 o'clock m. (Minute book of the supreme court of Alabama, 1884, pages 367, 368.)

It was not doubted then, and indeed I question very much whether it is doubted to any great extent in legal circles now, that the fulfillment of the plain duties of a mandatory statute was ministerial and not judicial in its character. It is not true, Mr. President, that the exercise of judgment is always a judicial act. The duties of an office may be entirely ministerial and the officer have very large discretion. No one ever supposed that a member of a county board of supervisors or county commissioners exercised a judicial function in passing upon and allowing a claim submitted to him, or in inquiring about some matter essential to enable him to fully discharge his duty; and yet we are all cognizant of the fact that there is a wide range of discretion upon the part of such an officer in gathering information with reference to his duty. You may take, for instance, the case of a clerk of a court who is required, under the statutes of many States, to examine into the question of the sufficiency of sureties that are offered to a recognizance or bond. The courts of this country have been almost uniform in holding that while the discharge of that duty requires the exercise of judgment, necessarily requiring the officer to ascertain by the best means within his power the financial sufficiency of the sureties, yet it is a ministerial act. Courts can and do control such acts daily by the issuance of the writ of mandamus.

The supreme court of the State of Alabama, however, more recently overruled the rule they laid down in the case of Dudley vs. The County Officers of Lowndes County; and in the case of Taylor vs. Kolb, appealed from Madison County in 1893, the same court by the same chief justice decided that the appointment of inspectors of an election beat was a judicial act, and that mandamus would not lie. Section 352 of the Civil Code of Alabama, 1886—and this was the statute which was under discussion in this case—reads as follows:

The judge of probate, sheriff, clerk of the circuit court, or any two of them, must, at least thirty days before the holding of any election in their county, appoint three inspectors for each place of voting, two of whom shall be members of opposing political parties if practicable, and one return officer for each precinct, to act at the place of holding elections in each precinct.

It is held, then, that the statute is one that gives judicial power to these officers, the judge of probate, the sheriff, the clerk of the circuit court, who form a commission for the purpose of performing the duties laid down in the statute with reference to the appointment of election officers. The words "if practicable" have been inserted in the statute, and therefore it is held that these persons are the sole judges of the practicability of appointing a person of opposite political faith as an inspector or judge of election.

Mr. President, suppose it were made plain, as it has been made by the affidavits which I have read, that in many of these precincts there are persons amply qualified to perform the duties of inspectors of election, persons whose education is not questioned or questionable; yet it is here laid down as a logical result of the last decision of supreme court that if a judge of probate and sheriff and clerk of the court, acting as a mere commission to carry into execution a ministerial law, say that it is not practicable, that is an end of it, and their decision can not be controlled. If the probate judge, the sheriff, and the clerk were corrupt persons, if they had the least disposition to change the result of an election in a precinct, here is unrestrained opportunity, and it is held that the court can not reach and control their action; that the people must depend simply upon the honesty of these officers without any power to invoke judicial process to control them.

I do not know, of course, aside from the evidence which has been placed in my hands, the extent to which this abuse has been carried, but it doubtless has been carried to a great extent. The Populist party, and the Jeffersonian Democrats, as they call themselves, and the Republicans as well—and I have less sympathy for the Republicans than for the others—

Mr. CHANDLER. Why is that?

Mr. ALLEN. It would take me too long to tell. Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator explain that before he gets through.

Mr. ALLEN. All these have been shut out. According to the returns of the different returning boards of the State, the State is in control of what is known as the organized Democracy. Something like 86,000 votes were cast for Mr. Kolb for governor in 1894, and yet the control of the entire election machinery of the State was in charge of the organized Democracy, who returned votes at places where the polls were not even opened. In many instances positive frauds have been shown by the affidavits I have read.

Now, the ordinary citizen would suppose that the courts were open to him for some remedy; that he could not be deprived of his right to cast his vote and have it counted, with the poor satisfaction that after that was done he might sue the officer and recover damages. It is questionable how much damages he could get under those circumstances. That would be no protection to him. The only protection he could have, the only successful protection, would be that protection found in the courts that would require these officers by a writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ to follow out the law not only in letter but in spirit.

The supreme court of that State did lay down that rule, and it was a sound rule. They did compel the officers of several of the precincts in 1886 to follow out the law and appoint as inspectors of election persons of opposite political faith.

In 1893, when there was some hope of carrying the State of Alabama for another party than the organized Democracy, when at last there seems to be occasion for a different rule, that different rule was instituted and the former decision was overruled. Now, I do not pretend to arraign the court of last resort of that State; I would not suffer myself to do that; but if the rule laid down by them in their last decision is to become the law of this country, if it is to be universally adopted, then the political machinery of State and nation will be in the hands of the party that can fortify itself by fraud and perjury and violence. There never will be an opportunity to remove it. It either means an appeal to the courts to control these ministerial officers in the discharge of their duty, or it means an appeal to force or revolution to overturn the Government that suffers such things to take place without remedy.

Mr. PUGH. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I will ask him to put into his remarks the decision of the court overruling the one which he has read to the Senate. I think that justice to the court and to the merits of the question involved certainly requires that the last decision should be published, giving the reasons upon which the court changed the rule. I have no doubt that the last decision was the law of the case, and I do not think any court would entertain any other opinion.

Mr. ALLEN. My recollection is that the last decision does not refer to the first one at all.

Mr. PUGH. It may not; but the Senator says the court laid down a different rule.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing to insert the syllabus if that will be sufficient.

Mr. PUGH. And the decision of the judge.

Mr. ALLEN. I will insert it in such form that there will be enough given to express the idea.

Mr. PUGH. Yes; that will be fair.

Following is the syllabus of the case referred to:

1. The duties to be performed by the judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk under Code 1886, § 352, requiring them to appoint three inspectors of election, "two of whom shall be members of opposing political parties, if practicable," are not purely ministerial, but require judicial judgment and discretion and consideration of evidence; and therefore mandamus, while it lies to compel them to act, does not lie to control their action.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, when we consider the former law on this subject, the history of elections, and the zeal of party spirit throughout the whole country, there is no escape from the fact that each opposing political party should have a representative at each polling place. That is a question of paramount importance and right. The tendency of each political party to commit frauds and to cheat and intimidate at elections suggests the idea that for each opposing political party to have a representative at each election would tend to suppress or detect the prostitution of the ballot box and secure fair and honest elections. Hence, the right of each opposing political party to have a representative at each election is one of prime necessity and right. Each opposing political party must have such representative. This right can not be defeated, postponed, or impaired because of the political affiliations or bias of the appointing officials.

To disobey the law in this regard and defeat the right of an opposing political party to have such representative at an election is to permit the appointing power to lend itself to the commission of election frauds and to aid in the suppression of the popular will. To do this is, to say the least, a great public wrong or high crime. It corrupts, if it does not destroy, the very basic principles upon which popular representative government rests, and upon which constitutional liberty finds its chief support.

Can it be possible that such a far-reaching and conservative right, such a sacred privilege, must find its only security, support, and maintenance in the mere discretion or judgment of a tribunal perhaps antagonistic to the right?

The boast of our institutions, the glory of our free people, is that ours is a Government of laws and not of men; that it is a country where rights are secured, where liberty is protected, and where free institutions are vindicated by law and not by the discretion of officialism. The policy of our legislation and the practice of our courts have always been to leave as little as possible to the discretion of officials, however exalted.

It is an imperative and potent canon of interpretation of all laws that the word "may," when employed in a statute that invokes action on the part of an official, when the duty arising from the statute is for the benefit of the public or of a third person in interest, shall be subject to the imperative construction, interpretation, and mandatory import of the word "must." There can be no doubt that this canon of interpretation finds great support in our laws and institutions from the sedulous care that has been exercised to limit the discretion of all officials.

The sacred and constitutional right, the right preservative of all other rights, the right to vote and to have the vote counted, and the results of an election honestly declared as the majority directs, certainly was never intended to be menaced by the discretion of any officer or tribunal or to be imperiled or defeated by the partisan bias of the discretion of any man or official.

To accept the idea as lawful that the right of an "opposing political party" to have an inspector at an election rests in the judicial ascertainment of facts or in the discretion of any man or official is to let in the iniquitous means to sweep away the right, to breed discontent among the people. It will generate suspicion, beget distrust, and finally lead to open hostility to the Government.

Statesmanship and wisdom, to say nothing of the teachings of the recent past and the ominous present, suggest to all that the right, sacred under section 352 of the civil code of Alabama, was not intended by the legislature to rest its security upon the mere discretion or judicial opinion of any man or tribunal, but that law imperatively secured the right and commanded its observance and enforcement as a matter of prime importance.

It can not be successfully contended, and it should not be suggested, that the legislature of so great and intelligent a State as Alabama would lend itself to enacting laws that on their face propose to give rights, and at the same time in the same act establish the means of their defeat, by no wrongful act whatever of the party for whose benefit such right was given, but by the mere uncontrolled and uncontrollable discretion of an official. Such a construction is an insult to the integrity and intelligence of the legislature and a travesty upon justice and right.

The right of the "opposing political party" to have an inspector at each place of voting is actually created and established by the statute, and does not exist by any adjudication, opinion, or discretion of any official. This right, being created by the law, can not be defeated by the mere discretion or judgment of an official upon a matter collateral to the right or by the machinery by which the right is to be secured. The right, being created clearly by positive enactment, can only be defeated by positive enactment. It can not be taken away by mere construction or discretion of any tribunal.

The appointing authority has no power to determine whether or not an opposing political party shall have an inspector. That right is clearly given by the statute. The duty to appoint such inspector is imperative and admits of no discretion.

The distinction is sought to be created from the language of the statute which, it is contended, allows the appointing power to ascertain from facts if a proposed inspector does belong to an "opposing political party."

The words "if practicable," contained in the statute, most unquestionably refer to the ascertainment of the fact whether or not there is an "opposing party" contending in the election, and not, there being an opposing political party, to the question of whether it would be practicable to appoint an inspector from that party. If there be such a political party the duty is imperative upon the appointing power to select an inspector from the membership of such party. To leave the enforcement of such right to the discretion of the appointing power would be to submit the enjoyment of such right not to the statute that has already granted it, but such right already granted may be denied, defeated, or impaired by the discretion of the appointing power. Any other construction would leave the right granted in the statute subject to the mere discretion of the appointing power, and might lead to the denial of the right when there should be an opposing political party.

Is the duty of the appointing power in this case a ministerial duty in which there is no discretion, or is it a judicial duty in which a discretion must of a necessity be exercised?

A ministerial act and a ministerial duty are quite synonymous, and are defined to be acts or duties which are performed in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to or the exercise of judgment upon the propriety of the act or duty to be performed. Floumory vs. City of Jeffersonville (17 Indiana, 174); Mississippi vs. Johnson (4 Wallace, 498); Grider vs. Tally (77 Alabama, 425).

I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] to this statement. Here is the rule, as I understand it, with reference to this class of duties:

That a necessity may exist for the ascertainment, from personal knowledge and information derived from other sources, of the state of facts on which the performance of the act becomes a clear and specific duty does not operate to convert it into an act judicial in its nature. Such is not the judgment or discretion which is an essential element of judicial action.

I call the Senator's attention to Grider vs. Tally (77 Alabama, 466); Crane vs. Camp (12 Connecticut, 464); State vs. Doyle, (40 Wisconsin, 175-188).

The statute is imperative that two of the inspectors must be members of "opposing political parties, if practicable." The fact that the appointing power might from necessity have to resort to personal knowledge, or to information derived from other sources, to ascertain that there were opposing political parties contending in the election, and that a certain person was a member of one party or the other, does not convert the act into one of a judicial nature.

The right is clearly given and imperative by the statute, and the appointing tribunal has no authority to determine the propriety or necessity of such appointment when there is an opposing political party. When a certain person is a member of such party, although this information may be derived from personal knowledge possessed by the members of the appointing tribunal or from other sources, then the mandate of the law is that an inspector must be appointed from such "opposing political party." There is no room for the operation of judgment or discretion. (Rains vs. Simpson, 50 Texas, 496-501.)

The duty which the appointing tribunal discharges under this statute is of a public character, in the nature of a public trust, and the tribunal can act legally only when acting in strict conformity to the statute that creates the trust.

The judicial act that is contradistinguished from the ministerial act under consideration is where evidence is introduced by contending parties acting for private advantage in a hearing granted to the opposing forces, and where, upon such evidence, the tribunal is called upon to decide as to the legality or propriety of granting the prayer, or performing the act or discharging the duty at issue.

I have shown in a former part of this argument that the phrase "if practicable," as found in the statute, does not relate to the propriety of the appointment, but to the ascertainment of the existence of opposing political parties.

The statute requires no question to be considered as to the propriety of the appointment or the qualifications or capacity of the inspector, but only his membership of such opposing political party. To ascertain this membership, as I have shown, does not require a judicial act.

Mr. MARTIN. I shall be very greatly obliged to the Senator from Nebraska, as well as the Senate, if I may be allowed just a moment of time to have a little bill passed which has been reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs. It will take but a moment.

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield for that purpose.

FRONTIER GUARDS.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2372.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2372) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to place on file in the War Department the names of the officers and members of the Frontier Guards, mustered into the volunteer military service of the United States on the 16th day of April, 1861, and issue discharges to the same.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to suggest to my colleague upon the Committee on Military Affairs, and the chairman of it, that I have to-day seen in the hands of a member of the Frontier Guards a discharge which was issued at the time, and which is very much like what we propose to give by law. It has the signature, or a facsimile of the signature, of Simon Cameron and of Abraham Lincoln, and recites in it exactly what this bill proposes to recite in the discharge to be issued. If the Senator from Kansas will let the bill lie over until to-morrow I will help to bring it up again if he wants to call it up. I should like to show the discharge to the chairman of the committee to-morrow.

Mr. BATE. Under that statement I will ask that the bill may lie over.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Tennessee will find it in the room of the Committee on Military Affairs. I left it there this afternoon.

Mr. CHANDLER. The same kind of a discharge, I understand the Senator from Connecticut, has already been issued that is wanted from the War Department.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has the essential elements of the discharge which is provided by the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not understand that it was issued by the War Department, because no bill of this kind has ever passed Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand that the Senator from Kansas proposes to strike out the provision that the discharges shall be in the exact language of the discharges of Capt. James H. Lane?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir; and I propose to insert the words substantially in line 13, after the word "be."

Mr. WOLCOTT. The discussion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] upon the pending amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill is so interesting and pertinent that I shall object to the consideration of the bill if it is to give rise to further discussion. I would rather hear the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will withdraw the call I will move an adjournment.

Mr. QUAY. I withdraw the call.

Mr. CHANDLER. The call can not be withdrawn when a suggestion that there is no quorum present has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Allison,	Clark,	Hawley,	Platt,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Hill,	Quay,
Berry,	Coke,	Hoar,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Cullom,	Hunton,	Wolcott.
Butler,	George,	Martin,
Candlen,	Gray,	Pasco,
Carey,	Hale,	Peffer,

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MILLS] is detained at home by sickness, and has been for several days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Twenty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 12, 1895, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 11, 1895.

The House met at 11.30 o'clock a. m. and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

FUR SEALS IN BERING SEA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution of the 23d ultimo, additional information relating to fur seals in Bering Sea; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief of Engineers in relation to Chippewa Indian lands in Minnesota subject to overflow by operation of reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHICAGO, ILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 397) to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. DURBOROW. On Saturday last the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, made a motion to concur in these amendments, but at the request of the gentleman from Texas the matter went over. I now renew the motion that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DURBOROW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this day, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I must ask for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees for reports be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports to make may have consent to file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

BRANCH MINT AT DENVER, COLO.

Mr. BLAND. I have a privileged matter which I desire to call up.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill which the gentleman sends to the desk will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1867) to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver, Colo.

Mr. BLAND. I ask that this bill be taken up for consideration.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] presents a bill from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and calls it up for consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Missouri the engrossed copy of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. This is a printed copy of it.

The SPEAKER. The bill certified by the Secretary of the Senate and which is called the engrossed copy is the bill which must be used at the desk.

Mr. BLAND. That copy of the bill must be down in my committee room. I have sent for it. I ask that meanwhile this printed copy be substituted. The other will be here in a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asks that this copy be read instead of the engrossed copy, which will be here in a moment. In the absence of objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That hereafter there shall be carried on at the branch mint of the United States at Denver, in the State of Colorado, the coinage of gold and silver.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of sections 3496 and 3497 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby made applicable to the mint of the United States at Denver, Colo., and that so much of sections 3553, 3559, 3560, and 3561 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as relates to the mint at Denver, Colo., are hereby repealed; and that the compensation of the officers of said mint shall be the same as those of the mint at Carson City, Nev.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in force in relation to the mints of the United States, and for the government of the officers and persons employed therein, shall be applicable to the mint at Denver.

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE].

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to object until I can hear an explanation of the bill. I think it is all right.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this session of Congress we thought we might secure an appropriation for the establishment of a mint with full equipment at Denver. A bill for the purpose was introduced in the Senate, and I introduced in this House a similar bill, making an appropriation of $600,000. We soon found, however, that it was idle to hope for any measure of that kind at this time. We then submitted to the Treasury Department the necessity of using the assay office at Denver for minting purposes, especially for the minting of gold. With that view Senator WOLCOTT introduced in the Senate the present bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance of that body and by that committee submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who in his reply calls attention to the growing production of gold in the States adjacent to Denver, naming Colorado, South Dakota, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Idaho, and Montana. He also calls attention to the fact that the gold product of that region, which in 1892 was something over $11,000,000, had in 1893 increased to $19,000,000, and in 1894 to $26,000,000, as shown by the tables embraced in his report. These figures are certainly not too large. We think from the reports of the express companies, such as Wells, Fargo & Co., that they are too small. The Secretary in his communication gives his reasons for recommending that coinage be hereafter carried on at this branch mint.

Mr. DINGLEY. This mint at Denver is now simply an assay office—

Mr. PENCE. If the gentleman will excuse me a moment I will call his attention to what the statute provides—

Mr. DINGLEY. And the proposition is to enlarge it to a full mint?

Mr. PENCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the officers are to receive the same compensation as those of the mint at Carson City, which is a mint proper in law, although in fact only an assay office.

Mr. PENCE. The compensation is fixed now by the statute I have in my hand, and will read if it be desired. It is provided that the assayer shall receive $2,500 and the melter $2,500. This is the only change. Under this bill the compensation is fixed the same as it is at Carson City, Nev. At Carson City it is $3,000; and so the only increase is the increase of these two salaries from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. MONEY. The mint at Carson City is not in operation, is it?

Mr. PENCE. The mint at Carson City, I understand, is not in active operation on account of the inconvenience of making shipments and the cost of the expressage. After the bullion is stamped it is sent to the mint in Philadelphia.

Mr. DINGLEY. This increases the amount at Denver about $6,000 annually.

Mr. PENCE. No; I think the gentleman from Maine is mistaken in that.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have the appropriation bill in my hand, and the amount appropriated for Carson City is $18,100, and Denver $12,350, or nearly $6,000 difference between them.

Mr. HULL. But I think the wages of the workmen are also included in the Denver amount.

Mr. PENCE. I think the gentleman from Maine is mistaken as to that.

Mr. DINGLEY. No; I have the bill before me, and it covers only officials and not the wages of workmen.

Mr. PENCE. Is that the appropriation bill as passed or as reported?

Mr. DINGLEY. As it was reported and as the law was for the last year. I think there has been some slight increase at Denver, however.

Mr. PENCE. Yes, there has been; but I think the only difference the gentleman will find between this bill and the amount appropriated is the increase of $500 in the compensation of the assayer and melter.

Mr. DINGLEY. The language of the bill is to make applicable the statutes relating to the mints generally to the mint at Denver. The bill goes on to say:

The compensation of the officers of said mint shall be the same as those of the mint at Carson City, Nev.

Now, at Carson City, Nev., there is a cashier at $2,000. There is no cashier at Denver. Of course a mint proper would require the services of a cashier.

Mr. PENCE. If the gentleman will permit me, the Department suggests that hereafter they may have to recommend some changes in the official force. But now the only difference is in the compensation of these two officers, which is increased $500 a year.

Mr. SAYERS. How many?

Mr. PENCE. Two officers at $500 each, making $1,000 in all.

When the Department shall take active steps in the operation of the mint there they will perhaps have to recommend some changes in the list of officials and in the compensation. But that will be a subject to come up hereafter and be determined by another Congress. We can not determine that now.

Mr. DINGLEY. You only propose to take the officers now in charge and have the salaries regulated as they are at Carson City?

Mr. PENCE. That is all.

Mr. DINGLEY. I agree entirely with the suggestion that, in view of the large increase in the output of gold in Colorado and the neighboring States which go to Denver, it ought to be made a full mint. The only question with me is whether it is necessary to retain also the full mint at Carson City, or whether that could not properly be made an assay office; in other words, to change the relation between the two places, making Denver a full mint and Carson City an assay office.

Mr. PENCE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine that that might be arranged in future by recommendation from the Department. Of course the gentleman will understand that we do not want to antagonize Carson City.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that. I am merely pointing out the fact that we have a full mint at Carson City, Nev., now, and whether it would not be to the interest of the Government to make that mint an assay office in law as it is in fact, and establish the full mint at Denver.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine that the appropriation carried in this bill for the Carson City mint puts it on the basis of an assay office now.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the statement of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. DINGLEY. The appropriation bill before me shows that the amount fixed for compensation of the officials at Carson City is $18,100 and for the officials at Denver only $12,350, there being some $6,000 more at Carson City than at Denver.

Now, that unquestionably must rest on the basis that it is not a full mint. As a matter of fact, I think it is only practically an assay office. I think what ought to be done would be to change the relative position of these two places; that is to say, make Carson City an assay office and Denver a full mint.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the proposition here, and only desired to call attention to this fact in connection with it, not with a view to obstructing its passage.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have a vote.

Mr. PENCE. I ask the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asks consent to suspend the vote until the engrossed copy of the bill has been produced. It is not yet at the desk.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that by unanimous consent this matter come up immediately after the disposition of the legislative bill, as I understand the engrossed copy is not here.

Mr. PENCE. The matter is in charge of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, who only yielded to me to explain the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the matter be held up until the engrossed copy is supplied.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill remain on the table, to be called up to-morrow or such other time as the gentleman from Missouri may desire.

The SPEAKER. It is not on the table; but if there be no objection the question on the passage of the bill will be submitted after the committee rises to-day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 397) to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.; and

A bill (S. 814) for the relief of the representatives of Daniel C. Rodman, deceased, and others.

COMMITTEE CHANGE.

Mr. SOMERS was, by unanimous consent, excused from further service on the Committee on the Public Lands, and the Speaker appointed Mr. CAMINETTI in his place.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8767) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, with Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 31, to the amendment relating to masters of vessels.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. I then ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; I ask the Clerk to resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Assay office at Charlotte, N. C.: For assayer and melter, $1,500; assistant assayer, $1,250; in all, $2,750.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $2,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the assay office at Charlotte, N. C., has absolutely no business. The money that is appropriated every year for carrying it on would more than pay for all the metal that is submitted there in five years, as I understand. It is carried in the legislative appropriation bill every year simply because the Congress before carried it there. I move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate the lines which he moves to strike out?

Mr. HULL. I move to strike out lines 18 to 23, inclusive, on page 57.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, here is the testimony of the Director of the Mint before the subcommittee:

The CHAIRMAN. You think you will need $10,000?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir; we will need it.

The CHAIRMAN. For Charlotte you estimate the same as the current law?

Mr. PRESTON. Just the same.

Mr. DINGLEY. How about that? There were some criticisms in the House, a few days ago, about that mint. What is the work that is really being done there?

Mr. PRESTON. It is simply a little assay office, where deposits of gold are received and paid for.

Mr. DINGLEY. What was the amount of gold received there the last fiscal year?

Mr. PRESTON. I think it was something over $100,000, but I can not remember exactly at this moment; no, it is about $170,000 I think, but I am not positive.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it necessary to have that assay office there for the convenience of the people around there; gold is the only product which centers there?

Mr. PRESTON. That is all—North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and South Carolina.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the production been running down there?

Mr. PRESTON. Well, it increased a little last year, but I think it is a little off this year—that is, it increased a little in 1890, and it has been a little less in 1894.

So, according to the testimony of the Director of the Mint, the annual production of gold that is brought to that mint amounts to about $170,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that there are nearly 200,000 square miles of territory that produce gold which are tributary to that mint. This territory extends from the Potomac River to Alabama. The production of gold has varied in different years according to the way that labor could be employed.

As everyone familiar with gold mining knows, a gold dollar generally costs from two to three dollars to get it—that is, taking the total amount of labor that is expended over the entire country—and we find that the average cost of the production of gold is not any greater in the belt from here to Alabama than it is in other sections of the country, taking a long series of years together.

The products of the farm have been reduced to that degree that there is absolutely no money either in raising wheat or cotton or stock. Consequently a great many people in that section of the country have commenced to look out for minerals.

This country is peculiar in this respect: You can work it down to water at very slight cost. The gold is comparatively free. But the moment you strike water it turns into sulphurets, and requires large plants to chlorinate the ore in order to extract the gold. It looks to me now as though there would be more capital invested in the mining industry of this section, on account of the depreciation of farm products, than there has been for the past ten years.

Charlotte is a railroad center. They had a mint there long before the war, and they coined a considerable amount of money. The records of the different mines are kept at this mint. Anyone who wants to go into gold mining can get there the record of what has been taken out of the different mines. The chief assayer has been charged by the Director of the Mint with getting up statistics of all the mines from Maryland to Alabama, and if the gentleman will examine his report he will find that it covers the number of square miles that I have already stated, and that there are a great number of people who will be benefited by maintaining this assay office there.

Now, if the conditions were good, if farm labor paid, why there might be some excuse for it; but right at this particular time, when agriculture is so depressed, and a man can make a few dollars from branch or surface mining during the summer months when not at work in his crop, and where he stands a chance of developing a mine that can be sold to a corporation or large capitalist, I think it is really necessary for this section of country that this office be retained.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, after the statement of the gentleman I do not care to press the amendment. My understanding was that the amount to be assayed altogether was about $170,000. I have misplaced my report of the Director of the Mint, but from the statement of the gentleman from Missouri the amount seems to be so large that I think it is much preferable to the assay office at Carson City.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no information on the subject except what I get from the Director of the Mint.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at Helena, Mont.: For salary of assayer in charge, $2,250; melter, $1,800; chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk, $1,400; in all, $7,250.

For wages of workmen, $13,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, $5,000.

Mr. HARTMAN. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to establish at the United States assay office at Helena, Mont., a refinery for refining and parting gold and silver and for casting the same into bars, ingots, or disks.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to keep a fund in coin and gold and silver bars from which depositors of gold and silver bullion at the said assay office can be paid as soon as the values of deposits have been ascertained by melt and assay.

That the charges for these operations shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to equal but not to exceed the expenses thereof, and all provisions of law relating to the refineries of the mints and assay offices shall apply to the parting and refining of bullion at the assay office at Helena, Mont.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to reserve the point of order until I can hear further concerning the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that this is a copy of a bill which passed the Senate a few days ago, and it is in the form which I submitted to the gentleman in charge of the bill the day before yesterday. It has already met with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, who is now on the floor and can speak for himself. I have offered it with the understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that if it met with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures that it might be appended as an amendment to this bill. The gentleman is present and can make a statement concerning the matter.

Mr. BLAND. With reference to this bill, I have not had time to consider it fully; but so far as my judgment is concerned I think it is a matter of some importance to have it enacted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to ask my colleague whether or not he is prepared to say, and he is an expert on these matters, that he thinks it is necessary?

Mr. BLAND. I would not say that it is absolutely necessary and indispensable; but I think it is a matter of importance, and that Congress would do well to enact it.

Mr. DOCKERY. What expense would be involved?

Mr. BLAND. That I do not know; but I think it would be a great convenience to have it in Montana.

Mr. HARTMAN. If the gentleman in charge of the bill will permit me, I will submit a very brief memorandum which I have received from the Treasury Department:

In case of the establishment of a plant for parting and refining bullion at the United States assay office at Helena, Mont., it would necessarily be conducted by a sulphuric-acid process, that being the most economical, by reason of the amount that would be realized by the Government from the sale of the by-products (blue vitriol) resulting from that process.

During 1893 the amount of silver bullion produced in Montana from quartz and milling ores was estimated at 9,017,000 fine ounces. Bullion produced from ores of this character could readily be refined by Government refineries, and the bullion from these ores, milled within the State, would no doubt be sent to the assay office at Helena to be refined if there were a refinery attached to that institution. After the first cost of the erection of a plant there would be no further expense to the Government for its support, as under the law the charges collected are made applicable to the payment of the expenses for parting and refining bullion, and no other moneys could be used for the payment of the expenses of the refinery. The gold bullion deposited at Helena would then naturally be refined before its transmission to the mint. If it were refined at Helena, it would be readily converted into coin as soon as its receipt at the mint. The amount that would be realized by the sale to the Government of the by-products would depend entirely upon the volume of the business done.

In other words, it would be a self-sustaining institution. The sale of the by-products would pay all the expenses that might be incurred.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish the gentleman would explain this third section:

That the charges for these operations shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to equal but not to exceed the expenses thereof, and all provisions of law relating to the refineries of the mints and assay offices shall apply to the parting and refining of bullion at the assay office at Helena, Mont.

Mr. HARTMAN. May I answer that? The proposed charges referred to there, I will state, are charges which the office makes to parties bringing bullion there to assay. It is not a charge against the United States, but a charge against the individuals, who would be compelled to pay by reason of bringing their bullion there for assaying, for parting and refining. It does not constitute one dollar of expense to the Government for that purpose at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. What expense is put on the Government?

Mr. HARTMAN. There is no expense put on the Government except the cost of the original establishment of the plant; and for that we do not ask a dollar of appropriation at the hands of this Congress—not a cent.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems that this bill was introduced April 3, 1894, and has not been reported.

Mr. HARTMAN. It has been reported and passed the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. This very bill?

Mr. HARTMAN. This very bill, verbatim et literatim. It passed the Senate three or four days ago, and was referred to our committee; and I have not yet had a hearing before that committee on the subject.

Mr. DOCKERY. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I will not make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. I call for a vote then, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Oklahoma: For salary of governor, $2,000; chief justice and four associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, $1,800; $19,400. For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $1,000.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 24, page 60, by inserting after the word "thousand" the words "five hundred;" so as to make the appropriation for contingent expenses $1,500.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment to the amendment was read, as follows:

Page 60, line 24, strike out "one thousand" and insert "two thousand two hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I have moved to make the incidental expense fund $1,500, because that is the sum carried by the current law. It ought to be more, but I do not expect more than was allowed in the last act. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma ought in my opinion to be adopted. Indeed, I think the estimate shows that the appropriation for this purpose ought to be $3,000, because that much is actually used. I understand that the Territorial government appropriates only $800. I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman representing the Territory; indeed I think it ought to be adopted, but in any event the appropriation certainly ought to be as large as that of last year. In the case of Alaska $2,000 is allowed by this bill for contingent expenses of the governor's office. The Territory of Oklahoma has fifty times as many people as Alaska; its business is very much more important, and the duties of the governor's office much more arduous than in Alaska or any other Territory.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, in the appropriation bill passed last year the House raised the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the governor's office from $500 to $1,500. Since that time the business of the office has largely increased. I send to the Clerk's desk and asked to have read the letter of the governor transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury with the estimate.

The letter was read, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Guthrie, Okla., September 27, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith an estimate of the expenses of the governor's office, Territory of Oklahoma, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895. In the matter of the contingent expenses, Territory of Oklahoma, to be expended by the governor, I have made a careful itemized statement as conservative as is consistent with the efficient administration of this office. I have tried at all times to be economical in expending this appropriation, but it has heretofore been utterly inadequate to meet the demands of the office, and I have been compelled to draw on my salary for expenses, a very unpleasant duty, I assure you. The items of this estimate are for private secretary, $1,200, which is as low as an efficient man can be secured for; stenographer and typewriter, $500; rent, $400; janitor, $240; fuel and lights, $150; stationery, $300; telegrams, $200; furniture, $100; other incidentals, $10; telephone, $15. The opening of Indian reservations and the supervision of new counties entails an unavoidable large expense on the governor's office. To have the office hampered with a lack of funds to carry on its legitimate work is certainly not to the best interests of the public, and I sincerely hope that the appropriation will be made as included in the estimate.

I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant.

WILLIAM C. RENFROW, Governor.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. FLYNN. The Territory of Oklahoma to-day constitutes the largest Congressional district in the United States. The governor informs me by a letter received this morning that his mail runs above 100 letters a day. We have a thoroughly American constituency there, who write to the governor freely in relation to all sorts of matters. The governor has made a detailed statement of the expenses that are absolutely necessary for the proper maintenance of his office; but instead of allowing what was allowed last year, which was a thousand dollars too little, the Committee on Appropriations have reduced the amount $500. I hope that the House will do justice to the governor's office of our Territory, and will allow the amount that is absolutely required to conduct the business of that office in an intelligent and safe manner.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the amount allowed for contingent expenses to each of the Territorial governors, except the governor of Oklahoma, is fixed at $500.

Mr. FLYNN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Two thousand dollars is allowed in Alaska.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true; but the gentleman will note that the governor of Alaska is compelled to travel all over that large Territory, and, with the exception of Alaska, where there are peculiar and special reasons for a larger allowance, the contingent expenses for the Territorial governors are fixed at $500 each. In the case of Oklahoma an increase was made shortly after the admission of the Territory, and I believe that since the admission the contingent expenses of the governor's office have exceeded $500, though I do not now recall the facts with certainty. But in this bill we give $1,000, and in addition to that the governor is allowed, as I am advised, $800 by the Territorial government. That gives him $1,800 for contingent expenses; and, while I recognize the fact that there are some unusual demands upon the governor's office in that new and rapidly growing Territory, I think the $1,000 allowed by Congress and the $800 allowed by the Territory is ample to meet all necessary demands.

Mr. FLYNN. Admitting that the governor is allowed $800 by the Territory, it should be remembered that his estimate of the amount required for this purpose is $3,000. I have deducted that $800 from the estimate, which leaves the $2,200 provided for in my amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. FLYNN to the amendment of Mr. McRAE, and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. FLYNN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 43.

Mr. FLYNN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused, only 23 members voting in favor thereof. So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point comes too late after the demand for tellers has been refused. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "thousand," in line 24, page 50, insert "five hundred;" so that the clause will read: "$1,500."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. McRAE, there were—ayes 53, noes 34.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia made the point of no quorum, but, after a pause, withdrew it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 27 voting in favor thereof; and Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. McRAE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

The Clerk read as follows, under the heading "Territory of Oklahoma:"

For legislative expenses, namely: For rent of office, furniture, fuel, lights, stationery, clerk hire, printing, postage, ice, record casings, and messenger, porter, and other incidental expenses of the secretary's office, $2,000.

Mr. FLYNN. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the paragraph just read "$2,000" and inserting "$3,558.75."

Mr. Chairman, the estimates from the office of the secretary of Oklahoma show the exact amount which is included in my amendment. By an inadvertence of ours at the last session we reduced the appropriation for the secretary's office $250 in order to secure the adoption of an amendment authorizing the convening of a session of our Territorial legislature. That sum of $250, although reported at that time by the committee, has never been made good. Now the secretary of our Territory has sent in an estimate of what he claims to be absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of his office, and those figures are the figures included in the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk. I hope this amendment will be adopted in accordance with the estimate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the amount named in the bill is the exact amount given to every Territory of the Union for expenses of this kind in the off year when the legislature does not meet. If the increased amount proposed in the amendment is to be given to the Territory of Oklahoma simply for the asking, the same amount ought to be allowed to the other Territories. The House ought to act advisedly on this question. There were some equities which might be urged in support of the claim of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] with reference to contingent expenses; but when it comes to increasing every item for this Territory, thus discriminating against other Territories, I think it time for the House to halt and consider this matter.

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman now concedes that the increased allowance for contingent expenses was equitable although he opposed it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I said there might be some sort of equity in the claim, because the Territory had $1,500 for that purpose this year.

Mr. FLYNN. It appears that because we reside in a Territory the gentleman in charge of this bill would reduce our expenses to what he personally thinks necessary, without regard to what the proper officials state to be the necessities. Last year, as I have stated, the Committee on Appropriations reported $250 more for the secretary's office than was actually allowed, because, in order to obviate objection to one of our amendments, we struck out $250 in order that there might be a reduction of expenditure; and by that means we obtained a session of our legislature. That $250, as I have stated, has never been made up. The gentleman from Missouri this year has not included even that in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would be a matter for the deficiency bill, if it should go anywhere.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FLYNN, there were—ayes 41, noes 94.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana and Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 28, noes 88.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BAILEY). No quorum having voted, the Chair will direct the Clerk to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; when the following-named members failed to answer:

Abbott,	Crain,	Hines,	Phillips,
Aldrich,	Culbertson,	Holman,	Powers,

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, under the rule, will now rise and report the result of the call to the House.

Mr. BARWIG. I ask that my colleague, Mr. WELLS, be excused on account of sickness in his family.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done in the House. The committee will rise under the rule.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BAILEY, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the legislative appropriation bill, had found itself without a quorum; whereupon he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the absentees to the House.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, be excused to-day on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. Two hundred and thirteen members having answered to their names, a quorum being present, under the rule the committee will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places and proceed with the count.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 139.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; Assistant Secretary, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500; disbursing clerk, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; one stenographer, $1,800; five clerks of class 4; clerk to the Assistant Secretary, $1,800; five clerks of class 3; eight clerks of class 2; twelve clerks of class 1; four clerks, at $1,000 each; four messengers; seven assistant messengers; eight laborers; carpenter, and foreman of laborers, at $1,000 each; two carpenters, at $900 each; one hostler, $600; two hostlers and one watchman, at $540 each; in all, $92,900.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 63, line 23, by adding the following:

"That so much of section 229 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as requires the Secretary of War to lay before Congress, at the commencement of each regular session, a statement of all contracts for supplies or services which have been made by him, or under his direction, during the year preceding, and so much of the army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1885, approved July 1, 1884, as requires the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence to report all purchases of supplies made by their departments, with their costs and place of delivery, to the Secretary of War for transmission to Congress annually, be, and the same are, repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6585) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. HAWLEY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 6244) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jacob Eckert.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 917) for the relief of the Newberry College, Newberry, S. C.;

A bill (S. 1142) directing the parting and refining of bullion to be carried on at the United States assay office at Helena, Mont.;

A bill (S. 2531) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in the State of Mississippi;

Joint resolution (S. R. 113) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Michigan the flags of certain regiments of Michigan Volunteer Infantry;

Joint resolution (S. R. 128) making an appropriation of $5,000 for clearing the Potomac River of ice; and Joint resolution (S. R. 130) authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning deep waterways between the ocean and Great Lakes, and providing commissioners therefor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the invitation of the honorable Secretary of War be accepted and that a joint special committee of 15 members is hereby created, 9 of whom shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House and 6 by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, whose duty it shall be to prepare and report to their respective Houses for consideration a plan for the proper participation of Congress in the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park on September 19 and 20 next.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. BAILEY in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,000; First Assistant Secretary, $4,500; Assistant Secretary, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,500, and $250 additional as superintendent of the Patent Office building; nine members of a board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; one special land inspector connected with the administration of the public-land service, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be subject to his direction, $2,500; one clerk in charge of documents, $2,000; six clerks, chiefs of division, at $2,000 each, one of whom shall be disbursing clerk; private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000; five clerks of class 4; seven clerks of class 3; one custodian, who shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,000; one bookkeeper for custodian, $1,200; seven clerks of class 2; fourteen clerks of class 1, two of whom shall be stenographers or typewriters; one returns-office clerk, $1,200; one female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each; seven copyists; one telephone operator, $800; three messengers; six assistant messengers; fourteen laborers; two skilled mechanics, one at $900 and one at $720; two carpenters, at $900 each; one laborer, $800; one packer, $800; one conductor of elevator, at $720; four charwomen; one captain of the watch, $1,000; forty watchmen; additional to two watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; one engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; and seven firemen; in all, $176,770.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the provision incorporated in this paragraph in lines 13 and 14—"private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BAILEY). What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. FLYNN. That this is new legislation not authorized by existing law, and is an increase of expenditures.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am advised that there is no law authorizing this officer. He has only lived in the appropriation bills which have passed Congress heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no law authorizing this officer, and the point of order is made, the Chair will be constrained to hold that it is well taken.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am advised, and suppose it is correct, that there is no law.

Mr. FLYNN. There is no law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes, however, that gentlemen will be certain as to the fact on which the point of order is based.

Mr. DOCKERY. I find, on examination, that there is no provision of law authorizing this appointment.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no law authorizing this officer, and the point of order having been made, the Chair sustains it, and the provision will be stricken out.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

General Land Office: For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; one Assistant Commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents, and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Commissioner, and shall act as Commissioner in the absence of that officer or in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,250; two law clerks, at $2,200 each; three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; ten chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; two law examiners, at $2,000 each; ten principal examiners of land claims and contests, at $2,000 each; twenty-nine clerks of class 4; fifty-seven clerks of class 3; fifty-eight clerks of class 2; sixty-one clerks of class 1; forty-five clerks, at $1,000 each; fifty copyists; two messengers; nine assistant messengers; twelve laborers; and six packers, at $720 each; in all, $475,350.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the point of order against the provision for the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Under the law he is entitled to a salary of only $3,000. The amount provided here is $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee). Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. The point of order, if made, is undoubtedly well taken. The statute fixes the salary at $3,000, as I understand it, but the appropriation bills for some years past have provided $5,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to make this statement, with the permission of the Chair:

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has a salary by law of $3,000 and his chief clerk a compensation of $2,000. Some years ago the salary of the Commissioner was increased in an appropriation bill to $5,000. I suppose that the work of the Land Office has necessarily greatly decreased. We have very much less land than we formerly had; and it seems to me that at the present time, when a salary is worth more than ever before, that it is not a proper thing to increase salaries in those positions where the business has decreased.

Now, for instance the Commissioner of Pensions is entitled to $3,000 salary under the law. That was fixed as the compensation for the office when the business was comparatively small. The Commissioner of Pensions now disburses about $140,000,000 a year, and receives a salary of $5,000. In the same way the salaries of his two assistants have been increased. I shall make no point of order upon that, because the increase seems to me to be not an improper one. But here are the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commissioner of Patents, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in whose offices there has been no increase of business, but where as to at least two of them if not three there has been an actual decrease, where the work done is neither in importance nor in quantity equal to what it has been heretofore. I make the statement to the committee, and if it chooses to let it go, I can do so. Having made the statement, and having put the information in possession of the committees of the House, I will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. The point of order is undoubtedly good.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Indian Office: For the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $4,000; Assistant Commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $3,000; financial clerk, $2,000; chief of division, $2,000; principal bookkeeper, $1,800; five clerks of class 4; additional to one clerk of class 4 in charge of the educational division, $200; ten clerks of class 3; one draftsman, $1,600; one stenographer, $1,600; one stenographer, $1,400; twelve clerks of class 2; twenty-two clerks of class 1; nine clerks, at $1,000 each; twelve copyists; one messenger; two assistant messengers; one laborer; one female messenger, $840; one messenger boy, $300; and two charwomen; in all, $110,220.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 84, after line 7, insert the following:

"That the account of moneys due the Cherokee Nation under any of the treaties made in the years 1817, 1819, 1825, 1833, 1835, 1836, 1846, 1866, and 1868, and any laws passed by the Congress of the United States for the purpose of carrying said treaties or any of them into effect, prepared in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1863, and reported to Congress in House Executive Document No. 182, Fifty-third Congress, third session, be referred to the Attorney-General, and he is hereby authorized and directed to review the conclusions of law reached by the Department of the Interior in said accounts and report his conclusions thereon to Congress at its next regular session: Provided, He may, if he deem such action advisable, refer said account to the Auditor for the Interior Department for a restatement thereof in accordance with the conclusions of law reached by him; which account, when made by the Auditor for the Interior Department, shall be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury for revision, and by him, when completed, transmitted to the Attorney-General for report to Congress at its next regular session as above provided."

Mr. FLYNN. That refers to the act opening the Cherokee Outlet and those others, does it not?

Mr. DOCKERY. That provision relates to paragraph 4 of the treaty which was confirmed by the United States in the act of March 3, 1891, providing for the purchase of the Cherokee Strip. The United States paid a little more than $8,000,000. I do not remember the exact amount. In the treaty which was ratified at that time there was an authorization for the statement of some old accounts which the Government was alleged to owe these tribes. Now, we find that under that treaty a statement of the account has been made simply by an administrative office, the Indian Office. We do not know whether the statement is correct or not as to computation. We do not know whether it is correct as to the interpretation of treaties, with reference to amounts, and this simply refers the whole question to the Attorney-General, upon questions of fact and of law and of amount, for him to report to the next Congress.

Mr. FLYNN. The only thing I do not like is that it is stated in your amendment that they are to take the construction of law expounded by the Interior Department as law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; that is exactly what we are differing about. We have grave doubts as to the construction of the Interior Department.

The amendment offered by Mr. DOCKERY was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, at the bottom of page 83 there is a provision for one stenographer for the Indian Office at $1,600 and one stenographer at $1,400. I desire to know whether those are the same salaries they have been receiving heretofore.

Mr. DINGLEY. Just the same.

Mr. DOCKERY. The same salaries as are carried in the current law.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to amend by adding, after the word "dollars," in line 23, page 83, the following:

Additional to one clerk in charge of the financial division, $900.

The bill provides for five clerks of class 4. One of these clerks is made chief of the division on education, and his salary is raised to $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 83, after the word "dollars," in line 23, insert:
"Additional to one clerk in charge of the financial division, $900."

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order on that amendment until I can hear a statement about it. It is an increase of salary.

Mr. LYNCH. Of these five clerks of class 4, one has been put at the head of the division of education. He gets $200 more, making his salary $2,000 as Chief of the Bureau of Education. Now, my amendment proposes to give another one of them, who is selected to be chief of the financial division, a salary of $2,000 also.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is already a financial clerk at $2,000. I reserve the point of order on that amendment. I want to hear what is the reason for this increase of salary.

Mr. LYNCH. This is only to equalize the salaries, and to give the chiefs of divisions the same salary.

Mr. DINGLEY. But here is a financial clerk at $2,000.

Mr. LYNCH. That is the same.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you mean to say that a clerk of class 4 is in charge of a financial division?

Mr. LYNCH. The position of chief of the financial division is now being filled by one of the clerks of class 4.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the financial clerk, then?

Mr. LYNCH. The head bookkeeper there, I suppose. It is a separate office entirely.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this matter has not been examined by the committee, and I shall have to insist upon the point of order until it is made more plain that there is some reason for it. I do not see any.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is obnoxious to the point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 23, on page 83, under the subhead "Indian Office," by striking out the word "ten" therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve," so that the clause will read, "twelve clerks of class 3;" and amend line 1, page 84, by striking out the word "twelve" therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ten," so as to read, "ten clerks of class 2;" and also, in line 7, page 84, by striking out the word "two" therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "six," so that the clause included in line 7 and partly in line 6 will read, "in all, $110,000."

Mr. DE ARMOND. I desire to have a letter read as a reason for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 15, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 12th instant, amending his estimate on page 55 of the Book of Estimates for 1896, for "salaries, Indian Office," so as to provide in that office for two clerks of class 3 in lieu of two clerks of class 2, for reasons stated in said communication.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. HAMLIN, Acting Secretary.
THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 9, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to state that there are clerks in the land division of this office, which is really the law division of the office, whose duties require a high order of intelligence and learning in the law. Two of these clerks receive now but $1,400 each per annum. They are graduates in law, duly licensed members of the bar, and the work upon which they are respectively engaged is of an important and intricate character, and usually involves consideration of legal questions.

I know that their legal training and knowledge constitute a material aid to them in the discharge of their respective duties, and feel that the compensation paid them is not commensurate with the services required of and rendered by them.

I am constrained to the opinion that there are persons filling similar positions in other bureaus of this Department and in other Executive Departments of the Government of whom no greater qualifications are required and who are classed as law clerks and paid salaries from $1,800 to $2,500.

By reason of their familiarity with the customs, laws, and matters of fact peculiar to Indian affairs, which can be acquired only by years of actual experience, they are fairly and justly entitled to an increased compensation, and there is no prospect of securing such increase, at least for a long time to come, through the usual methods of promotion when vacancies occur in the higher grades.

I am forced to the conclusion that the only practicable way, apparently, of securing within reasonable time a portion at least of the further compensation fairly earned by them is by increased appropriations.

I therefore have the honor to recommend that Congress be asked through the regular channels to so amend the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill now before that body as to provide for the substitution of two clerks of class 3 in this office for two clerks of class 2, with the view of their promotion to the higher grade. This amendment would involve an increased expenditure of only $400 per year, which, though small and insignificant, will be of material assistance to them and a recognition in some measure of the valuable services rendered by them.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, January 12, 1895.

Respectfully forwarded through the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for the favorable consideration of Congress.

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over what is under the head of Pension Office, on pages 84, 85, and 86, without prejudice, to be returned to when we shall have completed the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: For the Commissioner of Patents, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner, who shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of Commissioner as may be assigned him by the Commissioner, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,250; two law clerks, at $2,000 each; three examiners in chief, at $3,000 each; examiner of interferences, $2,500; thirty-two principal examiners, at $2,500 each; thirty-four first assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; thirty-eight second assistant examiners, at $1,600 each; forty-three third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; fifty-two fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each; financial clerk, $2,000, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine; librarian, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; three assistant chiefs of division, at $1,900 each; five clerks of class 4, one of whom shall act as application clerk; one machinist, $1,600; six clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be translator of languages; fourteen clerks of class 2; fifty-one clerks of class 1, including one in lieu of a clerk detailed from Pension Office; one skilled laborer, $1,200; three skilled draftsmen, at $1,200 each; four draftsmen, at $1,000 each; one messenger and property clerk, $1,000; twenty-five permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; five model attendants, at $1,000 each; ten model attendants, at $800 each; sixty copyists, five of whom may be copyists of drawings; seventy-six copyists, at $750 each; three messengers; twenty assistant messengers; forty-five laborers, at $600 each; forty-five laborers, at $480 each; fifteen messenger boys, at $300 each; in all, $994,190.

For purchase of professional and scientific books and expenses of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments, $2,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all from line 15 on page 88 down to and including line 9 on page 89 be considered together, as a committee amendment is to be offered there which covers it entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 88 strike out all from line 15 to line 25, inclusive, and on page 89 strike out all down to line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For producing the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, quarterly, and annual indexes therefor, exclusive of expired patents, $99,655.

For producing copies of the weekly issues of patents, for producing copies of designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies of drawings and specifications; said work referred to in this and the preceding paragraph to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, and in the city of Washington, or within such a reasonable distance therefrom as the Secretary of the Interior may consider to be not disadvantageous to the Department; and the Commissioner of Patents, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to make contract for the work authorized in this and the preceding paragraphs upon competitive bids, after proper notice by publication: Provided, That the Public Printer may also make a proposal for doing said work: And provided further, That the entire work may be done at the Government Printing Office, if, in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing, or, if there be no joint committee, in the judgment of the Committee on Printing of either House, it shall be deemed to be for the best interest of the Government, $61,120.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I ask that that proposition be passed over. The committee reported a different proposition in the bill.

There was no objection, and the paragraph was passed over.
The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Commissioner of Railroads: For Commissioner, $4,500; bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant bookkeeper, $1,800; one clerk of class 1; one clerk, $1,000, in lieu of a clerk detailed from the Pension Office, and one assistant messenger; in all, $11,220.

For examination of books and accounts of certain subsidized railroad companies and inspecting roads, shops, machinery, and equipments thereof, $1,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph relating to the Patent Office was passed over. I ask that it be returned to for the consideration of the amendment that I offered. It is entirely satisfactory to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON], who asked that the paragraph be passed over. I ask that the amendment be considered as agreed to.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been read.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to hear the amendment read again. The amendment was again reported.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I wish to know what change this makes in the existing law.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Patents before the Committee on Appropriations asked to be permitted hereafter to have the Official Gazette printed and the photolithographing for it done by contract. Heretofore the work has been done partly by contract and partly out of an appropriation for printing for the Interior Department. It is estimated that if it can be done by contract there will be a saving of $13,000 annually by the Government. The committee passed upon that suggestion and provided for it in the bill, but since that it has been discovered that some of the annual indexes were not provided for in the appropriation recommended by the committee, and that in order to have all the work done by the Government it would be necessary to change the language of the provision. Under this amendment the Official Gazette can be printed wholly by contract or by the Public Printer, as may be deemed for the best interests of the Government, and it can be done all from one appropriation and not from two as heretofore. It can be done under this provision, not part at the Government Printing Office and part by contract, but all of it by contract or all of it at the Printing Office, as may be found best.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand that the right is reserved to the Commissioner of Patents to reject any bids that are made and have the work done by the Government if he thinks proper?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Yes; he can do it either way.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000; in all, $7,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 7, on page 94, by inserting, after the word "thousand" and before the word "dollars," the words "five hundred," so as to make the provision read: "For surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, $2,500." The law as it stands, I believe, gives this officer a salary of $3,000. If I am mistaken in that I ask the gentleman from Missouri to correct me. Now, when the law allows $3,000 it does not seem to me exactly right, in the case of an efficient officer with very great and important duties, to cut him down arbitrarily to $2,000 a year. The expenses of living in that Territory are much greater than they are here. A compensation of $2,000 is not more than equivalent to $1,200 or $1,500 here in living expenses alone, and this cutting-down process simply has the effect of making good officers work for almost nothing. The law giving this surveyor-general $3,000 a year, it seems to me that as little as this House can properly do is to appropriate $2,500, as proposed by my amendment, which is still $500 less than the legal salary. I think that on this subject I voice the sentiment of every man on the Public Lands Committee, for we all recognize that these officers are very poorly paid, and I insist that this committee ought to appropriate at least within $500 of the salary which the law allows for these services.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in this bill is exactly the amount in the current law, and I want to notify the committee now that if the salary of this surveyor-general is to be increased it will involve the increase of the salary of every surveyor-general in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How many of them are there in all?

Mr. DOCKERY. There are sixteen of them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, if you increased the whole sixteen it would add only $8,000 to this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Their salaries are fixed in the current law, fixed after consultation with the Senate. These gentlemen took their offices knowing what the salaries were, and in my judgment they are abundantly paid for the services which they render. The estimates submitted to Congress at the beginning of the session seemed on their face to bear the approval of the Secretary of the Interior for an increase of these salaries, and I addressed him a letter upon the subject. I have here his reply, which I will ask to have read, in which he disapproves of any increase of salaries for these officers above the amount in the current law.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call my colleague's attention to the fact that there are some fifteen of these surveyors-general.

Mr. DOCKERY. There are sixteen of them, and if you increase the salary of one you are bound, in justice, to increase the salaries of them all. I ask that the Secretary's letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 15, 1895.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 11th instant, making inquiry concerning the proposed increase of salaries of surveyors-general, as submitted in the estimates of this Department, I have to state that it was not my intention to ask for any increase in such salaries. I am of the opinion that the amounts fixed in the appropriation bill for the current year as a compensation to each is reasonable and sufficient. I therefore disapprove of any recommendation heretofore made for any apparent increase in such salaries.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,

Chairman Subcommittee in Charge of the Legislative,
Executive, and Judicial Bill, House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman says that the amount in this bill is the amount in "the current law," by which I want this committee to understand that he means the last appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the statute law of the United States provides that these men shall have $3,000 a year each, and, without any reason on the face of the earth that I can see, except one of economy, the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to cut these salaries down to $2,000 a year, and then the gentleman calls that "the current law."

Mr. DINGLEY. The compensation of these officers has been at that figure for many years.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Not many. It was cut down in 1893.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman from Maine suggests that this reduction has been made for many years, but I do not know that the lapse of time justifies a wrong. The longer this wrong has been perpetrated the greater shame it is for this House. We should either amend the law or give these men the salary that the law gives them.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does not this only prorate the salaries, reducing some and raising others, so as to put them on an equality?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No, sir. This is simply an arbitrary reduction. It is a reduction of the salary of every surveyor-general in the United States $1,000 a year, without warrant of law, the committee simply saying, "We will give you so much, and no more."

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. A reduction of each one?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Of each one.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In my Territory there is a very efficient surveyor-general, and, as I have already said, if you increase the appropriations in this bill so as to give each one of these officers an increase of $500, it would add only $8,000 to this bill, and the amount would still be $8,000 less than the general law provides.

They can scarcely live on these salaries, and certainly they should not be obliged to serve for $1,000 less per annum than the general law of the country gives them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the action of the Fifty-first Congress on this question of salaries of surveyors-general. The most recent statute on this subject—a statute passed after deliberation on the part of Congress—is that fixing the salaries of the surveyors-general of North and South Dakota at $2,000 each. This act, as I have stated, was passed by the Fifty-first Congress, and shows the last deliberate action of Congress upon the question of the compensation of surveyors-general.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why were not the other surveyors-general included?

Mr. DOCKERY. Simply because Congress was then legislating with reference to the newly admitted States of North and South Dakota. Doubtless if attention had been challenged to the point the committee would have reported in favor of fixing the salaries of the surveyors-general of the other Territories at the same figure. These men took these offices at $2,000 each—

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How?

Mr. DOCKERY. By appointment. They were anxious and eager to get these positions at $2,000. I have no doubt that they are efficient officers. At least they ought to be, as they are all Democrats, I suppose—at least they ought to be Democrats under a Democratic Administration. I do not know that they are.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. They are all Democrats.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad to hear it, because I believe that all positions outside of the civil service should be filled by Democrats without delay.

Now, these Democratic gentlemen—good and efficient officers, I have no doubt—hungered and thirsted after these offices at a salary of $2,000 each; yet they have scarcely warmed their seats before they are writing to the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Washington and to my good friend from Arizona asking that their salaries be increased. I have no criticism to make of the gentlemen who, in consequence of such appeals, are undertaking on this floor to secure an increase of salaries. They are doing exactly what I should do if I were representing any one of those States or Territories. I would present as best I could the claims of these gentlemen for increased salaries. Still, the fact remains that we must pass on these questions judiciously and fairly; and in so doing we must remember that the incumbents of these positions are anxious to retain them at the present salary.

Mr. PICKLER. Allow me to ask a question. Is it not the custom of the Appropriations Committee of this House to trample down all salaries, right or wrong?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; I think the gentleman can not have read this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, that is too broad a statement; but let me ask—

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the gentleman ought to amend his statement.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it not the custom of the Appropriations Committee to resist all increases, whatever may be the argument offered in their favor?

Mr. DOCKERY. All improper increases. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman from Missouri states that we who advocate this proposition have received letters from these surveyors-general asking for an increase of their salaries. I want to say in justification not of myself, but of the surveyor-general of my Territory, that I do not remember ever to have received a line from him asking an increase of his salary; but I have received letter after letter from him asking for an increase of service in his office. I have made my motion in justice to these officers rather than on account of any appeal coming from them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, when we reach during the consideration of this bill the clause providing the salary of the surveyor-general of Washington I desire to offer an amendment increasing the amount named in the bill $500. The bill proposes to pay this officer, as in these other cases, $2,000. Now, the surveyor-general of the State of Washington has duties that consume all his time. He has made an admirable officer, and, as has been stated by the gentleman from Arizona, the general law provides for a salary of $3,000. The change which has been made on the appropriation bills, cutting down these salaries to $2,000, was not made until March, 1893. There certainly is no justice whatever in cutting down the salary of this officer to $2,000. On the contrary, there is every reason, on account of the duties imposed and his conscientious discharge of them, why he should receive the full sum of $3,000. His expenses are very large in various ways, and he is rendering the State most excellent service. If the salaries of all these officers were raised to $2,500 it would require, as has been stated here, an additional appropriation of only $8,000, and it would be simply doing justice to these men.

Mr. SAYERS. Is not this officer now getting $2,000 a year?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. He is, while the general law provides that he shall receive $3,000; but Congress refuses to make the appropriation.

Mr. SAYERS. He has held this office some time?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. He has been holding it since the incoming of this Administration; but this change in the amount of salary allowed was not made until March, 1893.

The sum of $2,000 appropriated in this bill is not a sufficient compensation for the services rendered by this official to the people of this country, and especially to the people of the State of Washington, and it should be increased in common justice, in common fairness and decency, to at least $2,500 a year. I do not think that there ought to be quibbling in this manner to save a trifling expense like this and do an act of injustice.

Of course I understand the allusion made, that these men took the offices knowing what they were doing. Of course they knew what they were to receive; but when the law fixed their compensation at $3,000 they had reason to suppose that it would not be arbitrarily cut down to $2,000; and there is no reason that can be assigned for forcing them to accept the sum of $2,000 and perform the work of the office when $2,500 would be but a bare compensation.

I appreciate also the fact that there is some honor and credit attached to the holding of such offices, and men will hold on to them even when the compensation is inadequate. But that does not justify us in underpaying them for the services they render. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to make a brief response to the voluntary charge of the gentleman representing the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. DOCKERY], that we are invaded with letters from the surveyors-general with reference to the question of compensation. In my case I have received no such letter, word, or syllable from the surveyor-general of Wyoming.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the official must be satisfied with the amount of compensation fixed.

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Nevertheless, from my own knowledge of the facts, I had it in mind to move an amendment in behalf of the surveyor-general of Wyoming, when we reach that provision, similar to that offered by the gentleman from Arizona, because the situation in that case is similar to the one he describes, and I shall favor, therefore, the amendment he offers and in all other cases of surveyors-general increasing their compensation at least $500 above the amount fixed in this bill.

It appears to me rather a strange thing, when members of the committee plead that they are giving the legal amount of appropriation in this case, that a member of their own committee, in the RECORD, on page 2212, has published a table of salaries carried by the bill which are less than the statutory requirements. I refer to the table published by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky a few days ago. You will find in that table that the legal limit of the salary of the surveyor-general of Wyoming is $3,000, while the bill proposes but $2,000. As far as it may be ground for argument, we are perfectly willing to grant that the appropriation of last year was $3,000. That is true. But during a panic, during a time of distress and financial stringency, while that argument might apply, it can not apply now when the Secretary of the Treasury and his friends here on this floor, who represent his views on financial questions, report that there is a surplus or will be a surplus in the Treasury soon, and hence that argument falls to the ground.

Another word in reference to this question of compensation. The surveyor-general is the superintending officer over technical work. The general rule in all the Departments, with reference to salaries, is that the superintending officer shall have at least as much salary for the work he does as his subordinates and the technical workers whose work must pass under his inspection; but in the case of the surveyors-general it is well known to gentlemen here that the surveyors in the field will make from $2,000 to $10,000 a year, and yet when you come to the officer in charge, the superintending officer, you allow him but $2,000 compensation. I say, then, that it is only fair that we should demand an increase in all of these cases.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the floor very briefly for the purpose of concurring most heartily in the remarks of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and to give notice that I shall offer an amendment increasing the salary of the surveyor-general of Montana, when that question comes up, to the same amount proposed for the surveyor-general of Arizona.

I am not going to occupy but a moment or two, as I am sure the committee is impatient; but it does seem to me that if the Congress of the United States, in the face of existing law providing $3,000 per annum as compensation of these surveyors-general, assumes the right to arbitrarily and deliberately appropriate only two-thirds of that sum, then it would have the same right to pursue the same course with reference to any other salary. They would have the same right to cut the salary of members of Congress and provide that they shall have $3,000 or $4,000, as to reduce the salary of surveyors-general.

Mr. LOUD. There is not much danger in doing that, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN. I know there is not much danger, especially as long as we are here voting upon it ourselves.

These gentlemen who occupy the positions of surveyors-general are required to be skilled in their business and they ought to have the statutory amount. The gentleman refers to the acts of the Fifty-first Congress. I do not care what that Congress did or did not. The question is, did it do right? If so, it is well enough for this Congress to ratify it and make it general and let it be applied to all alike, North and South Dakota, as well as the other States, putting all of them on the same footing, and if you reduce one to $2,000 let all be reduced. I hold that the salary ought to be increased, that the compensation is insufficient, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. The able and accomplished gentleman from Montana ought to be satisfied with something less than the entire earth. We gave him an assay office this morning.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me say that no gentleman on the floor has been more courteous and generous than the gentleman in charge of this bill. I do not find any fault with him, nor do I charge parsimony in the preparation of the bill. But I think, having a knowledge of the facts, that these surveyors-general ought to have $3,000 a year, and in the case of Montana I will make a motion to that effect.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Arizona, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 54.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will order tellers—

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000; in all, $7,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move to amend line 8, page 94, by inserting the words "five hundred dollars;" so that it will read "for the clerks in his office, $5,500."

The amendment was read by the Clerk, as follows:

On page 94, after the word "thousand" in line 8, insert the words "five hundred."

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will not press that amendment. After a somewhat extended conference with the Senate last year we put up the amounts for clerk hire very considerably, and this is exactly the amount provided for the current year.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. An appeal from my friend from Missouri strikes me forcefully, and nothing in the world except the sufferings of the people whom I attempt to represent here would prompt me to press this.

Mr. DOCKERY. We gave you an increase of $2,000 on this item last year.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know that, and I do not believe that the conditions which exist in my district apply so strongly to another one of these cases. The condition is simply this: We are behind. The $2,000 additional enabled our surveyor-general to get along a great deal better, and under it he caught up to within some sixteen months of the work which had been behind in his office. These surveys are going on. People are making applications for patents for their lands. The field notes are placed in the surveyor-general's office and must lie on the table there for sixteen months for the want of clerical assistance. This means that the patents must be withheld for that length of time. The men who make the surveys in the field are many of them borrowing the money with which to do it, and they are kept out of their money and are compelled to pay 2 per cent a month for it. The result is now that when a survey is made the surveyor loses nearly all the money he attempts to make. The field notes are left in the office for sixteen months before they are sent to the Department for final settlement, and it takes about two years to get a patent after the survey is made.

Mr. DOCKERY. It will not do to increase these amounts. We gave the gentleman $2,000 additional last year, and we give him that same $2,000 again this year.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Montana, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $10,000; in all, $12,000.

Mr. HARTMAN. On page 95, line 21, after the word "thousand," I move to insert the words "five hundred," making that increase in the salary.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 95, line 21, after the word "thousand," insert the words "five hundred dollars."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARTMAN. On line 23, page 95, I desire to move to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "eleven."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill, or anyone else who knows, why it is that $10,000 were given for clerk hire in the office of the surveyor-general of Montana, while $5,000 are given for clerk hire in the office of the surveyor-general of Arizona? I have no doubt that the gentleman's amendment ought to carry, and I do not wish to be understood as in any way opposing it, but I should like to know about the matter. Did these figures come from the Senate or did they originate in the House?

Mr. DOCKERY. This amount is given simply because the Department made a larger estimate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How much did they estimate?

Mr. DOCKERY. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How much did they estimate for Arizona?

Mr. DOCKERY. Ten thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And we got how much?

Mr. DOCKERY. Seven thousand dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, Mr. Chairman, this appropriation has been cut down about a third, as I understand it, from the amount recommended, from the amount which the Department say ought to be given. The Department have said so, time and time again, to this House. They have estimated $1,000 for Montana; and while my amendment has been beaten, I know the conditions of this country well enough to insist that the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] should be carried. If the Department have estimated $15,000 for that office, I know it is needed. In every one of these cases the trouble is that in attempting to save a few dollars to the Treasury, the people on the other side of the mountains are absolutely ground to the dust. Why, these surveys have got to be made. This work must be done some time; and why put it off from year to year, and leave the work dragging along, and keep up the necessity for maintaining the office of surveyor-general for years and years in the future?

It is false economy to attempt to cut them down to the niggardly sums here given, and the full amount recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, especially for the clerks for these offices, ought to be given him, and thereby give what the public land offices need. I hope the amendment of the gentleman will carry.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico, $2,000; and for clerks in his office, $7,000; in all, $9,000.

For fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 96, line 11, strike out $2,000 and insert $2,500.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the surveyor-general of New Mexico ought to be made an exception to this rule, for the reason that the law creating the United States Court of Private Land Claims for certain States and Territories increased the duties and responsibilities for the surveyor-general of New Mexico tenfold. Under and by virtue of that law he is required to approve and plat the surveys of over 5,000 private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico. That has materially increased the duties and responsibilities of that official, and for that reason I hope the committee will restore his pay to $2,500.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office $5,000; in all, $7,000.

For fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 96, after the word "thousand," insert the words "five hundred;" so as to read: For surveyor-general of Oregon, $2,500.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, the very competent gentleman who now occupies the position of surveyor-general from my State is different from myself as to his political views, being an appointee of the present Administration; but I must take this position in his case as I have heretofore in the cases of the surveyors-general who were of my own political faith, upon the ground of merit alone. I want to say this to the committee, looking to the difficulties which now surround the services of the surveyor-general, that they are tenfold greater than they ever have been before, owing to the fact that the class of lands which were easy to survey, the plains and level lands of the West, are now largely completed so far as surveys are concerned, and in the surveys which now remain are confined to the mountainous in character, being largely through dense timber and brush; and therefore they are difficult and complicated to survey.

Then, again, there is this to be said to the committee, that since the adoption of public surveys by surveying contracts, a great part of the work that heretofore involved the Interior Department now devolves on the surveyors-general of the different States, making the amount of work they are now doing twofold what it formerly was. Then it is necessary for the surveyor-general to supervise, to inspect, and to examine the surveys under two or three contracts as to the same lands, thereby adding very materially not only to his labors, but also including the complications which surround the public surveys. Now, as to my State, there are at least 30,000,000 acres of public land yet to be surveyed.

There is this further to be said, that there is a greater demand for the surveys of the remaining portion of the public lands in the West than ever before, because of the ceaseless tide of immigration that is sweeping all over that portion of the unsurveyed public land system. There is greater necessity for having additional clerical assistance for the surveyor-general, and also for having men who are competent, who have had sufficient experience to take charge of this great region which is to be surveyed. Therefore it occurs to me that we should fix the salary here at such a figure as to offer inducements to the men actually most capable known to the surveying profession of the United States, in order that we may avoid the great number of errors which are constantly arising in the surveyor-general's office, which in turn come before the Interior Department, thereby not only increasing the expense of the party for the survey, but also delaying those who are entitled to a title on the public lands from getting that which they have earned of the public lands of the United States.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this committee be generous, be just, as well as somewhat more enlightened than we have been heretofore in regard to the survey of the public lands.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HERMANN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you expect there will be any change in the efficiency of these officials if the salaries are increased.

Mr. HERMANN. I may say to my friend that I am looking at the question entirely aside from partisanship or patronage.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman to say that he wanted this increase in the salary in order to get the best talent.

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you expect there will be any change in the talent if you get the increase of this salary?

Mr. HERMANN. I will say to my friend that I fear that men of ability enough to occupy these places will leave their positions unless the salary is made sufficient, and men of less ability will take their places.

Mr. COOMBS. Oh, no; you need not be afraid of that.

Mr. PAYNE. Did you ever know of any of these gentlemen occupying these offices resigning? [Laughter.]

Mr. HERMANN. I have occasionally, in my life.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Washington, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $0,500; in all, $11,500.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 97, line 14, after the word "thousand," insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read: "For surveyor-general of Washington, $2,500."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read in connection with this amendment an extract from the estimates of the surveyor-general of Washington.

The extract was read, as follows:

Surveyor-general's salary	$3,000
Salaries of clerks in his office	13,300
	16,300
For rent of office, books, stationery, building plats and field notes, lights, fuel, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses	2,000
Total	18,300

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why it is that the allowance for Montana is $12,000, while it is only $11,500 for Washington. It certainly must be well known to that gentleman and the Committee on Appropriations that the public-land surveys which are being carried on in Washington are largely in excess of those that are being carried on in Montana, and therefore I would like to know the reason for the difference between the allowances. I wish to ask further whether this is not a cutting down of former appropriations for these purposes, apart from the salary of the surveyor-general.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is a difference in the estimates. In 1891 your State got for these purposes $10,000; in 1892, $10,000; in 1893, $10,000; in 1894, $10,500. This bill gives you $11,500, which is a thousand dollars more than you got last year or than you ever got before.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I thought that the appropriation last year was $12,000, the same as that for Montana.

Mr. DOCKERY. No, sir.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Well, I may be mistaken about that; but, Mr. Chairman, I desire to insist upon my amendment for all the reasons that have been stated here in support of the amendments which have been offered in reference to the surveyors-general of other States.

Mr. DOCKERY. And for other reasons to be assigned later on. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Wyoming, $2,000; and for clerks in his office, $4,800; in all, $6,800.

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 97, line 20, after "two thousand," insert "five hundred;" in line 21, strike out "four," before "thousand," and insert "six;" and in line 22, strike out "six" and insert "eight."

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that with all the efforts we have put forth here for the purpose of increasing to a reasonable degree the salaries of some of these Western officers, we are met with constant defeat. I have voted for all the amendments that have been offered by gentlemen representing Western constituencies, and I desire now to call special attention to the situation in Wyoming. With a mountainous and unsettled region where it is difficult to carry on surveys, we have been cut down by this bill to $5,800, while Montana on the north gets $10,000, Idaho on the west $10,000 or $11,000, and Colorado on the south $10,000. Those are the allowances made in these other cases, but when it comes to Wyoming, where the need is certainly not less than in any of these other States, you cut us down to one-half the amount.

Now, I am not asking this committee to increase the appropriation for Wyoming even up to the amount given to Montana, or Idaho, or Colorado, which surround us and which have only equivalent work, although I think that would be only fair; but I do ask that you will give us at least $2,000 more than the amount in the bill, making the appropriation for Wyoming $8,000 as against ten or eleven thousand for these other States. We will try to be satisfied with that very moderate increase, and we ask our Democratic friends here to consider this question on its merits, to look at the equities of the case, and not always to vote pro forma for the report of the Committee on Appropriations. I ask you gentlemen to give this Western country the fair play which it deserves. I ask for a vote on this amendment which I have offered.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming, the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. COFFEEN of Wyoming. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, yeas 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office First Assistant Postmaster-General: For First Assistant Postmaster-General, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; superintendent of salary and allowance division, $2,700; superintendent of post-office supplies, $2,000; superintendent of free delivery, $3,000; assistant superintendent of free delivery, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; nine clerks of class 3; eight clerks of class 2; nine clerks of class 1; eight clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $900 each; six assistant messengers; nine laborers; two pages, at $380 each; Superintendent of the Money-Order System, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,000; six clerks of class 4; eight clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; six clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; one engineer, $1,000; one assistant engineer for additional building for Auditor for the Post-Office Department, $1,000; one fireman; four watchmen; one conductor of elevator, $720; four charwomen; one female laborer, $490; and ten laborers; Superintendent of Dead-Letter Office, $2,500; one clerk of class 4, who shall be chief clerk; one clerk of class 3; three clerks of class 2; ten clerks of class 1; twenty-four clerks of class 1; twenty-eight clerks, at $1,000 each; thirty-three clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; six laborers; four female laborers, at $480 each; in all, $283,300.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the salary of the superintendent of the salary and allowance division is made $2,700. I would like to ask whether that is not an increase of $500.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is.

Mr. LOUD. While this amount is only $500, I think we ought to take into consideration the direction in which we are drifting in the Post-Office Department. The Democratic party rode into power some years ago on the cry of retrenchment and reform, and it did practice for a time, especially while the Republican party was in charge of the general administration, the doctrines upon which it had got into power. But this fact now confronts us as regards the Post-Office Department, that its expenditures have been increasing during the last two years in a greater ratio than ever before in our history, and this in the face of a constant decrease in the receipts of that Department. Now, it seems to me that we ought to practice "economy and reform" all along the line. I have seen the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] in charge of this bill work himself almost into a passion in denouncing the extravagance of the "billion-dollar Congress," and other gentlemen here have indulged in the same kind of denunciation. Now, I am willing to admit that the office of chief of the salary and allowance division in the Post-Office Department is one of the most important in the Government service.

The salary may not be too large, but I know that from this office emanates much of the increase of expenditures in the Post-Office Department. If the salary of this officer should have been $2,700 per year that fact should have been demonstrated to Congress long ago.

A gentleman near me asks whether Mr. Scott still holds this position. I understand he does not. I am free to say on the floor of this House that I never had any particular or special admiration for the gentleman referred to because I was never able to get any recommendations of appropriations from him. I beg to suggest to the House that as soon as Mr. Scott was removed and a good Democrat put in his place a recommendation of this increase of salary is brought before this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to be very persistent in regard to this matter. I have simply desired to bring it to the attention of the House.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, in relation to the increased compensation of this officer, the committee looked into the matter very carefully. We were anxious not to increase the expenditures one dollar beyond what was necessary. But after a full investigation of the matter the committee decided to meet partially the views of the Postmaster-General in this respect. The gentleman who had charge of this department, which is a very important one, involving a vast amount of detail, is a very capable officer, highly appreciated on account of his executive ability, a man who for the performance of a similar class of work in the private walks of life, in any commercial enterprise or in any railroad corporation, would command a salary of $5,000 a year.

As I have said, the committee was anxious that there should be no unnecessary increase of expenses; but after looking into the matter two or three times the increase was finally consented to, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will sustain it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. LOUD. After the able exposition of this case by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] I withdraw the amendment. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury: For Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,500; assistant solicitor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $23,680.
